

CORNELL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

GIFT OF

PROFESSOR

HOWARD B. ADELMANN

UNDERGRADUATE

CORNELL UNIVERSITY LIBRARY

3 1924 057 415 485

Cornell University Library

The original of this book is in the Cornell University Library.

There are no known copyright restrictions in the United States on the use of the text.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND

FROM

THE FALL OF WOLSEY
TO THE DEFEAT OF THE SPANISH ARMADA.

VOLUME XII.

ELIZABETH.

HISTORY OF ENGLAND.

FROM

THE FALL OF WOLSEY

TO

THE DEFEAT OF THE SPANISH ARMADA.

BY

JAMES ANTHONY FROUDE, M.A.

LATE FELLOW OF EXETER COLLEGE, OXFORD.

VOLUME XII.

ELIZABETH.

LONDON:

LONGMANS, GREEN, AND .CO.

1875.

	PAGE
Doubts of obtaining the assent of France	51
Elizabeth's secret Negotiations	53
Leicester accepts the Government of the Provinces ..	55
Elizabeth's Neglect of her Troops	55
Her Indignation with Leicester	58
Her Fury with Davison	59
Her Interview with Sir Thomas Shirley	63
Burghley threatens to resign	64
Effect of Drake's Successes	68
Mischievous Influence of Sir James Crofts .	68
Anxiety of Walsingham	70
Bodenham and Graigny examined	71
Elizabeth is forced to disown them	74
She renews the Negotiations for the Treaty ..	75
De Looe and the Prince of Parma	76
Alarm of Lord Buckhurst	78
Sir William Stanley	79
Loss of Grave and Venloo	81
Leicester remonstrates with Elizabeth	82
His Incapacity	84
Action at Zutphen	87
Death of Sir Philip Sidney	87
Leicester's Return	89
Sir John Perrot on Ireland	90
Ecclesiastical Disorganization	91
Devon and Somerset Families settle in Ireland ..	93
The Jesuits once more	94
Rebellion of the Connaught Burkes	95
Defeat of the Scots on the Moy	97

CHAPTER LXIX.

EXECUTION OF MARY STUART.

	PAGE
The two Futures open to Europe	99
Walsingham's secret Correspondence	102
Devotion of the Jesuits to Spain	103
Loyalty of other Catholics	104
Difficulty of knowing Catholic Secrets	106
Plan to intercept the Correspondence of the Queen of Scots	106
The Giffords	109
Mary Stuart is moved to Chartley Manor	113
Her Letters are deciphered and read	115
Letters of Thomas Morgan	121
Plot to Assassinate Elizabeth	124
Anthony Babington and John Ballard	125
Confederacy among the Catholic Nobles and Gentry ..	126
Babington's Accomplices and Plans	129
Morgan informs the Queen of Scots of the Conspiracy	131
League between Elizabeth and James	133
Mary disinherits James	135
Babington explains his Plot to Mary Stuart ..	137
Her Reply	140
Its Authenticity discussed	142
Excuses for her Conduct	147
And for Elizabeth's	148
Mary Stuart's unchanged Character	152
Folly of the Conspirators	153
The Arrests	155
Mary Stuart taken to Tixall	160
Seizure of her Papers	161
She returns to Chartley	162
Panic in England	164
Appeal of Elizabeth to Mary Stuart	168

	PAGE
Removal to Fotheringay	169
Trial of Babington	171
Executions	174
What to do with the Queen of Scots	176
Disposition of James	177
Examination of Letters	179
Resolution of the Peers	180
Trial of the Queen of Scots at Fotheringay	182
Technical Difficulties	185
She consents to appear	188
Her Address	191
The Court adjourns	195
She is declared Guilty	196
Meeting of Parliament	197
Petition of the two Houses	198
Reply of Elizabeth	200
Interposition of France and Scotland	203
Mission of the Master of Gray and Sir Robert Melville	204
M. Belière sent from Paris	205
Interview with the Queen	207
Uncertainty as to the real Disposition of France	211
Catholic Conspiracy in Scotland	212
Publication of the Sentence in London	214
Second ineffectual Protest of Belière	216
Dismissal of Gray and Melville	218
Death or Imprisonment for Life	220
Message from Elizabeth to the Queen of Scots	220
Removal of her Cloth of State	222
Resolution to die a Martyr	223
Letters to Friends	224
Contrast of the two Queens	225
Elizabeth's treatment of Walsingham	226
Pretended Conspiracy at the house of the French Am- bassador	228
Critical Condition of Public Feeling	233

CONTENTS.

ix

	PAGE
Betrayal of Deventer by Sir William Stanley ..	235
The Queen signs the Warrant for the Execution ..	236
Ambiguous Conversation with Davison ..	237
Suggestion to Sir Amyas Paulet to kill the Queen of Scots privately	238
Davison consults the Council	241
They agree to execute the Warrant	242
Paulet's Answer, and Elizabeth's Anger	243
Secretary Beale carries the Warrant to Fotheringay ..	245
The Queen of Scots learns that she is to die ..	245
Preparations for the End	246
The Morning of the Execution	249
Arrangement of the Hall	251
On the Scaffold	251
Death	255
Political Effects	258

CHAPTER LXX.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR PEACE WITH SPAIN.

Responsibility of Sovereigns	261
The Execution known in London	262
Reception of the News by Elizabeth	262
Affected indignation with Davison and Burghley ..	263
She protests her Innocence	264
Emotion in Scotland	266
And in France	267
Disgrace of Burghley	268
Prosecution of Davison	270
Sentence of the Commissioners	271
Punishment of Elizabeth	276
European Politics	277
Sextus V. and Count Olivarez	278

	PAGE
Philip intends to claim the English Succession ..	280
The Bishop of Dunblane	281
Scotch and Spanish Factions among the English Catholics	282
Allen in favour of Philip	282
Scotch Sympathies in the Sacred College	284
Disorders in the Low Countries	288
Fresh Expedition of Sir Francis Drake	291
Burning of Galleons in Cadiz	292
Meditated Attack on Lisbon	295
Capture of the San Philip	297
Elizabeth persists in seeking Peace	298
The Religious Liberties of the States to be betrayed ..	299
Siege and Capture of Sluys	300
Neglect and Misery of the English Troops	302
The States demand the Restoration of the Cautionary Towns	307
Commission appointed to treat for Peace	309
Indignation of the States	311
The Civil War in France	312
Henry III. and the League	313
Jealousies between France and Spain	317
Intrigues at Rome	318
Spanish Preparations for War	319
The Spanish Fleet prepares to sail for England ..	321
Sufferings of Parma's Army at Dunkirk	323
Financial Embarrassments	326
Death of Santa Cruz	327
The English Commissioners at Ostend	328
Parma's views about the Peace	330
And on the possible result of the Invasion	333
Philip determines to persevere	335
Depreciation of Landed Property in England ..	337
Collapse of the Treaty	340
Results of Elizabeth's Policy	344

	PAGE
The Huguenot Army dispersed for want of Money ..	345
Ineffectual appeals to the Queen	346
Guise, supported by Philip, occupies Paris ..	348
The day of the Barricades, and Flight of the King ..	349
The Success is too late to be of use to Spain ..	350

CHAPTER LXXI.

THE ARMADA.

Supposed Weakness of England	351
Preparations for Defence	353
The English Navy	356
Its annual Cost	359
Wages of Seamen	360
Condition of the Fleet in 1588	362
False Economy of the Queen	366
Distress of Lord Howard	366
Ill-treatment of the Sailors	369
The Fleet collects	371
Elizabeth's Obstinacy	373
Sour Beer and short Supplies	374
The Armada	376
Medina Sidonia, and other Officers in command ..	380
Allen made Cardinal and Archbishop of Canterbury ..	382
His Pastoral Letter against Elizabeth	383
Sailing of the Armada	387
Its first Misfortunes	390
Arming of England	391
Leicester made Commander-in-chief	392
Superior sailing of the English Ships	394
Action off Plymouth	394
Destruction of Galleons	397

	PAGE
Enthusiasm of the young English Gentry	402
Fight off the Isle of Wight	403
The two Fleets reach Calais Roads	406
Preparations of the Prince of Parma	408
Want of Food and Powder in the English Fleet	410
Fire-ships sent upon the Armada	412
Action in the Straits of Dover	415
Terrible Defeat of the Spaniards	417
Flight of the Armada	419
Shattered condition of the Ships	420
Council of War	424
Resolution to pass round Ireland	425
The English Fleet return to the Thames	429
Frightful Mortality among the Seamen	431
Neglect of the Government	432
Behaviour of Elizabeth	434
Death and Character of Leicester	437
The Armada at the North of Scotland	439
Eleven Days of Storm	440
Sidonia, with fifty-two Ships, passes Cape Clear	442
Fate of the remainder	442
Martinez de Recalde, with two others, follow Sidonia	444
Wreck in Blasket Sound	446
Wrecks in Clare, Arran, and Clew Bay	447
All Prisoners executed	448
Scene on the Coast of Sligo	451
Spaniards murdered by the Irish	452
Alonzo da Leyva	454
Wreck at Dunluce	459
Arrival of Sidonia in Spain	460
Condition of the Ships	461
Scene at St Sebastian	463
Reception of the News by Philip	464
Failure of Parma at Bergen-op-Zoom	466
Gratification of the Pope and the Cardinals	467

CONTENTS.

xiii
PAGE

Sextus and Olivarez	469
Disgrace of Allen	470
Murder of the Duke of Guise	474

CONCLUSION.

Reasons for concluding the History at this point	475
Effects of the Destruction of the Armada	476
The English Catholics become Anglicans	477
Reflections on the History of the two Religions	479
Superstition and Love of Truth	481
Government by Majorities and the right of the Strong					482
Later Policy of Elizabeth	484
Internal Administration	485
Enforcement of the Act of Uniformity	488
Relations between Elizabeth and the Puritans	489
English Episcopacy	490
Toleration or Uniformity — Contrasts between France and England	492
Development of Anglicanism	494
'Martin Marprelate'	495
The Double Character of the English Church	496
Character and Position of the Bishops	499
Effects of the Retention of the Catholic Element	501
Death of Elizabeth	503
Hard usage of Sovereigns by History	504
General Reflections	505
INDEX	512

CHAPTER LXVIII.

THE EARL OF LEICESTER IN THE LOW COUNTRIES.

IF the best informed statesman in Europe had been asked, in the middle of the year 1585, whether in his opinion 'the enterprize of England' would ever be carried into effect, he would have hesitated to answer. Many times it appeared to be coming; but, again, always it had faded into distance, and the eagerness with which excuses were caught at for delay, showed that there were obstacles of no ordinary kind which prevented the parties interested from combining. The conduct of the invasion necessarily depended upon Spain. If the Duke of Guise was to be the instrument, the means would have to be supplied by Philip; while Philip, if he was to bear the expense, intended to secure the reward; and, though content that Mary Stuart should take the place, he meant the reversion after her to fall to himself or to some one of his own nomination. The heresy of the King of Scots was the plea which he was prepared to allege. His real motive was probably the same which had made him originally prefer the claims of Elizabeth to those of her cousin of Scotland—an unwillingness that the crown of England should pass to a sovereign so intimately connected with France. At any rate, it is perfectly certain that if he meddled with Elizabeth he had determined that James should not succeed his mother ;¹ and this resolution had aggravated every other difficulty which had so long stood in the way of any active movement. The Jesuits were Spanish ; but the Duke of Guise stood by his kinsman ; Sextus V. was not anxious to see Philip's greatness enhanced further ; while the Catholic laity of England, willing as they might be for a religious revolution, did not care to buy it at the price of independence. Thus, on the whole, Spanish statesmen were now inclined to finish

¹ A passage in a letter from him to Count Olivarez, his minister at Rome, leaves no doubt whatever upon this point. 'El haberle enterado,' he writes, speaking of the Pope, 'del inconveniente que seria que el Rey de Escocia, siendo herege, sucediese en Inglaterra, siempre que se trate de la empresa, conviene poner los ojos en persona Catolica, que, excluyendo él de Escocia, entrase en su lugar y que quede Su Santidad en esta opinion, prendado á conformarse, en esto de sucesor de la Reyna de Escocia, con lo que á mí me pareciere, y siempre que venga ocasion de confirmarle en lo uno y lo otro, lo hareis de procurar.

'Tan bien fué muy acertado el omitir por agora la particularidad de la persona que os apunte para esta sucesion, y asi visto lo que decis, parece que será bien que sigais este camino. Solo hareis de estar advertido que si el Papa con su zelo y resolucion viniese á tratar alguna vez de otro diferente sucesor, le acordeis antes que se embarque y aficione al nuevo concepto, que está prendado conmigo de seguir mi parecer en esto, y que vos me lo escrivisteis por su orden, procurando por aqui que no se nos salga de aquello ; y porque este punto y él de arriba importa que no se despintese ni entre el Papa en otras traças, ora la empresa se hubiese de apresurar ó dilatar, he querido tratar dellos en primer lugar y encargaros el cuydado de procurar que no haya mudança.'—El Rey al Conde de Olivarez, 20 de Julio, 1586 : MSS. Simancas.

with the Low Countries, before calling Elizabeth to a reckoning, and as little had they made up their minds that the reckoning need necessarily be a violent one.¹ It was true that English volunteers had served in thousands in the Low Countries, that English subscriptions had paid their expenses, that the insurrection had been kept alive by English treasure. There were the piracies of Drake to be atoned for, the expulsion of Mendoza, and the persecution of the Catholics, of whom Philip was the natural protector. Yet, on the other side, English Catholic volunteers had fought under Don John. The supplies to the Spanish army, which in the desolated Provinces would otherwise have starved, mainly came from England. If Elizabeth had been in communication with the Prince of Orange, so had Philip with disaffected English and Irish. He aquel Reyno no es tanto en Franceses y otros que no pesen mas con ellos otros respectos; que estoy mas obligado á acabar de asegurar mis Estados y cosas proprias que á emprender las ajenas, que para mi y mis reynos y subditos basta echar tales armadas en la mar que la limpien de corsarios y amparen lo de las Indias y aseguren la navegacion de las flotas que van y vienen, y el tesoro que de allá se trae,’ &c. ‘Que tras esto sé que Ingleses mueren por concertarse conmigo, y lo tientan por muchas partes y ofrecen hacer emiendas,’ &c.—El Rey al Conde de Olivarez, 20 de Julio, 1586: MSS. Simancas.

¹ This too Philip directed Olivarez to impress on Sextus. His Holiness supposed that for its own sake Spain would be forced into war with England; but this, Philip said, was wholly a mistake.

‘Conviene sacar á Su Santidad,’ he continues, ‘del engaño que padece en pensar que por los robos y atrevimientos de Ingleses haré yo la empresa de mio. Habeis de darle entender que esos son discursos de allá hechos por los que se hallan lejos, y no han de poner manos en la obra; que yo sé lo que me conviene y conozco el sitio de Inglaterra, y entiendo lo que á muchos pesaría de verla mudar estado, porque el zelo de la Christianidad y de ver Catolico

had not forgotten his employment of Chapin Vitelli or his own expulsion of Doctor Man, or, more than all, the long-continued cruelties of the Inquisition to English seamen, contrary to express stipulation. The affronts on both sides had been equal; while the commercial relations between the two countries were growing in importance, and their traditionary respect for each other had not yet wholly died away. Flanders might be conquered—yet Elizabeth's alliance might still be of importance to Philip. He was careful to let the Pope know that she had as yet done nothing which he could not pardon; and if he could induce her to assist him, as more than once she had been on the point of doing, in repressing the rebellion of the States, he had really made up his mind to abandon all thoughts of troubling her.¹

England was no longer unprepared to meet an invasion: over the whole country, in towns and villages, the people had been drilled and trained; depôts of arms at convenient distances were placed in charge of officers whose fidelity could be relied on. The Catholics, still the numerical majority, were opposed to a war which they thought unnecessary, in behalf of foreign Protestants; but, with the cloud over the succession, the greater number of them were as determined to stand by their own sovereign against a Spanish invasion as they were unwilling to interfere between Philip and his own subjects.¹ Philip, on the other hand, descended from John of Gaunt and once already titular King of England, the nearest Catholic in blood after Mary Stuart, had no wish to provoke gratuitously the hostility of a people to whom he might again offer himself as sovereign, while his sister-in-law was equally

¹ 'Como pasado esta ocasion y pacificado V. M^a con aquella Reyna, que len eternalmente proscriptas las cosas de Inglaterra para no poderse pensar en ello.'—Note of a conversation between Count Olivarez and Sextus V., February 4, 1586: MSS. Simancas.

¹ A State paper of this date, by an unknown hand, contains curious evidence of the temper of the English people, and of the admiration which was evidently felt for the Spaniards.

‘The people of this realm have been always found to be a most valiant nation. To them only is given by God’s special gifts the use of the bow; also they have been always, and at this present be, a free people such as in few or no other realms ye shall find the like; by the which freedom without all doubt is maintained the great and valiant courage of the said people and nation. The lack thereof must needs breed a heartless and wretched people, and what may follow of such a thing all wise men do see it.

‘With this people only the Kings of this realm have always honourably defended the same, and have made their wars in foreign realms and done valiant acts there, and made great conquests, the memory of which cannot be blotted out in time. Therefore the people that be valiant and do esteem their honour, do assure their faithful services to their princes, as by experience is seen by a nation I need not rehearse.

‘They be well known which stand so much upon their honour and reputation to do well that by no means they can be altered from it, whereby their King is most assured of their fidelities towards him, as doth well appear by the great and honourable charges committed to them in many and sundry regions far distant from him; and how faithfully they deal is most manifest, and the only and special cause of their fidelity is by their great estimation of their honesty and reputation, for the maintenance of which they are always ready to pledge their lives rather than lose any jot thereof. So it must needs follow that base-minded men be most easily won from their duty to their Prince and their country. There is no assurance of them in field or hold. They are always ready for rebellion, forgetting their duty to their Prince and Commonwealth.’—Certain things to be considered for the special wealth of England, December, 1585: MSS. Domestic.

averse to a quarrel not forced upon her in self-defence, for the interests of what was called religion.

Religion to Elizabeth was a very simple matter. She had a common-sense perception of the relations between the world and its Maker. The detailed articles of creeds, sacramental mysteries, and other 'schemes of salvation,' served to vary the vocabulary of her oaths, but were in themselves profoundly dubious to her. She despised the bigotry which insisted on precision of words, only less than the exaggerated scrupulousness which made men willing to die for an opinion. For the fools who required theological formulas, the law provided a ritual respectable by antiquity, and she cared but little for the shades which distinguished Anglicanism from Catholicism, so long as there was no Inquisition to pry into men's consciences. The fiery indignation against falsehood, the fear of turning the service of God into a lie for personal or political convenience, she did not understand; the service of God, in the technical sense, she perhaps considered an insoluble problem; and whether men went to mass or went to church, so long as they fulfilled their duties as citizens, she regarded merely as a variety of form. She prohibited mass in England because it would have led to disturbance. For the same reason, had she been Queen of France, she would have prohibited the Huguenots' sermons. Circumstances rather than preference had placed her originally on the side of the Protestants. Her connection with them was political, and it was only when she needed their assistance that she acknowledged a community of creed. With the quarrel with Rome she was identified from her birth. Her mother's marriage had caused the rupture, and the reunion under her sister had been accompanied by her own disgrace. But with the creed as distinct from the Papal Supremacy she had no quarrel at all. Mass and Breviary, accompanied by national independence, and liberty not of worship but of conscience, would have suited best with her own tastes. She had established the nearest approach to it which her position would allow, and she had no more pleasure than Philip himself in seeing the peace of Europe disturbed, that the priest at the altar might be superseded by a Calvinist in the pulpit.

Thus it was that she had been so indifferent to the revolted Netherlands, and that her position towards them was so curiously complicated. She had wished to see them Spanish but self-governed. The religious reformation irritated her as needlessly perplexing the relations between them and their Sovereign. To Holland and Zealand, on the other hand, the religious reformation was the all in all. To have done with lies, to be able to serve God with honesty and sincerity, and not with effete hypocrisies, for this and only this they had begun and continued their desperate struggle. They could have had peace at any moment, peace, with every security that they could desire, would they have conceded this single point: but they would sooner have buried their country in the ocean, from which it had been conquered, they would sooner have become provinces of France, in spite of Alençon and the Antwerp treachery, than sacrifice their spiritual freedom; and Elizabeth could neither let France have them except on terms which France would not accept, nor allow them to be crushed by Spain for fear of the account which Spain might next demand of herself. She neither cared for their Calvinism, nor could she recognize liberty of worship, which she herself refused, as a legitimate plea for rebellion; yet she was compelled to support them in a revolt which meant either that or nothing. She could not even leave them alone to compound their own quarrel with Spain, even on terms which she would herself have approved, lest in their resentment at her desertion of them they should join with Spain against her. She, who despised their scrupulousness, was compelled to become its patron; and she writhed in the ungrateful situation, striving by every sleight and trick to escape her obligations. A French army would have been at Brussels, but for the limitations with which she had tempted the States to embarrass their offer of themselves to her neighbour. She had bound herself to help them, if they lost the help of France in consequence; and they had lost it, and she was called on to fulfil her engagement.

As usual, she reconsidered the entire question upon its merits, as if no promise had been made.

The States were willing and indeed eager to be annexed to England. The acquisition would have been a splendid compensation for the loss of Calais. The united fleets of England and Holland would have been supreme in the Channel, and would have ruled with undisputed sway over the known seas. But it promised interminable war—war immediately with Spain, to which no end could be foreseen, and war sooner or later with France, which would not quietly see England become again a continental power. Yet war with Spain seemed equally inevitable if the provinces were reconquered. Demands would unquestionably be made upon the Queen, which must be either submitted to or resisted, and which, if submitted to, would involve humiliation, disgrace, and probably an internal revolution. England would not be permitted to remain the harbour and nursery of heresy; and, unless she was prepared to abandon Protestantism altogether, the alternative lay between seeking war boldly, while the Provinces were holding out, or waiting to meet it single-handed at home.

English seamen, who had been fighting Spain as privateers for twenty years, held its power extremely cheap. Philip to them was ‘a Colossus stuffed with clouts.’¹ Half the sailors of the Peninsula went annually to the Newfoundland fisheries; and Sir John Hawkins proposed, as others had done before him, to destroy them all at a single swoop, cripple the Spanish marine for years, and leave the galleons to rot in the harbours for want of hands to man them.² Elizabeth however had views of her own. She knew that Philip was less savagely inclined towards her than Walsingham supposed, or she regarded with less alarm the possibility of a compromise with him. ‘Her Majesty,’ as M. Ségur said, ‘had a will of her own, joined with an opinion that she saw further into those actions than her whole council, and would not be advised.’¹

¹ Herle to Burghley, July 17, 1585: MSS. Domestic.

² Plot for annoying the King of Spain, April, 1585: MSS. Ibid.

She kept Davison at the Hague ready to take advantage of the dismay which would be created by the refusal of France to interfere; she anticipated that the States would now make overtures to her so pressing that she could dictate the conditions of her assistance.² The sea-towns, which were to have been made over to her if the Provinces had become French, she meant to secure at all events; and as a security for the fulfilment by the States of the obligations to which she intended to hold them, she required Flushing, Brill, and Enchusen to be put into her hands, to be held by English garrisons. What, at the bottom of her heart, she thought of doing with these towns will be seen hereafter. She regarded them as the property, in strictness, not of the States but of Philip; and Philip had reason to believe that she might perhaps assist him to recover them.

Twice already she had been on the point of interfering on the Spanish side, and the occupation of these places might be a step towards the restoration of them to himself.³ It is not to be supposed that she distinctly

¹ Herle to Burghley, July 17: MSS. Domestic.

² ‘Mr Davison must so handle the matter that the States shall have recourse to her Majesty for relief, not as if she herself was in any difficulty or peril, that she may make the better terms.’—Instructions to Mr Burnam, March 8—18: MSS. Holland.

³ ‘No ha hecho la Reyna de Inglaterra ofensa que no se le pueda muy bien perdonarle, hora que sea instrumento de reducir aquellas Islas. Echole en las orejas que se entiende que no está lejos desto aquella Reyna, meditated doing this, but the possibility floated before her mind. The possession of the towns would give her the command of the situation, and enable her at once to make terms for herself, and to dictate to the States.

She was demanding, at any rate, the control of the whole seaboard of the States, and their past relations with her had not been so satisfactory that they were inclined to place their fortunes in her hands. They were heartily anxious, they said, to give her the sovereignty of the Provinces. She would then be frankly and completely embarked in their cause, and the two nations would become one in the union of a common faith; but to part with the towns 'might breed quarrels, suspicions, and cavils.'¹ Before sending formal commissioners, the States privately felt their way with her. She professed herself 'extraordinarily resolute to assist;' yet she still adhered to her point, and the States shrunk from granting it. An attack was to be made on the Prince of Parma's siege works and the bridge over the Scheldt, from which great results were anticipated. Both parties waited to see what effects would follow. It was a splendid effort: a fireship, sent down from Antwerp, shattered the bridge and blew a thousand Spaniards into the air; but Parma's coolness turned disaster into victory. The bridge was sealed again, and with it the fate of the beleaguered city, unless an army could take the field for ne aya querido con otro fin poner pié en las Islas, siendo el principal suyo asegurarse que V. Mag^a le dexe vivir.'—Olivarez al Rey, 4 de He-brero, 1586: MSS. Simancas.

¹ Gilpin to Walsingham, March 6—16: MSS. Holland.

its relief. The negotiation was resumed, and Elizabeth repeated her terms. Send us five thousand men and save Antwerp, the States said, and the whole country shall be yours for ever.¹ I do not want the country, Elizabeth answered, and will not have it; but I am willing to become your protector if you will give me your towns.² Her treachery, if she intended it, was a secret which she kept to herself. The revolt had notoriously been supported by English money; half the States' army consisted at that moment of English volunteers. The overtures of the States to the Queen were notorious to the world. It was equally notorious that she was treating with them, and Philip determined to frighten her. An unusual number of English ships were in the harbours of Spain. The corn famine continued in Galicia and Andalusia, and vessels bringing wheat had been invited over with special promises that they should be free from molestation. On the May.

29th of May a sudden order was issued at Madrid for the arrest of any English ship upon the coast, the imprisonment of the crews, and the appropriation of the vessels and their guns to the Armada which was in preparation at Cadiz.³

The command was generally obeyed. Hundreds, probably thousands, of English sailors and merchants were robbed of their ships and goods, and sent to the galleys or to the dungeons in Seville.⁴ 'Our country-

¹ Gilpin to Walsingham, May 9
—19: MSS. Holland.

² Walsingham to Gilpin, May 7
—17: MSS. Ibid.

³ Orders to the Corregidor of Biscay, May 29, 1585: MSS. Spain.

⁴ Advertisements from Seville, November 22: MSS. Ibid.

men are still in prison,' wrote an Englishman, some months later, 'and in great misery; except there be better order taken, better for men to stay at home than raise the price of corn in our country to bring it hither to so ungrateful a nation.'¹ A few ships only by skill or courage contrived to escape, the Primrose, of London, having the singular fortune to bring home no less a person than the Corregidor of Biscay himself. The Primrose, with a crew of fourteen or fifteen hands, was lying in the roads at Bilbao. The Corregidor having received his orders from Philip, went on board, as if on a friendly visit to the captain. He looked about him, saw the ship, as he imagined, defenceless, and after going back to the town returned with two or three boat-loads of soldiers,² came on deck, followed by his people, and taking the captain by the arm told him he was a prisoner. The captain, whose name was Foster, shook himself free and shouted to his crew to defend themselves. Snatching the first weapons that came to hand, axes, pistols, cutlasses, boarding pikes, the men flung themselves upon the Spaniards, pitched them overboard, hurled stones upon them as they crowded down into their boats, cleared their decks of them. Seven or eight were killed. Many more fell wounded into the sea. The Corregidor himself being thrown

June.

¹ Advertisements from Spain : MSS. Spain.

² 'The captain says three or four pinnaces, manned with thirty men apiece. The Corregidor says two boats, one with 23 or 24 men, the other with 7 or 8.'—Sussex to Walsingham, June 9—19, 1585: MSS. Domestic. Examination of the Corregidor before Sir H. Killigrew: MSS. Ibid.

with others into the water, hung to a rope, and was taken up when the fight was over. The cable was instantly cut, the sails hoisted, and in a few minutes the Primrose was on her way to the Thames, with the first officer in Galicia a prisoner.

The news of the arrest was received in England with deep resentment. Had such a measure been resorted to in retaliation for the plunder of Drake, the justice of it would have been recognized; but the ships at present taken had been engaged on what was something like a mission of charity, and had been tempted over by special promises of safety. Letters of reprisal were issued immediately to the merchants, and for the first time the idea of a war with Spain began to be really popular. The people neither understood nor cared for the intricacies of diplomacy, but they could comprehend very well a broad and flagrant wrong. Even trade itself, it was thought, would perish if the Government wanted spirit to defend plundered subjects. 'For her Majesty's reason,' wrote a correspondent of Burghley, 'that she would not enter into a war for displeasing of her people that have lived so long in peace, it is with her high favour no reason at all. The people generally desire this war as just and necessary, taken in ripe season, and will have those that impugn it as enemies to their country, condemning them of doting or malice or both.'¹ The opportunity of the Low Countries became recognized, and interest lent its aid to religion in promoting a desire for interference. The time for practice and intrigue had gone by.

¹ William Herle to Burghley, July 17—27; MSS. Domestic. William Herle, the writer of these words, was the person who fourteen years before had been employed in the not very honourable office of a spy on

the Catholic prisoners in the Marshalsea. He had been engaged subsequently in collecting information in Ireland, Holland, France, and Germany, and had been so useful and accurate that Burghley had unusual confidence in him. He was behind the scenes in the Queen's artifices, of many of which he had been himself the instrument. He was eager, like most well-informed Englishmen, that she should take up the cause of the Low Countries, and in pressing it upon his patron, he provoked a correspondence which throws remarkable light on the character of Cecil himself. The Lord Treasurer was believed by the world to have encouraged Elizabeth's hesitation, and to have thwarted the bolder policy of Walsingham and the Protestants. It was true that Cecil was growing old. It was true that Walsingham in succeeding to Cecil's office took the place which Cecil had held earlier in the reign, as the advocate of determined measures. What Cecil had been to de Quadra, Walsingham had become to Mendoza. Cecil was considered cautious and timid, Walsingham dashing and courageous. M. Ségur had supposed and said that the Queen's coldness to the King of Navarre had been Cecil's work, and the Deputies from the States believed equally that he was unfavourable to the cause of the Netherlands. Even Philip curiously imagined that he had a friend in his most constant enemy, and when a list was made of the English ministers who were to be hanged on the success of the invasion, Philip struck out Cecil's name. 'Cecil,' he wrote, 'no importaria tanto, aunque gran herege; es muy viejo y el que aconsejó los tratos con el Principe de Parma.'—TEULET, vol. v. p. 378. Yet according to Cecil himself no mistake could have been greater. He had to humour the Queen in order to keep some control over her, but he was deeply hurt by the suspicion that he was untrue to the common cause. M. Ségur, he said, had discovered his own error, and had expressed his sorrow for it; 'Yet the scar of that false report remained, and the untruth first uttered continued; the truth to M. Ségur revealed remaining only with himself for his satisfaction.' 'The same thing had been reported to the Hollanders of his hindrance of their suit, and so was falsely conceived by them.' Yet 'God knew,' Cecil said, 'that he was falsely slandered;' 'his own conscience would otherwise be a perpetual sting to him; and the Queen might greatly condemn him if he did not concur against her known enemies Popish and Spanish.' For the part which he had taken about the States he

July. 'Her Majesty,' wrote Herle again, 'cannot provoke Spain more than she hath done. She appealed to Walsingham and Davison, 'who could tell in what sort he had dealt with her Majesty, often to the offending her with his earnestness.'—Burghley to Herle, July 12—22, 1585: MSS. Domestic.

Flattered by Burghley's confidence Herle mentioned other insolent language which the world used about Cecil. He was charged with monopolizing the Queen's patronage, absorbing the Government with his own hand, amassing enormous wealth by encroaching on the realm and the Commons, compelling all suitors to apply to him for justice, and making England in fact 'regnum Cecilianum.'—Herle to Burghley, August 11—21: MSS. Ibid.

This letter cut Burghley to the quick. 'I may say truly,' he answered, 'Acuerunt linguas suas sicut serpentes; venenum aspidum sub labris eorum. If they think me guilty they need not fear to accuse me, for I am not worthy to continue in this place; but I will yield myself worthy not only to be removed but to be punished as an example to all others. If they cannot prove all the lies they utter, let them make any one point wherewith to prove me guilty of falsehood, injustice, bribery, dissimulation, double-dealing in advice in council either with her Majesty or with her councillors. Let them charge me in any one point that I have not dealt as earnestly for the Queen's Majesty to aid the afflicted in the Low Countries to withstand the power of the King of Spain, the assurance of the King of Scots to be tied to her Majesty with reward, yea with the greatest pension that any other hath. If in any of these I be proved to have been behind or slower than any in a discreet manner I will hold myself worthy of perpetual reproach. They that say in a rash and malicious mockery that England is become regnum Cecilianum, may please their cankered humours with such a device, but if my actions be considered, if there be any cause given by me of such a nickname there may be found out in many others juster causes to attribute other names than mine.'

He went on to describe his personal circumstances, and his general relations with the Queen. Burghley House belonged to his mother, he said, and with the exception of a few grants from Edward VI. almost all the rest of his property came to him from his father. From the Queen, for all his long services, he had received next to nothing. The fee for the Treasurership was no more than it had been for 300 years, and would not answer the charges of his stable. He had been obliged to sell land of his own to pay his expenses at Court. The hardest part of the public business was thrown upon him. Yet of the good things which the Queen provokes all Princes as well Protestants as others against her. She makes herself naked of all aids, and converts the friends now pretended to be turned against herself. She stains her credit everlastingly in having importuned the poor people over to her and then to send them fruitless away. She abandons the Church of God distressed, and her best bulwark withal. She excludes traffic at home by despising friends abroad. She dissolves merchants. She breaks the drapery of England, and starves the poor people living of the same trade, to a necessity that will shake the frame of the whole State. The gentleman shall not sell his wool, the ploughman his corn, nor the artificers be employed. All things will be disordered, and we be suffocated in our own fat, though we feel not the force of any foreign invasion. The customs will be nothing. Her Majesty must live of her rent, and how it will be answered is doubtful, and that which she most fears will follow at the heels, the contempt of her person, the reputation whereof has been kept in tune this twenty years by one policy; but had to bestow nothing had fallen to kinsman, servant, or follower of the house of Cecil. 'In very truth,' he said, 'I know my credit in such cases so mean, and others I find so earnest and able to obtain anything, that I do utterly forbear to move for any. Whereupon many, my good friends, do justly challenge me as unwise, that I seek to place neither man nor woman in the chamber nor without to serve her Majesty, whereby I might do my friends good; and therefore indeed I have few partial friends, and so I find the want thereof.'—Burghley to Herle, August 14—24: MSS. Domestic.

Lord Burghley has been reproached of late years for neglecting to advance his nephew, Francis Bacon. Many motives have been suggested, indifference, blindness, even jealousy. No one seems to have suspected that he was entirely powerless, the date is out, and the last entertainment had like to have ended tragically.’¹

Burghley thanked his correspondent for his sensible letter. He replied that he had laboured hard to make her Majesty understand that she could not safely separate herself from the common cause, and that when her neighbours were overcome her own turn would come next. ‘Her Majesty sees this sometimes,’ he said; ‘she will yield as overcome in argument; but that which is natural to herself hinders resolution.’²

By this time formal deputies from the States had arrived in London. The offer of sovereignty was renewed and again declined, but the Queen continued to repeat for a time that she was ready to accept a Protectorate, and notice was given for a meeting of Parliament to decide whether there should be peace or war.³ In detail however there were immediate difficulties. To assume the Protectorate would be to assume the entire administration, and Elizabeth wished to confine herself to sending troops with a Lieutenant-General. The States desired her to take the place which had been held by the Prince of Orange. She played with the idea, gave vague answers, and tried to dodge the position. She undertook indeed, and this was most important, ‘to make no truce with the enemy without the consent of the States-General,’⁴ but she was making

¹ Herle to Burghley, July 17—27: MSS. Domestic.

² Burghley to Herle, July 18—
28: MSS. Ibid.

³ Proposals of the States Commissioners, with the Queen’s answer, June, 1585: MSS. Holland.

⁴ Ibid.

evident efforts to avoid the appearance of direct action against Spain. As Parliament would have taken a clearer position, she prevented the meeting. It was to have sat while the Commissioners were in England. Unknown to Burghley, and during his absence from the Court, it was suddenly prorogued.¹ She quarrelled with every demand that was made upon her. She made Antwerp a separate question from the general defence. She declared herself willing to send four thousand men to assist Antwerp, but she demanded Ostend and the Sluys as additional guarantees. She changed her mind about the Protectorate of the States. She decided to limit herself to being an 'aiding friend.'² Yet she still made a condition of the transfer of Flushing, Brill, and Enchusen; and finally falling back on her old methods 'she refused to enter into the action at all otherwise than underhand;' while her whole council of all shades and parties agreed for once that it would be 'dishonourable' as well as 'dangerous,' and that 'it was impossible she should long stand unless she entered openly into the action.'³

¹ Burghley was suspected of having been the cause. 'For the proroguing of Parliament,' he wrote to Herle, 'I had no more to do with it than you had. I was at my house at Theobald's, the day before it was done, and when it was done. The first I heard of it was by my Lord of Leicester's report. I was very sorry, and so was his Lordship.'—Burghley to Herle, July 18—28: MSS. Domestic.

² The purpose of the distinction appeared afterwards: 'meaning perhaps to abandon the action,' wrote Walsingham, 'she conceives it may be done with the less dishonour, being an assister, than when her minister shall carry the title of absolute governor.'—Walsingham to Leicester, April 26: Leicester Correspondence. Edited by John Bruce.

³ Walsingham to Stafford, July 22—August 1: MSS. France.

To tempt her cupidity, a 'device' was proposed by which if she became Sovereign of the States, she might make ten thousand pounds a month out of the currency; and to remove Burghley's supposed opposition a thousand pounds a month in addition was offered to himself. If it could be done, Burghley said, he would be to blame if he refused his assent to anything which would bring the Queen to a decision, 'seeing her Majesty, for her own surety, was bound to charge herself with the defence of the States against their enemy and hers: but for the offer to himself he did utterly refuse either such or a less sum, thinking it more charity to yield of his own to the common cause, than to receive a penny.'¹

Nothing came of this; but at length on August. the 2nd—12th of August, the Queen consented to the separate treaty for the defence of Antwerp. She undertook to send over four thousand men, with their wages paid for three months, provided she could be assured of repayment in half a year, and meanwhile might have the Sluys and Ostend.² The States yielded, and having begun to make concessions gave way altogether. A few days later a general treaty was signed,

¹ Cecil adds, in an angry postscript, 'I marvel that any malicious discoverer can note me a councillor that do abuse my credit to my private gain. I may say boldly I have neither made, nor had use from her Majesty, these ten years, by lease, license, gift, loan, or any other way, worth ten shillings. How others are fraught with suits, the world may easily see.'—Burghley to Herle, July 22: MSS. Domestic.

² Articles of the treaty provisional for Antwerp, August 2—12: MSS. Holland.

which was to take effect when Antwerp should have been relieved. The Queen bound herself to provide from four to five thousand men, to serve at her cost in the Low Countries till the end of the war, the States on their side promising to make over Flushing, Brill, and Rammekins, to be occupied by English garrisons till all that she had spent or should spend in their cause had been repaid in London.¹

The opposition seemed at last to have been overcome, and a hundred ship-loads of soldiers were instantly on their way to the seat of war. Between volunteers and Queen's troops seven thousand men had sailed within a week of the completion of the arrangement.² They were too late to save Antwerp. Distressed by the uncertain news from England, and threatened daily with an assault, which the starved and scanty garrison would be unable to resist, St Aldegonde, who commanded them, surrendered two days after the signature of the treaty. He thought it 'foolishness to expect help from a woman, and that woman the most variable and inconstant in the world.'³ He told Walsingham that he had done his best. He had yielded only when to persist would have exposed the unfortunate city once more to sack and butchery.⁴ Distrust and despondency

¹ Articles of a treaty for the aid of the Low Countries, August 10—20: MSS. Holland.

² Walsingham to Stafford, August 15—25: MSS. France.

³ 'M. St Aldegonde a calomnié la Reyne d'Angleterre, disant entre autres propos que c'estoit une grande folie d'attendre secours d'une Dame, singulièrement de une qui est la plus inconstante Dame qu'on pourroit trouver au monde.'—Secret Advertisements from Antwerp, August, 1585: MSS. Holland.

⁴ St Aldegonde to Walsingham, August 17—27: MSS. Ibid.

had almost carried Holland and Zealand to simultaneous submission. Parma offered them everything that they could wish, if they would allow their chapels to be suppressed and the mass to be re-established in the churches; and the dread of some trick on the part of Elizabeth, the dislike of parting with the sea towns, and 'the large offers of the enemy,' were fast inclining the people to peace.¹ If she intended to have the towns, she was recommended to take possession of them at once, and to send over some one to command the army. The troops had crossed, and she had signed the treaty; but fears were entertained that she was still thinking of drawing back. Davison was again in Holland, having gone over on the news of the fall of Antwerp. 'By letters from Calais,' wrote Walsingham, on the 27th of August, 'I find it very necessary that her Majesty should hasten her resolution, which you shall do well to further by writing hither as soon as you are over, for that her Majesty must needs send thither with speed lest otherwise there be an accord made before she be aware.'²

The Queen's conduct indeed, however intelligible it became afterwards, when the inner movements of it were revealed, was on the surface inexplicable. She intended evidently to seem as if she meant to do something real; and as before, when she threatened interference, she had sent to Don John, so now she sent to Parma to remind him that she had long entreated Philip to give peace to the Provinces by granting them liberty of conscience, and some toleration for the exercise of their religion. She was connected with the Low Countries, she said, by many ties, and was deeply interested in their welfare. She had often told the King that unless he would take a reasonable course with them she would be forced to interfere. She had no ambition to annex the Provinces to England. She desired nothing but to see them happily settled under the Spanish Crown. But unless the King would confirm the pacification of Ghent or concede some degree of toleration, or unless the Prince, if he had no commission to entertain such a question, would grant a suspension of arms till he could send to Spain for instructions, she said 'she had determined, and was fully minded, to employ such means as God had given her in the assistance of the said countries.'¹

¹ Roger Williamsto Walsingham, August 15—25: MSS. Holland.

² Walsingham to Davison, August 27—September 6: MSS. Ibid.

So far all was honourable and straightforward.

The next step was to choose some one to command the English contingent. Universal consent settled at once upon the Earl of Leicester. All along, when interference had been talked of, Leicester was the person thought of as the most suitable leader. It was true that he had neither ability nor character; but he was the Queen's supreme favourite, the most conspicuous nobleman at the Court; the one of all others who was supposed by the world to represent most nearly the Queen's person: while she herself regarded him as 'a creature of her own,' and therefore most to be depended on to

¹ Instructions to Sir John Smith, | 22—September 1: MSS. Flanders.
sent to the Prince of Parma, August | be pliant to her wishes. On Leicester therefore the choice determined, and on the 28th of August September. (Sept. 7) her pleasure was communicated to him by Walsingham. The intimation did not take him by surprise. 'He had been most willing,' he said; 'it seemed to be God's cause and her Majesty's;' nor had he any reason to offer for reluctance, beyond experience of his mistress's temperament. But a presentiment of evil haunted him. The council had voted unanimously for the treaty, and the loss of Antwerp, if the Queen was really resolute, was of minor consequence. Conscience, honour, interest, pointed in the same direction; to desert the States might soon cost her not only her kingdom but her life; but still Leicester doubted. 'If her Majesty,' he said, 'was led or drawn on by this advertisement or that persuasion, as times and changes fell out, without a full persuasion indeed that the cause was as it was, and that it did concern herself and the whole realm in the highest degree, it were better for her Majesty not to enter into it, and her money might be for the time saved, and her people be preserved from slaughter.'¹

The Queen having signified her pleasure however he prepared to go, and to go at once, since the States hesitated to make over the towns, at least till his appointment was confirmed. Lady Leicester came from Kenilworth to London, meaning to accompany him, while he himself was borrowing money upon his lands to meet the cost which he knew would be thrown upon him. At once, for no assignable cause, the Queen's humour changed. The appearance of the Countess Lettice, whom she detested, seemed to irritate her. She said she would send some one else, or send no one.¹

¹ Leicester to Walsingham, August 28—September 7: MSS. Domestic.

The storm blew over, and the Earl was again to go; when she made another difficulty. She fancied or pretended to fancy that she was dying, and that she could not spare him from her side.²

She recovered her spirits, but the improvement lasted only four days. On the 26th of September she had once more decided to do nothing. 'Unless God give her Majesty another mind,' said Walsingham, 'it will work her and her subjects' ruin.'³ Leicester could but

¹ 'Here we are lukewarm, and yet from sundry quarters we hear of great practices against this poor crown. I see not her Majesty disposed to use the service of my Lord of Leicester. There is great offence taken in the conveying down of his lady.' — Walsingham to Davison, September 5—15: MSS. Holland.

² 'Mr Secretary, I find her Majesty very desirous to stay me. She makes the cause only the doubtfulness of her own self, by reason of her often disease taking her of late, and this last night worst of all. She used very pitiful words to me of her fear she shall not live, and would not have me from her. You can consider what manner of persuasion this must be to me from her; and therefore I would not say much for any matter, but did comfort her as much as I could, only I did let her know how far I had gone in preparation. I do think for all this, that if she be well to-night, she will let me go, for she would not have me speak of it to the contrary to anybody. Thus much I thought good to let you know, and pray you send my wife word in the morning that I cannot come before Thursday to London.

'Your assured,

'R. LEICESTER.'

This letter is dated characteristically by Leicester, 'This evening.' It was his habit when he wished to be precise. An endorsement assigns it to the 21st of September.—Leicester to Walsingham: MSS. Domestic.

³ Walsingham to Leicester, September 26: Leicester Correspondence.

answer 'it was one of the strangest dealings in the world: he was weary of life and all.'¹

October. Weeks thus went by in alternate shifts of mood. Davison and Sir John Norris took charge of the troops that had gone over, but neither supplies nor money were forthcoming to support them. Elizabeth ordered that the war should be strictly defensive, and that on no pretence should her soldiers be seen in the field. Norris could not believe her to be serious, and in the middle of October he stormed a Spanish fort with conspicuous gallantry. She rebuked him instantly and severely for having neglected her instructions, 'her meaning in the action which she had undertaken being to defend and not to offend.'²

The States, perplexed and uneasy, more than ever hesitated to relinquish their towns; but, unwilling to break their part of the bargain, they intimated to Davison that they were ready to place them in his hands, if he was prepared to receive them. He was scarcely able to do it. The army had been despatched in haste without a responsible officer, without change of clothes or stores of any kind. Not an article of any kind or a stiver in money had followed them; and six weeks' service, under such conditions, had already transformed them into a ragged mob. The companies intended to garrison Flushing had been exposed ten days, in open boats, to the October rain and tempest, and at times had not even food. For a week after they were huddled together in a church at Middleburgh, their soaked coats and shirts dropping in pieces from their backs. So many died, that Edward Norris, Sir John's brother, was obliged to write pressingly for reinforcements. Six hundred dragged, half-armed, and starving wretches were marched at last into Flushing, and reluctantly put in possession of the works in which the States had maintained seven hundred and fifty 'excellently appointed soldiers.' The stout inhabitants of the town received their new masters half in suspicion and half in scorn, and refused to furnish them with either bread or clothes except for money, of which they had none to give.¹

¹ Leicester to Walsingham, September 27: Leicester Correspondence.

² Elizabeth to Sir John Norris, October 31: MSS. Hollan.

Something was at work in the Queen's mind beyond mere irresolution, to make her shift and pause and leave her troops to famish, and the States to run distracted. Two ominous letters from Walsingham, one to Burghley, another to the bewildered Davison, explain in part what it was.

'I think it right to let you know,' he wrote to Burghley on the 26th of October (Nov. 5), 'that her Majesty doth deliver unto divers persons the great dislike she hath of her own resolution taken in the cause of the Low Countries, a matter which, being once known either by the enemy or those of the Low Countries, cannot but work some dangerous change. If her Majesty be disposed to make peace and compound the

¹ Sir John Norris to Davison, 20—30; Edward Norris to Walsingham, October 21—31: MSS. Holland.
October 10—20; Davison to Burghley, October 13—23, and October differences between her and Spain, she cannot but make it with far greater advantage now than before, when she had not Flushing and Brill in her hands. But the way to make it good is not in outward show to seem to mislike her bargain, but to put a good countenance on the matter for a while, until there shall be some way devised to compound things with honour and safety.’¹

‘Our stay in sending on governours to the town,’ he wrote a fortnight later to Davison, ‘cannot but breed some doubt of our disposition to the cause; or rather that being now possessed of Flushing and Brill we shall seek to serve our turn at their cost and peril. I cannot deny but some practices have been used to draw her Majesty to mislike of the present action, and of such as advised her to enter into the same.’²

Elizabeth was showing her hand prematurely. The four thousand seamen and fishermen in Flushing were likely to make short work of the perishing wretches who, without a governor or commanding officer, were put in charge of the most important position in the whole Provinces, if treachery was distinctly suspected. Though the general uncertainty continued, therefore, appearances were more carefully studied; Sir Philip Sidney was sent as governor to Flushing and Sir Thomas Cecil, Burghley’s eldest son, to Brill. The choice of persons so nearly connected with the Government seemed to imply a more defined purpose. A little money was also sent, and some supplies. Finally, Leicester's appointment, after two months' wavering, was reconfirmed; and Walsingham, at the beginning of November, hoped that 'the matter was now solved and free from practices.' By the middle of the month Sidney had gone to his charge; but the orders were stricter than ever that the English troops should be confined to garrison work, and Walsingham referred Davison to Sidney, to learn from him 'the strange humours that reigned at the Court.' 'There were overthwart proceedings,' he said, 'which would easily be redressed if the Queen would take a resolute course, but that was a matter rather to be prayed than hoped for.'¹

¹ Walsingham to Burghley, October 26—November 5: MSS. Do-mestic.

² Walsingham to Davison, November 6—16: MSS. Holland.

The Provinces were left in anarchy. Every arrangement was held in suspense till the Queen would make known her pleasure, and she would neither decide what authority should be held by Leicester, nor take the government herself, nor allow the States to choose a Stadtholder. Leicester was to command the English contingent; but whether he was to command the States' troops also—whether he was to levy taxes and administer them—whether, in fact, he was to be governor there or under the rule of others—all this was left as if in purposed confusion. She let him go at last, but she laid a concluding prohibition upon him to take no oath of any kind to the States, or occupy any position which would imply that he was in any way connected with them. Twenty thousand pounds were coming from her, which sufficed to pay the wages already due to the soldiers; but she held out no hopes whatever for the future. A secret purpose was in hand which Leicester suspected, though he was not admitted to it. 'I perceive,' he wrote before he started, 'your peace with Spain will go fast on; but this is not the way.'¹ She left him to encounter all collateral expenses out of his own resources, to sell lands, to mortgage, to borrow, to collect subscriptions through the clergy, and he spoke his mind freely on her treatment of him. 'If, he wrote, 'it be the will of God to plague us that go, and you that tarry, for our sins, yet let us not be negligent. I am sorry her Majesty doth deal in this sort, content to overthrow so willingly her own cause. Look to it, for by the Lord I will bear no more so miserable burdens; for if I have no money to pay the soldiers, let them come away, or what else. I will not starve them, nor stay them. There was never gentleman or general so sent out as I am. My cause is the Lord's and the Queen's. If the Queen fail I trust in the Lord, and on him I see I am wholly to depend.'² In this condition the nobleman who was to snatch the Netherlands from the Prince of Parma sailed from Harwich for the Hague in the middle of December.

¹ Walsingham to Davison, November 19—29: MSS. Holland.

And now for the explanation of these performances, which were extraordinary even for Elizabeth.

¹ Leicester to Walsingham, December 3—13, 5—15: MSS. Holland.

² Leicester, 'on the eve of sailing,' letter as usual undated, to Walsingham. MSS. Ibid.

But before entering upon it, we must look at something going forward at the same instant, which threw a fairer light upon England's prospects. Wherever in the history of these times the Queen's hand is visible, there is always vacillation, infirmity of purpose, and generally dishonesty; where her subjects are seen acting for themselves, whether as seamen, soldiers, merchants, pirates—in any and all capacities—there as uniformly is decision, fierceness, often cruelty, but invariably energy and vigour.

It has been said that on the arrest of the English ships in Spain, letters of reprisal were given to their owners to enable them to indemnify themselves. Swarms of privateers had in consequence been busy through the summer hovering on the Spanish coast from Gibraltar to St Sebastian. They had made such havoc, and so great was the alarm at Madrid, that twice the usual number of ships of war was sent to convoy the treasure fleet from Panama.¹ Sir Francis Drake had long been anxious for a second adventure on the Spanish Main. The galleons carrying home a whole year's produce of the mines, would be a prize, beside which the Cacafuego herself would be insignificant. While the exasperation of the merchants continued, he obtained leave from the Queen, in one of her bolder moments, to fit out a squadron. As usual it was to be a private adventure, with which she could disclaim connection if it failed. Drake and his friends found part of the money, and the Queen the rest, but merely as a personal speculation. He was to carry a commission with him as far as Spain. His orders were to repair to the various ports and demand the release of the arrested ships. What more he might do was to be on his own responsibility.

¹ 'Habiendo visto y considerado que en dos meses han hecho tantos daños los Ingleses con los navios de mercantes que navegan por estos mares, y que es de creer que haran lo mismo en las flotas que fueren y vinieren de las Indias, convenia que llevasen otras dos naos por lo menos en cada flota.'—Parescer de Alonzo Baçan, Marques de Santa Cruz, 26 de Octubre: Printed in Hakluyt.

September. Drake desired nothing better. Volunteers of all sorts were ready to serve with him—to serve without pay, for the chance of prize money. He got together five-and-twenty vessels of all sizes at Plymouth. Christopher Carlile and Martin Frobisher, after himself the two most distinguished English seamen, commanded under him. His ships were officered by the survivors of his old crew, and young gentlemen of rank contended for the honour of going out with him.¹

They were ready for sea in the middle of September, and sailed suddenly, 'being not the most assured of her Majesty's perseverance to let them go forward.'² Burghley had, in fact, given Drake a hint to be off. At Finisterre he would be beyond the reach of a change of mind.³

¹ Among the names are found those of William Cecil, Burghley's grandson who was supposed to have turned Catholic, Edward Winter, the admiral's son, and Francis Knowles, the Queen's cousin. Philip Sidney had wished to go, but was wanted elsewhere.

² Christopher Carlile to Walsingham, October 10—20: Domestic MSS.

³ Drake to Burghley: ELLIS, 1st series, vol. ii. p. 304.

Picking up a vessel or two returning from the Newfoundland banks on their way, and relieving them of their salt fish, the fleet stood in to the islands at the mouth of Vigo Bay. As they swung to anchor, 'it was a great matter and a royal sight to see them.' The Governor, Don Pedro Bernadero, between alarm and astonishment, sent off to know what they were, to offer them hospitality if they were merchants, to promise them 'what they did lack' if they were of a more ambiguous calling, and to beg them to go on upon their way. Drake answered that he was come to inquire after his arrested countrymen, and must take leave to land his men to refresh themselves. The Governor made no opposition, and to conciliate his strange visitors sent them cart-loads of wine and fruit. They remained on shore for two or three days, lounging among the churches and chapels, and taking liberties with the saints, to provoke them to show that they were alive. Among other performances they 'made bold to relieve our Lady of her clothes,' and when she was stripped, treated her with some indignity.¹

The weather becoming wild, and the anchorage at the islands being insecure, the fleet removed into the bay. The town was by this time in a panic, and the harbour was covered with boat-loads of terrified people flying up the country with their property. The pinnaces were sent in chase, and prizes were taken of more or less value—one especially containing 'the furniture of the

¹ News of Sir Francis Drake, from Vigo, October 14—24: MSS. Domestic.

High Church of Vigo,' altar cloths, copes, patens, chalices, and an enormous cross of very fine silver and 'excellent workmanship.' The Governor of Galicia collected a force and came to the rescue, but when he saw the ships he thought only, like his subordinate at the islands, of how best to persuade them to go away. He met Drake upon the water, and promised freely that every prisoner in the province should be immediately released. Drake having taken all the spoil that he was likely to get, and being unable to wait till the prisoners were sent to him, accepted his word and sailed.

All Spain was in agitation at the news that the world-famed corsair was on the coast. The council of State sat three days discussing it. That the English could dare to beard the first monarch in Europe in his own dominions seemed like a dream. 'Had the Queen of England,' it was asked, 'no way to employ Sir Francis Drake but to send him to inquire after Englishmen's ships and goods? Did the Queen of England know the King of Spain's force? Did not she and her people quake?' Little England, to the King of half the world, was but a morsel, to be swallowed at his pleasure. The Marquis de Santa Cruz however observed that 'England had many teeth,'¹ and that, with Drake upon the ocean, the first object was to save the Indian fleet. The man who, with a single barque and a handful of men, could take a million and a half of gold from under the eyes of the Viceroy of Peru, might go anywhere and everywhere with such a squadron as he had now at his back. He might sweep the South Seas again, and take Lima itself. He might take Madeira, or Rio, or the Canaries, or the West India islands. While faint hearts at Elizabeth's Court were dreading Philip's preparations at Cadiz, and every seminary priest's heart was exulting at the growth of the great fleet at Lisbon, which was to overwhelm the Jezebel of England, Santa Cruz recommended that every available ship should be sent at once to sea to rescue the gold fleets and Indian galleons, to save the Colonies, and encounter and destroy the audacious rover who was laughing at the Spanish power.

¹ Notes from Spain, January, 1586: MSS. Domestic.

Before returning to the Queen and her diplomacy, it will be agreeable to remain a little longer in the company of Sir Francis Drake. Elizabeth, it will be seen, was negotiating with Parma for permission to Drake to return to England unpunished. Drake was caring better for himself, and for England, and for the Queen also, if she could have but rightly known it. Before the Spanish council had collected their senses, he had been down at the Canaries. He had gone from the Canaries to Cape de Verde. He missed the Indian fleet by twelve hours only, 'the reason best known to God,' as Drake put it, laying the blame upon the weather; but on the 17th of November, as a celebration of Elizabeth's accession, St George's cross was floating over St Iago, and the plunder of the town was secured in the holds of his cruisers. From St Iago he flew westwards before the trade winds, and after a few days' rest at St Christopher's, he made direct to St Domingo, the first city in the Indian dominions. His name bore victory before it. St Domingo was carried by assault. The entire town being too large for the English to occupy, they quartered themselves in the central square, taking possession of castle, palace, and town hall, where Philip's scutcheon, a horse leaping upon a globe, with the haughty motto, Non sufficit orbis, preached a sermon to conquerors and conquered on the pride of fools.
November.

Drake was no destroying Vandal. He was unwilling to sack St Domingo if the inhabitants were prepared to redeem its safety. He remained at his leisure, holding the threat of pillage over them till they would consent to terms with him. A month was spent in debate, and he had now and then to remind them who he was, and that he was not to be played with. One day he sent a negro boy to the Governor with a flag of truce. A Spanish officer struck the lad with a lance. He came back wounded for an answer, and died in Drake's presence. Monks and priests were believed, not without reason, to be at the bottom of all the misery which was distracting the world. Drake selected a couple of friars from among his prisoners, sent them down with a provost-marshal and a guard to the place where the crime had been committed, and promptly hung them there; and he informed the Governor that he would hang two more on the same spot every day till the offending officer was given up and punished. The effect was instantaneous. The officer was brought in. To make the example more instructive, the Spaniards were compelled to execute him themselves; and thenceforward they knew with whom they had to deal, and were more careful. As they were long in coming to a resolution, there was every day less for them to save. Each morning two hundred sailors were told off to burn and destroy, till the ransom money was paid. At length they offered twenty-five thousand ducats, which the English accepted and departed.

Having left his mark on St Domingo, Drake went next to the second great city, Carthagena. This too he took, burnt partially, and ransomed the rest for 30,000*l.*, intending afterwards to go on to Panama for the chance of a convoy of bullion. Yellow fever however broke out in the fleet. The mortality became extremely great. Every third man was dead or dying, and very reluctantly Drake was obliged to abandon the hope of further exploits. As regarded prize money the voyage had been a failure, and barely covered its expenses; but the plunder of Vigo, the storming of St Iago, St Domingo, and Carthagena, and the defiant coolness with which the work was accomplished, did more to shake the Spaniards' confidence in themselves, and the world's belief in their invincibility, than the accidental capture of a dozen gold fleets.

Drake had done his part to make diplomacy difficult. It was not easy to maintain the fiction of a defensive war after the taking and holding to ransom of Spanish cities. He now came home at his leisure, entirely indifferent to the Armada which had been sent in search of him ; but long before his arrival all Europe was ringing with reports of his success.

When a private adventurer, without cost to the Empire, could strike a blow so weighty three thousand miles away, the nation itself might have accomplished something considerable at its own door, had its arm been unbandaged. The Prince of Parma had but eight thousand men all told when Antwerp fell. The English and Dutch fleets united might have sealed the Channel so effectively that not a Spanish transport could have ventured within its waters. An English army of the same size led by a soldier, and left free to act, supplied adequately from home, and backed by the revived energy of the States, unparalyzed by fear of treachery, would have made short work of the Netherlands difficulty. A single season's campaign would have seen the last Spaniard over the frontier.

But such was not Elizabeth's pleasure. She understood these matters, as she supposed, better than any other person. It pleased her then and always to maintain a clique of traitors in the palace, one of them at least, Sir James Crofts, the Controller of the Household, being in the pay of Spain, to whose subtle whisperings her ears were eternally open. It may be believed without injustice that she did not desire too complete a triumph to the Protestant cause. With 'the cause of God,' as it was called, and as it really was, fully and clearly victorious, it would have gone hard with her theories of Church government, and the via media Anglicana would have ceased to exist.

The name will be remembered of a certain M. de Champagny, brother of Cardinal Granvelle, a Catholic nobleman of great weight at Antwerp, who had, been sent by Requesens on an embassy to England in 1576. Champagny, like Granvelle himself, represented the party of the old Catholic Flemings, who hated heresy and heretics, but did not wish to see their liberties set aside, and their country ruined by the incubus of a Spanish army. Between them and Philip there was no longer any substantial difference of opinion. Weary of the enormous expense and the slow progress of the conquest, the King was willing to make any concession short of religious liberty. Elizabeth, as Champagny well knew, desired nothing better than the same solution of the question. She had taken exactly the same ground nine years before. No sooner had she signed her treaty with the States, and given notice to Parma that she intended to interfere, than Champagny contrived to place himself in communication with her. He had, it seems, been recently a second time in England. He had seen the Queen, and talked over with her the possibility of peace. He had told her that so long as religious liberty was made a condition, peace was out of the question, and Elizabeth had as good as promised that it should not be insisted on;¹ while Champagny on his part had agreed, that if she would yield on that one point she should have security that neither on that nor any other ground should she be molested in her own dominions.

¹ 'Entrò si avanti con vive ragione ch' ella quasi gli accordò di simil punto non tratarne.' — Carlo Lanfranchi to Andrea Looe, February 7, 1586: MSS. Flanders.

Extreme secrecy was necessary; for Holland and Zealand, so far from empowering Elizabeth to make peace for them, had bound her under her hand to make no peace without their consent. Their distrust of her had caused the difficulty about the sea towns. They had agreed to part with them only when they felt assured that they could depend upon her, and if they saw cause for suspecting that she meant to play them false, they were likely to expel her garrisons, and anticipate her by making peace for themselves. The religious liberty of which she made so light was the solitary object for which they were fighting. If they were to lose it they did not need her assistance. It was but too probable that in resentment at finding themselves betrayed they would sacrifice her as she had meditated sacrificing them, and make themselves the instruments of Philip's revenge upon her.

This was so certain, that if the peace party made public overtures to her, she would be obliged to reject them, and reject them with affected resentment; she would be driven in earnest into the war with which she was at present playing, and the Spanish army would remain indefinitely to afflict the Catholic Netherlands.

Champagny therefore not venturing to appear in the matter himself, made use of the assistance of an Italian merchant in Antwerp, Carlo Lanfranchi, who had extensive connections in England. Lanfranchi, instructed by Champagny, wrote in November to Andrea de Looe, the principal partner of an Italian house in London, desiring him to feel the pulse of the Queen, and of such of the council as he could trust. De Looe carried Lanfranchi's letter to Burghley, by whom it was shown to Elizabeth, and a question rises on the part which Burghley really played in the transactions which followed. Was he indeed a party to the meditated treason against the States, whose cause he had for so many years so earnestly advocated, or was he keeping the negotiation in his own hands, that he might control and guide it, and, if necessary, save his mistress from herself, as he had done many times before? His general character, his close and continued intimacy with Walsingham, his insisting when it came to the point, as it will be seen that he did, that there could be no peace without religious toleration after all, suggest the second alternative. On the other hand, de Looe, Lanfranchi, Parma, Philip himself, believed that Burghley was on their side, and Philip marked him off, to be spared from the gallows in consequence, when Elizabeth's other ministers were hanged.

It may be that, knowing his mistress well, and doubting, as many others doubted, whether she could ever be brought to persevere in the war, he hesitated to neglect an offered chance, but reserved to himself the final care of England and the Queen's honour.

Any way, he showed her Lanfranchi's letter. She liked it much. 'She wished forwardness in the matter.'¹

¹ A declaration of the manner of treating of peace, underhand to my Lord of Leicester: MSS. Holland, 1585-6.

It had been in her mind from the first, and was the ground of her desire that her quarrel should be as little exasperated as possible. In the thought of it she had rebuked Norris into inactivity, and she had allowed her troops to famish, because if peace was coming expense was unnecessary. She had hesitated on sending Leicester, and when he went at last, had given him undefined authority, and tied him by impossible instructions. He was no sooner gone than, as if some restraint had been taken off from her, she seemed inclined to pick a quarrel with the States, and find an excuse to precipitate the conclusion. By her double bargain she had secured Ostend and Sluys, as well as Brill and Flushing. English troops occupied all these places; but she required the States to pay for the repairs of the fortifications; while a lawyer construed the articles of the treaty for her, so as to throw on the States the maintenance of her garrisons in the other towns.¹

Leicester, on landing at Flushing, sent her a message 'that she should have peace at a year's end, with honour and safety.' 'It came in good time,' wrote Walsingham to him, 'for we began already to grow so weary of the charge of the war, and to fear so much the long continuance thereof, as it was half doubted lest some over-hasty course would have been taken for some dangerous and dishonourable peace.'²

1586. The hasty course was still in hand, un-
January. known to Walsingham. De Looe let Lan-

¹ Payment for the garrisons in Flushing and Brill, December 27, 1585: MSS. Holland.

² Walsingham to Leicester, December 22, 1585—January 1, 1586: MSS. Ibid.

franchi know that the Queen was willing to proceed. Lanfranchi replied on the 29th of January, that if she was reasonable in her demands peace could be easily arranged. Religion must not be mentioned; but religion, after what she had said to Champagny, was not expected to be a difficulty.¹ The correspondence continued. Champagny was confident, relying on Granvelle's influence with Philip. The King had sworn to maintain the Catholic religion, as Elizabeth in England maintained the Act of Uniformity. Neither one nor the other practised toleration, and toleration therefore ought not to rise as a question between them; but if this point was waived, the Catholic noblemen in the Netherlands were ready to guarantee her against danger from Spain, and Philip himself indeed was ready to make any engagement which the Queen might require. Nor was this all. She might make an excellent bargain for herself in every way; for in the conditions of peace provision might be made for the repayment of the money which she had spent in the States' defence.²

¹ Lanfranchi to Andrea de Looe, January 29—February 8: MSS. Flanders.

² 'Nel resto poi quanto alla sicurezza del Reyno dessa Ser^{ma} Regina, credo che il Re et y Nobili di questi Paesi daranno la parola, et anche crederei fra qualche tempo che si otterria cavar del paese la gente Spagnuola. E por y denari la Ser^{ma} Regina da davero non resteria a dietro farsi buona opera che li Stati con un poco di tempo la paghassero.'—Lanfranchi to Andrea de Looe, February 24: MSS. Flanders.

Again on February 27 Lanfranchi wrote that all would go well.

'Mentre non si tratti di Religione, trovando che quanto al fare rihabere alla Ser^{ma} Regina li denari prestati a questi Stati, sua Ma^a si contentera li siano resi come l' appartiene. Tocante alla sicurezza di stare in pace nel suo Regno di questo anche si trovarrebbe repieghe che i Nobili del Paese farebbero la promessa che senza loro la Regina molestata non puote essere. Il Re l' afferma

February. It might have been unwise, but it would not have been dishonest, if Elizabeth had frankly told the States that she was unable to defend them, had restored them their cautionary towns, and then made her separate peace. But the present treaty was for the States as well as for herself, and the principle of it was that if the States refused they were to be left, shorn of their strongest posts, to Philip's mercy. It was her possession of the towns which gave her the command of the situation, and it seems too painfully certain that she contemplated not the restoration of them to the States, but their delivery to Philip. It is plain from the very nature of the case, that this was to have been one of the conditions of peace.¹

The meaning of Walsingham's epithets, 'dangerous and dishonourable,' is now apparent. It need not be supposed that the Queen would have gained nothing. It has been thought that Parma was playing with her credulity; but Philip's language to Olivarez shows that he had no objection to a peace, if peace could be had at such a price; and he might have been well satisfied to rebbe lui anche.'—Lanfranchi to Andrea de Looe, February 27: MSS. Flanders.

¹ 'The Duke of Parma,' writes some one whose letter is among Burghley's papers, 'will be easily contented to come by that which he would have from us, and depart with nothing. He looks that the Queen should restore all the towns in her possession, to avoid all her forces out of the country, and consequently to leave the full subjection of the country wholly unto him, having so much thereof subdued already. It may be he will proffer some paltry piece of money, and yet pay us a great part of it in our ear, upon Sir Francis Drake's reckonings, and what assurance will be given of her Majesty's quietness, God knoweth.'—MSS. Flanders, March, 1585-6.

leave Elizabeth in quiet for the rest of her life, to enjoy the infamy in which she would have involved herself.

Let us turn for a moment to the cabinet of Sextus V. After the signature of the treaty with the Low Countries, and the visit of Drake to Vigo, the King of Spain came unwillingly to recognize that war with England was inevitable. The Pope, set on by Allen and Parsons, had required him formally, as a faithful son of the Church, to execute the Bull against Elizabeth. He had offered to contribute to the extent of his means, and Philip had instructed Count Olivarez to give a cautious but favourable answer. While the Antwerp and London merchants were arranging a peace, the Spanish ambassador was discussing the invasion of England in the Pope's cabinet, and the conversations there reveal with great distinctness both Philip's objects and his difficulties.

'I told the Pope,' wrote Olivarez in a ciphered despatch to his master, 'that although your Majesty had been often invited to undertake this enterprise by his Holiness's predecessors, you had never before felt assured that you would receive the practical assistance which would be necessary. His Holiness's willingness to meet your Majesty's views in this matter, had now induced your Majesty to take a more favourable view of his request, notwithstanding the continued troubles in Holland, and the other obstacles which have stood so long in the way. The object, I presumed, would be to restore the Catholic religion, and place the Queen of Scots upon the throne. His Holiness said that he was infinitely grateful to God for having brought your Majesty to so happy a frame of mind, and he gave his full consent to the elevation of the Queen of Scots.'

The next point was the succession to the English crown, which Olivarez was obliged to approach with caution. The Pope's views were very different from Philip's. The Queen of Scots was now forty-two; she was supposed to be in bad health, and her life might easily be short.

'I represented,' said the ambassador, 'that in your Majesty's opinion it would never do to allow a confirmed heretic like the King of Scots to follow her. The poison, if once more expelled, must not be allowed to return. A successor ought to be selected whose religion could be depended on, and care also ought to be taken that the Queen of Scots should not be betrayed by a mother's partiality into favouring her son.'¹

The Pope generally acquiesced; his Majesty's reasons were, he admitted, weighty, and he said he would consent to any arrangement that his Majesty might recommend. He hinted however that the King of Scots might be converted: or if this could not be, some English Catholic nobleman, he thought, might marry the Queen of Scots, with the reversion of the succession if she died without another child.

Olivarez said it would be very difficult to find a suitable person. Over and above the religious quarrel,

¹ 'Para que la Reyna no pueda, engañándole el amor de madre, pensar que será bueno introducirle en la succession y meterle en la possession del Reyno.'

England was distracted by factions. The elevation of a private nobleman to the throne would create violent jealousy. His enemies would raise the cry of religion, and he would be unable to maintain his authority; while as regarded the King of Scotland, so long as he gave no sign whatever of being disposed towards conversion, it was useless to think of him.

Sextus replied faintly that the objections were well taken. He was silenced if unconvinced, and he appeared at last to yield entirely.

‘I did not venture further into particulars,’ wrote Olivarez; ‘I have left it to Father Allen to break the rest to him; at present he has no idea that your Majesty has views on the succession for yourself.¹ He said so expressly to the Cardinal of Este, and I did not undeceive him. He will be much astonished when he knows the truth, and entangled though he may be by his promise to do as you wish, I have no doubt he will make difficulties. When I next speak to him, I may bridge matters over by speaking of the repayment of expenses after the enterprise has succeeded, and I may suggest that the succession shall be assigned by way of compensation, as a dowry to the Infanta Doña Isabella; of course professedly as a provisional arrangement, till your Majesty shall have recovered your outlay, with the accumulating interest. This will come to the same thing, for in a few years the sum will be so large that

¹ ‘No ose salir á mas particulari-dad: pienso me valer en esto de Alano quando fuere tiempo de apretarle. Está Su Santidad muy asegurado de que V. Mag^d no piensa á la sucesion de Inglaterra.’

it cannot be paid. I will say nothing however till I receive directions from your Majesty.'

The succession being disposed of, the question rose of the amount of the Pope's contribution. The Spanish treasury, Olivarez said, had been much exhausted by the wars in the Low Countries, and glad as the King of Spain would be to undertake everything without troubling his Holiness—well expended as he would regard any amount of treasure, could he be the means a second time of recovering England to the faith—yet the restoration would be largely lucrative to the Holy See, and he considered therefore that his Holiness might perhaps supply two millions,¹ which would be half the estimated cost.

One of the leading provocations to the original revolt had been the enormous tribute which England, under one form or another, had contributed to the See of Rome. The Pope calculated on recovering it;² and with this prospect two millions was not an excessive sum. Sextus nevertheless was as fond of money as Elizabeth, and could drive as hard a bargain. He said that he had found his coffers empty on his accession. He must not burden the Papal States with fresh impositions. He was willing however to contribute more than a Pope efetualmente di vente ragioni jurisdictione et accioni che per prima haveva in quel ragno avanti che Henrico Octavo apostatava la fede.' —Olivarez al Rey, 24 Hebrero, 1586: MSS. Simancas.

¹ 'Dos millones de oro.' The gold crown, worth something over six shillings.

² 'La quale succediendo como s'espera con el favor d' Iddio felicemente, intende sua Sant' che la Sede Apostolica recupere e sia integrata

had previously contributed to any enterprise whatever. He offered to give the King two hundred thousand crowns at once, a third hundred thousand when the army should have landed in England, a fourth six months after, and two hundred thousand annually as long as the war continued.

Olivarez declined to argue. He replied merely that the lowest sum which his master could accept was a million and a half; and he allowed this matter, like that of the succession, to lie over till the arrival of Father Allen, who was coming to Rome from Rheims.

To Allen had been assigned the part in the second recovery which Pole had filled in the first. He was devoted to Philip, and was about to be made a Cardinal by Spanish interest. He was prepared to promise the Pope, in the name of the English Catholics, the repayment of every crown which he might spend, and to tell him that if there was another disappointment his Holiness alone would be to blame. Avaricious as Sextus was already known to be, these arguments were expected to make an impression upon him. The Catholic Powers had little confidence in one another. The Pope imagined that Philip would take his money, and would do nothing after all. Philip feared that the Pope, having launched him upon the enterprise, would leave him to his own resources. The Pope saw plainly that Philip had remembered his duty to Church, only when he found a war with England forced upon him by Elizabeth's interference in the Low Countries. Philip endeavoured as earnestly to prove that war was not forced upon him at all; that, as far as Spain was concerned, he could have every political satisfaction which he required, by peaceable negotiations; and that if he attacked England it would be in deference only to his Holiness's wishes.

‘His Holiness,’ said Olivarez, ‘is persuaded that you are obliged to call this woman to account, and that only by doing so can you come to an end with Holland and Zealand. He thinks that the conquest of England is incomparably easier than the conquest of those Provinces, and that you must undertake it to protect your own colonies and your own coast. He says that in the time of Pius V. four hundred thousand dollars were thought a sufficient subsidy from the Holy See. He cannot understand why a sum so much larger should be demanded now. I tell him that your differences with the Queen of England may be easily repaired if she will assist you in recovering the Provinces, which she is not far from consenting to do; that in fact she would never have set foot in the islands except with that intention, her desire being that the Provinces should remain under the Spanish Crown, in possession of their ancient liberties. I have said that if the present occasion is allowed to pass, and if your Majesty make peace with the Queen, the English question must be considered at an end, and be thought of no more. Your Majesty, I repeated, had been influenced only by the persuasions of his Holiness in taking another way; you would have to continue the war in Holland, to maintain an army in Flanders as a check on France, and to provide a fleet strong enough to encounter and overcome the whole strength of England; and I said it would be a smaller fault when God called him to account, if he had spent a little too much, than if he permitted the whole enterprise to fall to the ground.'

There remained one more obstacle: France had always stood in the way, and France, notwithstanding the league, remained in the same position. Politics at the Court of Paris were stronger than religion. The Cardinal of Este admitted frankly, that although the French Catholics would coerce or punish their own heretics, they could not and would not allow Spain to overcome England. If Spain undertook the work, a Spanish officer would have to lead the expedition; and the Duke of Guise had begged the Pope to refuse his sanction to the invasion, unless Guise was himself a party to it. Cardinal Sanz, who represented France in the Papal council, opposed it altogether: he recommended the Pope to do one thing at a time, and suggested that he should divert the invasion, if invasion there was to be, from England to Geneva. The Pope himself wished it to go forward, but was not eager to spend more upon it than necessary. It was doubtful whether he could be brought to declare against the King of Scots; and still more, whether he would sanction the settlement of the crown on Philip. The ambition which he had felt to distinguish his pontificate, had been cooled by the distress of parting with his money.¹ Philip's game was

¹ 'El gusto que mostraba y desseo —Olivarez á Su Maga, 24 Hebrero :
de hacer alguna cosa señalada se le | MSS. Simancas.
ha resfriado con el dolor del dinero.' | 'Lo que su Mag^a dice cerca de suspected if not fully understood. The Guises were no more willing than the House of Valois, that their young kinsman in Scotland should be deprived of his rights, and the Pope was an Italian sovereign as well as the Father of Christendom, and had no anxiety to see a further increase of the already overgrown Spanish power.

The expense, the uncertainty of the succession, and the humour of France, formed thus a serious objection to proceeding with the war. The evident object of the Vatican was to leave the work to Philip and to deprive him of the practical fruits of it. Philip therefore, it is easy to see, had strong inducements to consent to a peace, on the terms which the Queen appeared ready to concede. He would thus be left to destroy at his leisure the remnant of freedom which survived in Holland and Zealand. The Huguenots could be crushed next in France, and the submission of England to the general will of Christendom would then only be a matter of time

Elizabeth, on the other hand, terrified at expense also, and with traitors in her council, saw or thought she saw that she could secure quiet to herself for the remainder of her own reign, without exacting sacrifices of the Provinces which she could herself regard as important. Perhaps she thought that such a settlement as she contemplated might be a prelude to the general las exhortaciones que diversas veces se me han hecho en nombre de su Santidad, y lo que su Santidad respondió á ello.'—Roma, 4 Hebrero, 1586. Inclosed in a letter of the same date from Olivarez to Philip II. MSS. Simancas.

compromise which she had always longed for. Those round her, who understood better the depth and power of religious passion, foresaw that however it might fare with herself, the storm would sooner or later fall on England; that a Catholic revolution must and would ensue, with its bloody and terrible consequences. But Elizabeth did not see it, or was careless if she did; things would last her time; or if the storm overtook her while she was alive, to attend mass again, as she had done under her sister, was nothing so particularly objectionable; the mass and the English service were the same thing, with but a trifling difference of form. As it was with the succession to the crown, so it was with religion. It was convenient to herself that there should be no acknowledged successor. It was convenient to herself to be indifferent to the Protestant cause. The next generation might solve their own problems in their own way.

Thus the secret negotiation went on swimmingly. Champagny reported to Parma, while Andrea de Looe communicated with Elizabeth. Whatever Burghley's instructions may have been, both she and de Looe gave Parma to understand that religion was not to be a difficulty; the conditions otherwise were easily agreed upon; and there remained only some diplomatic coquetry as to which of the two Powers should make the first open advance.¹ Lanfranchi undertook for the Prince, 'that so far forth as her Majesty would not intermeddle in matters of religion, she should have all other things to content her ; amongst others, her money should be repaid her which she had lent, and bestowed in the Low Countries.' 'It was confidently answered that her Majesty was content not to meddle or deal in any matters of religion.' 'The Queen looked only that the Prince of Parma should first seek the peace, for that she herself would not first begin.'¹

March.

¹ Andrea de Looe to Burghley, March 13—23: MSS. Flanders.

Success however, in Elizabeth's opinion, depended on keeping Leicester paralyzed. Leicester himself, and Walsingham, who, notwithstanding the care with which the secret was kept from them, conjectured what was going on, conceived that even if peace and compromise were to be the ultimate objects, an effective campaign would be the fittest prelude to the treaty. The Queen, on the other hand, still affected to maintain that in sending troops to the Netherlands she had meant no hostility to Spain. She had accepted no authority except in the cautionary towns. As carefully she had reserved the control of her army in her own hands, to prevent the States from using them upon active service ; while she had refused to allow her representative to take any office which would encroach formally upon Philip's jurisdiction.

The sensation may be imagined therefore with which she learned that Leicester—Leicester, whom she was pleased to say she had raised out of the dust, the slave of her pleasure, the automaton that was to move only at her will, had dared to break the positive command

¹ Declaration of the manner of | Lord of Leicester, 1586 : MSS.
treating of peace underhand to my | Holland.

which she had laid upon him, had accepted in the Queen's name the absolute government of the Provinces, had taken an oath to the States, which she had distinctly forbidden him to take, and had put an end to the anarchy which she had meant to continue. He had done, in spite of her, what she ought herself to have been the first to desire. He had gone over, tied hand and foot by orders which made him useless and helpless, to hold a starving army in inactivity, without money to pay them, in a country without a government. He was surrounded by traitors: Blunt, Lord Mountjoy's brother, Pooley, a dependent outwardly of the Sidneys, and many others, secret agents of the Queen of Scots, had been sent over purposely to watch and thwart him. Though professing such care of the lives of her subjects, that she forbade Norris to expose them in action, she had allowed them to perish in squads. 'The havock,' wrote Lord North, 'which has been made of the soldiers first sent over is lamentable, which must be supplied and enlarged presently before my Lord can do anything.'¹ 'Most part of the bands that came over in August and September,' said a correspondent of Walsingham's, 'are more than half wasted, dead, and gone, and many that remain are sick, lame, and shrewdly enfeebled. Of our own soldiers many be paid with earth in their graves, the rest so discontented that, if pay come not speedily before, they may be drawn to deal with the enemy. I doubt some ill adventure.'²

¹ Lord North to Burghley, January 28: MSS. Holland.

² Digges to Walsingham, March, 1586: MSS. Ibid.

Not probably without the secret advice of Burghley, or at least of Walsingham, Leicester had made a bold effort to burst the net in which he was entangled. The States for the past year had possessed no organized government at all. Since the murder of the Prince of Orange they had waited upon Elizabeth's pleasure. If they did not know what she was doing they could easily conjecture what she was likely to do. She had been so careful to avoid committing herself, that they were the more anxious to commit her in spite of herself, and they had not parted with their hopes of being incorporated in the English Empire. The populace saw, in the advent among them of a great English nobleman, a step towards a realization of the union. He was received with the wildest enthusiasm. 'God save the Queen' had rung through Delft streets, loud as ever it had been heard in Cheapside.

The Estates represented to Leicester that a government of some kind was pressingly necessary. The Provinces were in confusion; money could not be had from England to pay the troops, which in their impatience and hunger were often on the edge of insurrection. The dispensation of the States revenues would prevent, at any rate, anarchy and disaster, and the accounts could be settled afterwards. A hundred obvious reasons could be given for a thing so necessary as union of authority. The government was offered to Leicester, who wrote to England for leave to receive it, and he was installed and in possession before the inevitable prohibition could arrive. The request itself, when it reached London, provoked more than sufficient indignation. That the States should have even proposed such a thing, and that Leicester should not have instantly refused it, was of itself an unpardonable crime.¹ The act itself the Queen learnt from others before the Earl himself informed her of it.

Secretary Davison, whom he found at the Hague, and by whose counsels he was encouraged to act as he did, undertook to be the bearer of the news, and to defend what had been done. Davison was detained by foul weather, and the news reached England before him. The Queen was in full cry after peace, with the game in view, and almost, as she thought, secured, when Leicester, of all people in the world, started out of the ground upon her path. To send troops with a half-defined intention of using them in the enemy's service might be defended or excused; but for their commander to accept authority over the King of Spain's territories at the hands of his rebellious subjects, was an act of hostility not to be explained away. The peace would be less easy, as Lanfranchi expressed it. 'The King of Spain found himself assaulted in earnest;' 'the matter had proceeded beyond words, and princes answered deeds with deeds.'²

Sir Thomas Heneage was ordered to go instantly to Holland, to say 'that the Earl and the States had treated the Queen with contempt;' either the world

¹ The Council to Leicester, January 26—March 5: MSS. Holland. | Looe, April 10—20: MSS. Flanders.

² Carlo Lanfranchi to Andrea de would refuse to believe 'that a creature of her own would have presumed to accept the government contrary to her command, without her secret assent,' or it would be thought that she could not rule her own subjects. The election, she said, must be cancelled with the same solemnities with which it had been published; 'the Earl, all excuses laid aside, must resign his authority in the place where he accepted it.'¹

Walsingham dared to suggest that it would be prudent to ascertain first the effect which such an order might produce in the States. Burghley said that for his own part he thought Leicester had acted honourably and well. 'But the Queen would not endure to hear speech in defence of him.'² Her passion against the favourite might have been palliated if in the midst of it she could have remembered her own duty. The troops enlisted in her name, which she had bound herself to pay, men with England's honour in their charge, were dying like sheep with the rot, their credit spent, and without means to buy food or clothes. Their wages, poor wretches, had been 'earth in their graves,' and she could not be brought to cast a thought upon them. Of the seven thousand sent over in August and September, more than half had perished, and while the temper was upon her not a penny could be wrung from between her clenched fingers.³

¹ Instructions to A. B., to be sent to Holland, February 10—20: MSS. Holland.

² Burghley to Leicester, February 7—17: MSS. Ibid.

³ 'There came no penny of treasure ever since my coming hither.

That which came was due before it

Before Heneage could set out Davison arrived. The Queen sent for him and received him with a hailstorm of invectives. When she paused to take breath, he told her resolutely that the States could not remain ungoverned; that no other government but Leicester's was possible; and that, 'for his own part, he would have been mad to have dissuaded an action so necessary to her service.' He produced no effect, and only drew the storm of her anger upon himself. A fresh burst of rage had been caused by a report that Lady Leicester, whom she hated, was going over after all with finer carriages than her own, and a train of ladies and gentlemen which would eclipse the English Court. 'This information did not a little stir her Majesty's choler, saying with great oaths she would have no more courts under her obeisance than her own.'¹ Heneage was going the next morning. She had driven Davison out of her presence. Daring her fury he went again to her, and with tears 'besought her to be better advised, laying before her the dishonourable, shameful, and dangerous effects of so unhappy a message, which would be utter ruin to the cause, and her own dishonour and undoing.'² She continued to storm and swear. 'She had nothing to answer except her old complaints.' She said 'the Earl might have had the substance if he would came. The soldiers cannot get a penny. Their credit is spent. They perish for want of victual and clothing in great numbers; the whole and some are ready to mutiny.'— Leicester to Burghley, March 15—

25: MSS. Holland.

¹ Thomas Duddleley to Leicester, February 11—21: Leicester Correspondence.

² Davison to Leicester, February 17—27: MSS. Holland.

have forborne the title.' Davison¹ asked her if she could suppose the King of Spain 'would make a distinction between the name and the thing.' She replied so savagely, that 'he begged to be allowed to retire from her service, and spend his days in prayer for her, as one whom salvation itself was not able to save if she continued the course she was in.'¹ With these words Davison left her, and she was somewhat staggered, for Heneage was told to wait for further orders. Burghley followed up the impression, 'moving her very earnestly not to send Heneage at all, or if go he must, to qualify the message of which he was the bearer.' She yielded a very little. She still insisted that he should go; but she left him 'discretion for the manner, though for the matter none.' She would have 'her offence declared.' She continued to stigmatize Leicester as 'one of her own raising.' She consented to spare him the disgrace of a public deposition; but she required the States to devise some method in which she could save the stained rag which she called her honour. Inconsistent as usual, and wavering under the alternate influence of her council and the ladies of the bedchamber, she agreed one day that 'in respect of mischief from a change,' Leicester might continue his government for a time; and afterwards that he might retain the power if he took no other title than Lieutenant-General for England. But in the long-run she stood by her point, and Heneage was despatched 'to do,' in the language of Sir Philip Sidney, 'as much hurt with honesty as any man for twelve months had done with naughtiness.'¹

¹ Davison to Leicester, February 17—27: MSS. Holland.

The de Looe and Lanfranchi negotiation March, meanwhile was no longer the entire secret which Elizabeth desired to keep it. The Prince of Parma, though he had not revealed the precise nature of the overtures that had been made to him, had hinted to the States that they were in danger of desertion, to tempt them on their side to make their separate peace; and the Hollanders, though they could not believe that they were really betrayed, were not to be safely trifled with. If they once saw clear ground for suspicion, the chances were that they would come to terms in rage and despair, and find afterwards a melancholy pleasure in helping Philip to wring the last penny of satisfaction out of the woman who would then be at their mercy. Leicester, though governor in name, had not dared to use his authority till his mistress had sanctioned it. Precious time was allowed to pass. Spanish reinforcements were pouring in, while the English were wasting in garrison, a burden on the cities in which they were quartered. Ominous mutterings were heard among the sulky Dutchmen of Flushing, who under any circumstances ill liked the presence of strange soldiers among them. 'I beseech your Lordship,' wrote Sir Philip Sidney to the Lord Treasurer, give your hand to sending over the moneys, or there will some terrible accident follow to the caution towns.’¹

¹ Sir Philip Sidney to Burghley, March 18—28: MSS. Holland.

Heneage was a good subject. ‘A loose and disordered estate needed no shaking,’ he said; ‘and an uncertain and mistrustful people required to be the more assured;’ Leicester, if he was allowed to continue in his position, might keep ‘the tottering course upon the wheels;’² and had Heneage dared he would gladly have kept his message to himself. But Elizabeth’s ill humour had rather returned in its force than been in any way appeased. Lord Warwick wrote from the Court to his brother, that she was about to make England the slave of Spain and leave religion to be crushed; against himself her malice was great and unquenchable, and he advised Leicester if he was recalled rather to go to the end of Christendom than return home.³

The Queen’s instructions to Heneage were positive;

¹ Sidney to Burghley. March 18—28: MSS. Holland.

² Heneage to Burghley, April 8—18: MSS. Ibid.

³ ‘Her Majesty may, if she will, bridle the rage of all her enemies, and she will not accept of it. This noble country of ours to be ruined for ever, yea and to become slaves to the vilest slaves in the world, and that which passeth all the rest, the true religion of Jesus Christ to be taken from us! Our mistress’s extreme rage doth increase rather than any way diminish, and she gives out great threatening words against yourself. Make the best assurance you can for yourself. Trust not her oath, for that her malice is great and unquenchable. Repose your trust in God, and let this be a comfort to you, that you were never so honoured in your life among all good people as you are this day. Have care for your safety, and if she will needs revoke you, to the overthrowing of the cause, if I were you, if I could not be assured there, I would go to the furthest part of Christendom rather than ever come into England again. Advise me what to do, for I mean to take such part as you do.’—Warwick to Leicester, March 6—16: Leicester Correspondence.

though characteristically, when the mischief resulted from it which every one foresaw but herself, she blamed him for obeying them.¹ He waited however as long as he dared. Leicester had sent over Sir Thomas Sherley with fresh explanations. It was possible that she might have reconsidered her resolution. But Elizabeth was never constant except in perversity. Sherley was kept waiting for a week before she would see him. When he was admitted at last, he found only 'bitter words' and threats to revoke Leicester altogether.

In matters of importance English officers spoke their minds freely, even to their Sovereign. Sherley said, like Davison before him, that the acceptance of the government was an unmixed good, and that after the expedition of Sir Francis Drake it was idle to be afraid of giving offence to Spain.

'I can answer for Sir Francis Drake,' the Queen said impatiently; 'moreover, if need be, the gentleman cares not if I disavow him.'

'Disavow my Lord, then, Madam,' said Sherley, 'and keep your favour towards him; no government is now possible in the States if you revoke my Lord, and harm will come of it'

She swept out of the room in a rage. 'To be plain with you,' Sherley wrote, 'I fear she grows weary of the charge and will hardly be brought to deal thoroughly.'²

¹ 'Fault is now found with me that I did not stay to proceed if the public cause might take hurt. I had warrant for the manner, but for the matter none, for done it must be.'—

Heneage to Burghley, April 8—18: MSS. Holland.

² Sherley to Leicester, March 14—24: Leicester Correspondence.

Heneage upon this delivered the matter with which he was charged. In a public audience and in Leicester's presence, he read a letter from the Queen to the States, in which she reproached them with having treated her with contempt. She did not indeed now insist on an immediate and formal degradation, but she required them to lose not a moment in finding means to relieve the Earl of an authority which she would not permit him to hold. If they refused he would be immediately recalled.

The original misgivings, the hints of Parma, and the scattering drops of rumour, received at once a fearful confirmation. The neglect of the troops, the dead inertness to which she had condemned the army, coupled with the eagerness which she had shown to get possession of the cautionary towns, was but too intelligible if the Queen meditated treachery, and was explicable in no other way. The traitors at the English Court could not keep their counsel. They sent word to their friends in Holland that 'the thing they hoped for was come to pass,' that Leicester was in disgrace, and that peace was coming. 'God forbid it should be so,' wrote Leicester; 'if it be true, her Majesty, her realm, and we are all undone, and too late we shall find the remedy.'¹

Still the English treasury continued closed. The soldiers still cursed and died. Argument and entreaty were powerless alike to move the Queen; and Burghley at last told her that he must resign his office, retire into privacy, and wash his hands of the shame and disgrace which he saw inevitably coming.¹ She was moved at the moment, as she had been when Davison used similar words to her. But the next day, 'seduced by some adverse counsel,' she relapsed into obstinacy, and into a humour which Burghley described as 'very absurd and perilous.'² 'I gather by her Majesty,' wrote a Mr Vavasour to Leicester, 'that an indifferent peace will not be refused, whereof you are only used as an instrument; for, talking with her Majesty of the necessity to put men into the field, to which I found her ears altogether stopped, especially blaming the charges, And what, quoth she, if a peace should come in the mean time?'³ 'We are so greedy of a peace,' said Walsingham, 'as in the procuring thereof we neither weigh honour nor safety.'⁴

¹ Leicester to Burghley, March 17—27 : MSS. Holland.

The danger was so very great if the States discovered for themselves that a treaty for peace was really in progress, that Walsingham obtained permission to let them know it, assuring them at the same time that they need stand in no fear of having their own interests neglected.⁵

¹ 'In the presence of Mr Secretary I used some boldness with her Majesty, and protested to her as a councillor that for discharge of my conscience and my oath I could not forbear to let her know that this course that she held against your Lordship was like to endanger her in honour, surety, and profit, and that if she continued the same, I prayed her Majesty that I might be discharged of the place I held, and both afore God and man be free from the shame and peril that I saw could not be avoided.'—Burghley to Leicester, March 31—April 10 : Leicester Correspondence.

² Burghley to Leicester, April 1—11 : Ibid.

³ Vavasour to Leicester, March 31 : Ibid.

⁴ Walsingham to Leicester, April 11—21 : Ibid.

⁵ Walsingham to Leicester, April 21 : Ibid.

Her consent to the confession being made had been obtained at an unguarded moment, and she found fault with Walsingham for having acted upon it. She had her own views of the States' real interests, and as their opinion might differ from hers, she did not intend them to have a voice in the decision. Sir Thomas Heneage, seeing how great was their anxiety, strained his instructions. He assured them solemnly, in his mistress's name, that she would keep her faith, and agree to nothing to which they were not parties. Elizabeth was furious at the supposition that she was responsible to the States for her actions, or that a promise, in reliance upon which they had placed themselves in her power, could be conceived to be binding upon her. She swore at Heneage for 'obliging her to more than she was bound or minded ever to yield.' 'Think you,' she wrote to him, 'that I will be bound by your speech to make no peace for my own matters without their consent? It is enough that I injure not their country nor themselves in making peace for them without their consent.'¹ 'Sir Thomas Heneage,' she wrote to Leicester, 'has gone too far in assuring the States that we would make no peace without their privity and assent; for our direction was, if our meaning had been well set down by our secretary, that they should have been only let to understand that in any treaty that might pass between us and Spain, we would have no less care of their safety than of our own.' 'Ministers,' she said, 'in matters of that moment, should not presume to do things of their own heads without direction.' She was impatient that nothing had at once been done in qualification of Leicester's title. 'Our pleasure is,' she concluded in her haughtiest style, 'that, all respects' or conceits of danger laid aside, you shall presently enter into consultation with the council of State there, how the said qualification may be performed according to our will, with reservation notwithstanding of the authority already yielded to you, carrying only the title of our Lieutenant-General.'¹

¹ Elizabeth to Sir Thomas Heneage, April 26: MSS. Holland.

She intended, she said, to do the Provinces good in spite of themselves. She conceived herself to be a better politician than all her council, and to understand the interests of the States more clearly than the States understood it. She meant to surrender for them the object for which they had been fighting for twenty years, and which alone had brought them to her side in opposition to their own Sovereign. When Burghley remonstrated with her, 'she grew so passionate as she forbade him to argue any more;' ² and Walsingham concluded at last, that 'her disposition was unapt to embrace any matter of weight.' Being, as she was, incapable of carrying on a war, and determined upon a peace which was likely to be a dishonourable one, he came to wish himself that negotiations for it should be openly set on foot, and that Leicester should have the conduct of them; then at least there would be no treachery, and

¹ Elizabeth to Leicester, April
26: MSS. Holland.

² Walsingham to Leicester, April 26: Leicester Correspondence.

no articles could be secretly concluded which would not endure discussion before the world.¹

Authentic tidings were now coming in of Francis Drake. All that he and others had said before of the vulnerability of Spain was more than confirmed, and the English, already vain of their hero, were raised to enthusiasm at the splendour of his successes. The effect in Europe was almost as considerable. The aggressive power of England had passed hitherto for nothing. The strength of its arm, if once raised to strike, became more correctly appreciated. The Antwerp merchants grew cautious of advancing money to Parma. Parma himself could not believe that there would be any more talk of peace on the terms offered through Andrea de Looe, and was as much gratified as he was astonished to find the Queen unchanged.

A second group of agents had by this time grown beside the first. Sir James Crofts had a cousin, named Bodenham, in some office about the Prince of Parma's person. From this man Crofts learnt what was going forward between Lanfranchi and de Looe, and having

¹ 'Seeing her Majesty is so inclined to the peace, and is found altogether so unapt to prosecute the war, I cannot but wish your Lordship to be a principal dealer therein, as well in respect for your own honour, as that I hope it will be performed with both honourable and profitable conditions, whereas I doubt if it pass to other hands it will not be so carefully dealt in.'—Wal-ingham to Leicester, April 21: Leicester Correspondence.

Again, May 23, Walsingham writes:

'I think now that the only thwarts your Lordship receives groweth out of her Majesty's own disposition, whom I do find daily more and more unapt to embrace any matter of weight.'—Ibid.

risked his neck in the service of Spain for many years, he did not like to see others step in between him and the fruit of his labours. Parma admitted his priority of claim, and promised 'that the doing and the thanks for the peace should not be taken from him when it was dealt in.'¹ Crofts had Elizabeth's ear, and it is possible that she herself, kicking as she was more and more against the restraint that Burghley laid upon her, was glad of another channel of communication with which Burghley had nothing to do. A second Italian merchant, named Augustin Grafigny, whose business lay between England and Flanders, was found to communicate with Bodenham, or to go himself on occasions to the Prince of Parma. Through Bodenham, Sir James Crofts apologized both for Drake's voyage and for Leicester's presence in the Low Countries. Walsingham, he said, and not the Queen was to blame.² Grafigny followed up Bodenham by assuring Parma that she would not only consent to peace, but was most eager for it; and said that he had been sent by the Queen herself, with the knowledge of part of her council, to tell him that if she could be otherwise assured, she would put in his hands the places which were in the occupation of the English, especially the fortresses in Holland and Zealand.³

¹ Declaration of the manner of treating of peace underhand to my Lord of Leicester, 1586: MSS. Holland.

² 'Esmerandose mucho en excusar a Reyna. assi de la yda de Drake á las Indias, como de la venida de Leicester, echando la culpa á Walsingham y á otros mal intencionados, y que ya la Reyna començaba á conocerlo.'—Parma to Philip, April 19: Quoted by Motley.

³ 'Se allanaran en volver y entregar á V. Mag^d lo que ocupan y

June.

These words, it will be observed, tally exactly with Philip's statement to the Pope, that the Queen had given him hope of assistance in recovering the maritime Provinces. The betrayal of the towns was from the beginning a necessary part of the transaction; but it had not before been so plainly expressed. There was a fear that if it was spoken of too plainly, the Prince might reveal what was going forward to the States, to show them the real character of the ally on whom they were depending; the States might very probably anticipate her by yielding altogether. But Philip was likely rather to close with conditions which would secure his triumph over England as well as over his own Provinces; the secret was not kept after all; a copy of a letter, containing a distinct account of what had passed, was sent by some one in the States council to Burghley, and he found his name mentioned as among those who were said to have approved. If Grafigny had really been sent with such a message by the Queen, Parma had no more to desire. The bitterly expressed anxiety of Walsingham is conclusive that the Queen was seriously meditating treachery; if she had not gone the full length of Grafigny's engagements for her, he was sincerely afraid that she would not stick at them, if she could not otherwise obtain peace.

This second entirely contraband negotiation Burghley determined at once to extinguish, before it had passed beyond his control. Bodenham brought to England a polite letter to the Queen from Parma, requesting that she would throw her proposals into form. He and Grafigny were called immediately before the council, where to their surprise and confusion they found Walsingham sitting at Burghley's side. They were cross-examined as if they were criminals, and having been employed by Crofts in a mission distinctly confidential, they knew not what to acknowledge or to deny.¹ Grafigny was asked if he had been sent to Parma by the Queen. He equivocated. Bodenham threw the message on the Controller of the Household. They were both bewildered and astonished. Burghley la Reine d'Escosse.'—LABANOFF, vol. vi. p. 280.

poseen, y en particular las fuerzas de Holanda y Zelanda.'—Parma to Philip, June 11: MOTLEY.

¹ Chasteauneuf, in a memoir on the state of England, says that the four leading members of Elizabeth's council affected to be of opposite parties, with their mistress's knowledge and sanction. Burghley and Hatton professed to be Spanish and Catholic, Walsingham to be French and Protestant, but in fact they were all agreed. 'Le Chancelier' (Hatton), he says, 'et le Trésorier ont toujours fait semblant de tenir le parti et favoriser les affaires du Roy d'Espagne, même des Catholiques, dans ce Royaulme. Le Comte de Leicester et Walsingham, au contraire, se sont toujours montrés grands Protestants, et fait paraître avoir affection à la France. Mais en effet le tout n'est qu'une dissimulation jouée du sçu de leur maîtresse pour tromper les ministres de ces Princes-là et ruiner les Catholiques Anglois et tous ceulx qui favorisoient

As regards the four ministers, this is probably true. Had Burghley's and Walsingham's letters to Leicester, had Davison's letters, and Sherley's and Warwick's, been written to be seen by the world, there would have been a chance that it was true also of Elizabeth, and that Sir James Crofts was her dupe. But if she was herself at heart a Protestant, she played the other part so skilfully that she deceived the very men who were represented as the parties in the illusion. She sacrificed her army in the Low Countries. She all but terrified the States of Holland into making a peace, out of which she would herself have been excluded. On Chasteauneuf's hypothesis her whole career becomes a tissue of gratuitous and blundering mendacity.

inquired whether they had promised in the Queen's name to surrender the cautionary towns. When they attempted to deny it, Burghley said he had a letter of Parma's in his possession directly saying that they had. They were dismissed in disgrace: the Queen's reputation was saved at the expense of her instruments; and for her own sake, and to neutralize the effect in Holland, she was compelled to deny publicly that she had sanctioned their overtures at all. Caught in her own net, and betrayed by her exaggerated eagerness, she was now obliged to confirm Leicester in the position which she had been so furious at his receiving, and was driven to undertake in earnest the cause which she had so far played with. She replied to Parma's letter, disavowing her emissaries and declaring her meaning to have been utterly mistaken. She said she had no intention of making a separate peace, and that she would defend the Low Countries till the King granted them honourable terms. She wrote to the States complaining greatly of the wrong which they had done her in giving credit to injurious reports. They ought to have known her better, she said; her honour was precious to her; and she was not so foolish as to conceive that there could be a sound peace between her and Spain, in which their surety was not comprehended.¹

'Your lordship may see,' wrote Walsingham, in describing what had passed to Leicester, 'the effects which are wrought by such weak ministers; they that have been the employers of them are ashamed of the matter.' Yet Walsingham still feared that the danger was not yet over. 'The desire of peace is so great,' he said, 'I doubt the answer will not be so honourable as were fit;' ¹ and the events confirmed his misgivings.

¹ Elizabeth to the States of Holland, June 15—25: MSS. Holland.

Back-stairs transactions can seldom be completely traced; it is only at points and intervals that the thread can be caught; and the impression which prevails of Elizabeth's political sagacity suggests that there must have been something behind, which, if known, would change the complexion of the story. If she was endeavouring to deceive Parma, her genius was unfortunately occupied; for the neglect of her troops was part of the game, and the part of it which most satisfied the Prince that she was in earnest. She let her soldiers die of famine; she distracted the States; she drove her truest friends into a frenzy of fear for her good fame. So vacillating had been her orders while the negotiations were pending, that what one day's post commanded the next unsaid. Champagne and Sir Thomas Heneage were alike at their wits' end.

'I fear,' said the latter to Walsingham, 'if matters pass not more certain, the world will judge Champagne's words to be over-true, that there is no Court in the world so odious and uncertain in its dealings as ours.'²

¹ Walsingham to Leicester, June 24—July 4: Leicester Correspondence.

² 'Et de vray c'est le plus fâcheux et le plus incertain negocier de cest Court que je pense soit au monde.'

'Help me in this business and advise me,' concludes Heneage, 'for surely I am weak.'—Heneage to Walsingham, May 17—27: MSS. Holland.

And a few days later :—

‘ I shall tell her Majesty, if I live to see her, that except a more constant course be taken with so inconstant a people, it is not the blaming of her ministers will advance her service or better the state of things : and shall I tell you what they now say here of us, I fear not without cause ? even as Lipsius wrote of the French :—‘ De Gallis quidem enigmata veniunt, non veniunt, volunt, nolunt, audent, timent : omnia ancipiti metu suspensa et suspecta.’ ’¹

This much is certain : there were two secret negotiations going on with Parma simultaneously, one in which the parties were Champagny, Lanfranchi, and Andrea de Looe, with the knowledge and under the direction of Burghley ; the other, conducted by Sir James Crofts, Grafigny, and Bodenham. The Controller having discovered that a treaty for peace was going forward, was afraid of losing the reward of his long treason, and had started a fresh correspondence on his own account. ‘ Grafigny had been sent before, that he might win the spurs.’² The interlopers were tripped up and driven from the field by Burghley. They had done their work clumsily, and had committed the Queen to a position which she was forced to disown.

Crofts, the real traitor, was thus for the time checkmated, but the mischief was not over. The October. de Looe correspondence continued. The

¹ Heneage to Walsingham, May 25—June 4 : MSS. Holland. | treating of peace underhand to my Lord of Leicester : MSS. Ibid.

² Declaration of the manner of | Queen hankered after peace as much as ever, and de Looe himself is next found directly writing to her describing an interview with Parma. The Prince had complained to him that Grafigny had wrecked the treaty by his officiousness. He professed himself as anxious as ever to come to terms, and de Looe said that he had told him that he must not construe the Queen's last letter too literally.¹ A ciphered fragment follows among the State Papers, in which there is a glimpse of treachery of another kind. Elizabeth was tempting Parma's loyalty to Philip, as Don John had been tempted before, by the offer of the Provinces to himself.² Again in the winter the negotiation for the treaty was renewed. Elizabeth chose to have it so, and could not be withheld; and Burghley kept his hand upon the strings, fearing only that he might be led in spite of himself to make dishonouring concessions.

On the 26th of December, de Looe in reply to a question from the Prince of Parma on the terms which the Queen demanded, answered that he would tell him what

¹ Andrea de Looe to the Queen's Majesty, October 20—30: MSS. Flanders. Endorsed by Burghley, 'His negociation with the Prince of Parma, after her Majesty had disowned Grafigny.'

² 'The point is that your Honour may make this foundation firm, sure; that the Prince of Parma for certain is not Spanish, but has a secret pretension in great colour for Portugal. Somewhat I have felt him. The words which were spoken between us would greatly satisfy, but time doth not permit. About the offer which your Honour did present him in the name of her Majesty, touching Holland and Zealand for him, I find him marvellous well-disposed; and I have the best way to have it uttered by way of conscience all I receive so and otherwise not.'—B. to—, October 29: MSS. Flanders.

he had himself heard directly from Cecil. She desired nothing but to see the Low Countries in tranquillity, subject to the Crown of Spain. She had seen the people driven to desperation by the violence done to them by strangers, and rather than allow them to fall into the hands of any other prince, she had interposed in their favour. For her own and her subjects' security she wished the Spanish army to be withdrawn, and the Provinces to remain under the government of the inhabitants of the country; and she required an engagement from the Prince of the King, that no attack should be made afterwards upon England. Nothing was said about religion, except as it might be covered by an expression of hope 'that the King would temper his hard dealing with benignity.' The question of the towns was cast into a new shape. The Queen was willing to waive her claims for expenses, the States themselves, she said, having given her sufficient security; the States Government, when it was re-established under Spanish authority, would repay her, and she would then restore them her guarantees.¹

Religion was treated of more distinctly in a body of articles which de Looe presented to Parma soon after. He undertook that the Queen would demand nothing on this point, but would be contented with such measures of toleration as the King of Spain could conscientiously allow.²

¹ Andrea de Looe to the Prince of Parma, December 26: MSS. Flanders.

² 'Che sua Ma^a si contenta di non stare altrimenti sul punto della Religione che d'obtinere del Re tanta

De Looe had exceeded slightly, though not much in this, the directions which he had received from Burghley. Burghley's own words show how nearly even he was prepared to abandon the real cause for which the Provinces were contending.

'In your letter of the 26th of December to the Prince of Parma,' he wrote, 'there was one principal point whereof I find no mention, that some order must be taken how the people in those Low Countries that have been so instructed in their form of religion, as either they never did know any other, or cannot without peril of damnation to their souls change their religion, might by toleration be provided for; for otherwise I told you, and I still think, there cannot be a general reduction of all the natural born subjects to their obedience to the King.'¹

He thought, he said in another paper, that the King might consent to the Pacification of Ghent, or 'remit the point of religion to the General States of the whole Provinces.' Eleven of the Provinces being Catholic, Philip might have trusted the matter in their hands: but it could not be. Champagny said that peace was impossible unless the settlement of religion was left wholly to the King. Burghley resuming a firmer tone answered, that there could be no sound conclusion till liberty might be obtained for the Protestants 'to enjoy tolleranza per Hollanda et Zellanda con le altre Provincie e terre al presente unite che potra concedere con sua salva consciencia e honore.'—Articles of Peace submitted to the Prince of Parma by Andrea de Looe, March 4: MSS. Flanders.

¹ Burghley to de Looe, March 7, 1587: MSS. Ibid.

their religion and exercise thereof ;' ¹ while the Queen, on the other hand, took on herself to supplement Burghley's directions by private letters of her own. 'I have sent her Majesty a letter from de Looe,' wrote Lord Buckhurst to Sir Francis Walsingham, 'whereby it seems that now very lately her Majesty has given him to understand that she will not insist upon the matter of religion, further than shall be within the King's honour and conscience ; whereupon de Looe takes no small hold. If she keep that course all will go to ruin, as I have written to her Majesty.' ²

How nearly she fulfilled Buckhurst's prophecy ; how, believing herself wiser than all the world, she again allowed herself to be led by Sir James Crofts, till she had almost delivered England defenceless into Philip's hands, will be told in its place. Meanwhile, the effects of her performances had already been sufficiently disastrous. While her own army was starving in quarters, for fear of widening the breach with Spain, Parma was sowing distraction in the States by revealing Elizabeth's double-dealing, and offering peace to themselves, on far easier terms than Elizabeth was attempting to secure for them ; at the same time he was putting out all his energies in the war, and showing them that the English alliance served them as little in arms as in diplomacy.

July. Ten months had passed since eight thousand high-spirited Englishmen had rushed across the Channel to prevent or revenge the fall of

¹ Burghley to Andrea de Looe, July 18—28 : MSS. Flanders. | ² Buckhurst to Walsingham, June 18—28, 1587 : MSS. Holland.

Antwerp. Had there been good faith and resolution, and had Lord Grey, or Sir Richard Bingham, or Sir John Norris been in command, twenty thousand Dutch and English troops might have taken the field in perfect condition. The States would have spent their last dollar to find them in everything which soldiers could need. They would have had at their backs the enthusiastic sympathy of the population, while the enemy was as universally abhorred; and Parma, exhausted by his efforts in the great siege, with his chest empty and his ranks thinned almost to extinction, could not have encountered them with a third of their numbers. A lost battle would have been followed by a renewed revolt of the reconciled Provinces, and Elizabeth, if she found peace so necessary to her, might have dictated her own conditions.

The position was now reversed. Half and more than half of the brave men who had come over in the past September were dead. Their places were taken by new levies gathered in haste upon the highways, or by mutinous regiments of Irish kerns, confessed Catholics, and led by a man who was only watching an opportunity to betray his Sovereign. Sir William Stanley, who had for some years been employed in Ireland, was called to London with as many Irish as he could bring with him. His ancestor, by distinguished treachery on Bosworth field, had given the crown to Elizabeth's grandfather. The inspiring example had perhaps worked upon his imagination. He too might play a part in a change of dynasty. He came over with a considerable force.

While in London he was in the confidence of the Jesuits. He knew part if not the whole of the Babington conspiracy. He corresponded with Mendoza, and contrived to communicate with Lord Arundel in the Tower. When ordered to the Low Countries, he made pretexts for delaying in London, in the hope that the Queen might be killed, or that the Spanish fleet might arrive from Cadiz. When excuses would serve no longer, and he was obliged to sail, he undertook to watch his moment, and when he could do most injury, revolt with his regiment to Parma.¹

Gone was now the enthusiasm which had welcomed the landing of Leicester. In the place of it was suspicion and misgiving, distracted councils, and divided purposes. Elizabeth while she was diplomatizing held her army idle. Parma, short-handed as he was, treated with his hand upon his sword, and was for ever carving slice on slice from the receding frontiers of the States. At the time of Leicester's installation he was acting on the Meuse. He held the river as far as Ven-mismo procurará hacer hasta que se tenga nueva della; y quando le sea fuerça yr en Zelanda, offrece el passarse en alguna buena ocasion al Principe de Parma.'—Don Bernardino al Rey, 13 Agosto, 1516: TEULET, vol. v. Mendoza's letter being written three months before the surrender of Deventer, proves that Stanley went to the Low Countries with a deliberate purpose of treachery.

¹ 'El Coronel sir Villiam Estanley es soldado muy experimentado y que ha venido por orden de la Reyna con mil soldados Irlandeses, los mas Catolicos, para pasar en Flandres, los cuales estan alojados al contorno de Londres. Á este Coronel le ha tomado la Reyna misma juramento tres veces de que le será leal: pero él por ser Catolico ha puesto achaque para no pasar en breve con sus soldados en Flandres, aguardando que viniere la Armada de V. Mag^d; y lo

loo. Venloo and Grave were in the hands of the patriots, both of them strong fortresses, the latter especially, on the defences of which the most elaborate engineering skill had been expended. After the fall of Antwerp these two towns were Parma's next object. The siege of Grave was formed in January. In April Colonel Norris and Count Hohenlohe forced the Spanish lines and threw in supplies; but Elizabeth's orders prevented further effort. Parma came before the town in person in June, and after a bombardment which produced little or no effect, Grave, to the surprise of every one, surrendered. Count Hemart, the governor, was said to have been corrupted by his mistress. Leicester hanged him; but Hemart's gallows did not recover Grave or save Venloo, which surrendered also three weeks later. The Earl, conscious of the disgrace, yet seeing no way to mend it, seemed to have abandoned hope—to have accepted the conclusion that the Provinces were doomed, and, being at bottom made of base material, notwithstanding gleams of a better nature at times showing in him, was willing at last to play into his mistress's hands.

He understood her at last, and saw what she was aiming at. 'As the cause is now followed,' he wrote to her on the 27th of June, 'it is not worth the cost or the danger. Your Majesty was invited to be sovereign, protector, or aiding friend. You chose the third, and if your aid had been indeed so given that these people could have been assured of its continuance, if your Majesty had taken their cause indeed to heart, they would have then yielded large contributions for any number of years, and no practices could have drawn them from you. But they now perceive how weary you are of them, and how willing that any other had them so your Majesty were rid of them. They would rather have lived with bread and drink under your Majesty's protection than with all their possessions under the King of Spain. It has almost broken their hearts to think your Majesty should not care any more for them. But if you mean soon to leave them they will be gone almost before you hear of it. I will do my best therefore to get into my hands three or four most principal places in North Holland, so as you shall rule these men, and make war and peace as you list. Part not with Brill for anything. With these places you can have what peace you will in an hour, and have your debts and charges readily answered. But your Majesty must deal graciously with them at present, and if you mean to leave them keep it to yourself. Whatever you mean really to do, you must persuade them now that you mean sincerely and well by them. They have desperate conceits of your Majesty.¹

Leicester probably was seeking pardon for his fault about the governorship, and understood the way to purchase it. It is true that a powerful party in England was opposed to interference in the Netherlands; and it is true also that the Queen, as the sovereign of a divided people, was bound in prudence to consider their objections. Before committing the country to a quarrel with such a power as Spain, there were doubtless serious difficulties to be considered, and the Queen might reasonably doubt whether England was equal to the encounter. But when all allowances are made, allowances even for the obliquities of her own disposition, no excuse, no palliation can be suggested, to the intentions to which Leicester saw that she was still clinging, and which he was willing to further in spite of his oath to be loyal to the States.

¹ Leicester to Elizabeth, June 27—July 7: MSS. Holland. Condensed.

Never at any time of her life could Elizabeth understand that her liberty of action was interfered with by engagements into which she had entered. Immediate convenience was uniformly her measure of obligation. The importance of Leicester's concluding advice was too plain to be neglected. If the States made peace for themselves, she was lost. In the interval therefore in which the negotiation with Parma was suspended, after Grafigny had been disowned, she sent a secretary, Mr Wilkes, to the Hague, to insist again that the suspicions of her were unjust. Wilkes, who knew nothing of what had passed, assured the States on his honour that the unfavourable reports were unfounded; and the States, willing to believe the best, 'gave her Majesty immortal and eternal thanks,' and were 'raised from despair to the height of joy and confidence.'¹ Leicester too was allowed to keep his office, and money—a moiety only of what was due, but enough for immediate purposes—was sent over to pay the soldiers. It came but just in time. Neglect and suffering had produced disaffection and desérption, and the garrison at Flushing was on the verge of explosion. 'Last night,' wrote Sir Philip August. Sidney on the 14th of August, 'we were at the point to lose all. The soldiers are four months behind in their pay, and if once they mutiny the town is lost. I did never think our nation had been so apt to go to the enemy as I find them.'¹ The army generally were on the worst terms with the people. Ill paid, they could pay ill for what they consumed, and it had been dangerous to take soldiers beyond the walls of any town in which they were quartered, lest the inhabitants, once quit of them, should refuse to allow them to return.²

¹ Wilkes to Burghley, August 7—17: MSS. Holland.

The incapacity of Leicester too was growing evident. He had been used as a lay figure to dazzle the eyes of the Provinces, while both he and they were mocked by the secret treaty. The treaty was hanging fire. Parma had the field to himself, and the administration and the finances of the Provinces went to wreck and confusion. In the English army there was neither order nor command. Leicester was played upon like an instrument by favourites and flatterers. He was the victim of the arts by which he had himself risen. He had quarrelled with his ablest officers—with Sir John Norris especially, who, if work had been meant, should have been in his place. It was recommended that Leicester 'should be in some honourable sort recalled under pretence that his presence was required in England,' and that commissioners 'of credit and judgment' should be sent over 'to settle the broken state.'¹ Leicester was at all events to retire. No one wished more heartily than himself that he could be rid of his thankless office. The coming of Wilkes however for the moment put all parties in better humour with each other. The treaty had been suspended and the Babington conspiracy, in which Mendoza was believed to have had a part, had been just discovered. The Queen had been 'marvellously distracted,' but had so far opened her eyes as to see that she was not improving her position by keeping her army idle; and Leicester, that he might not part with his government in entire disgrace, having done absolutely nothing, took the field for a short campaign in the middle of August.

¹ Sidney to Walsingham, August 4—14: MSS. Holland.

² Matters to be had in consultation for preventing the dangers like to ensue from the present state of the United Provinces, September 12: MSS. Ibid.

Parma had established himself in Gelderland, at Zutphen, and Duesberg. The States held Deventer, further down the Issel; but Deventer would probably fall as Grave and Venloo had fallen if the Spaniards kept their hold upon the river; Leicester therefore proposed to attempt to recover Zutphen. Every one was delighted to be moving. The young noblemen and gentlemen who had come over to break their lances on Spanish cuirasses, saw at last a chance of meeting the enemy. The Earl of Essex, Sir William Russell, Lord Willoughby, and others who held no special commands, attached themselves to Leicester's staff; Sir Philip Sidney obtained leave of absence from Flushing ; Sir John Norris and his brother brought the English contingent of the States army ; Sir William Stanley had arrived with his Irishmen ; and with these cavaliers glittering about him, and nine thousand men, Leicester entered Gelderland. Duesberg surrendered to him without a blow ; Norris surprised a fort outside Zutphen, which commanded the river and straitened the communications of the town. The English had been so long idle that their coming had not been counted on. The town itself was ill provisioned, and unless relieved might be starved into a surrender. The Prince, who was not in strength to offer battle, came into the neighbourhood to throw in supplies. Spies brought word that an attempt would be made on the morning of the 22nd of September. September. September, and the knights and gentlemen volunteered for an ambuscade to cut off the convoy.

¹ MSS. Holland.

No dispositions could apparently have been worse than those which Leicester made. The bulk of the army was to remain in reserve, in case the Spaniards came up in force ; and he so placed it that if there was to be serious fighting it could not possibly be of use. He expected that the waggons would be accompanied at most by a small detachment. Parma brought with him every man that he could spare, and the ambuscade party were preparing unconsciously to encounter four thousand of the best troops in the world. They were in all about five hundred, Essex, Audley, Willoughby, Sidney, Russell, Stanley, with their friends and personal followers, forming a single well-mounted regiment of extremely irregular cavalry.

The morning was misty. The waggons were heard coming, but nothing could be seen till a party of horse appeared at the head of the train where the ambuscade was lying. Down charged the five hundred, much as in these late years six hundred English lancers charged elsewhere, as magnificently and as uselessly. They rode over the Spanish horsemen. Willoughby overthrew a Spanish nobleman with his lance, and dropping it, plunged through the ranks swinging his curtle-axe and crushing skulls right and left of him. Russell, turning always where the cluster of the enemy was thickest, fought so desperately that he was taken for the devil. Philip Sidney, half armed—for at the beginning of the action he had lent the thigh plates of his mail to Sir William Pelham—rode three times through and through the Spanish squadrons. Never had been a more brilliant action seen or heard of, never one more absurd and profitless. For the ranks of the Spanish infantry were unbroken, the English could not touch them, could not even approach them, and behind the line of their muskets the waggons passed steadily to the town. Had the main army been within reach they might have been destroyed, or a valuable victory won; but the army was far off, with deep canals and watercourses intervening, safe out of the way of usefulness, and the young knights had to retire at last, having obtained ‘immortal glory’ and nothing besides, while the convoy of provisions made its way within the walls of Zutphen.

A few, not many, had been killed; but among those whose lives had been flung away so wildly was Philip Sidney. He was struck by a musket-ball on his exposed thigh, as he was returning from his last charge. Though the bone was shattered he sat his horse till he reached the English entrenchments. Thence he was carried to Arnheim, where the wound mortified, and in musical discourses on the immortality of the soul, on poetry, Plato, and the Bible, and the vanity of the world, his spirit sang itself swanlike away.

His father, Sir Henry, had died but a few months previously. Philip, who had married Walsingham's daughter, had left deeds uncompleted and papers unsigned which were needed in taking possession of his inheritance. The honour of serving Elizabeth was always an expensive one. Sir Henry had involved himself so deeply in his Irish government, that he had been obliged to decline a peerage, and Sir Philip had borrowed six thousand pounds to fit himself out for his service in the Netherlands. Walsingham had become security for the loan, and Sir Philip had left, as he supposed, sufficient powers for the sale of an estate, to hold his father-in-law harmless. It proved otherwise, as will be told hereafter.

Parma immediately afterwards entered Zutphen unmolested. An English garrison was left in the fort taken by Norris, in command of Rowland Yorke, a soldier of fortune, who, having been on all sides and of all creeds, happened at the moment to be in the service of the Queen. Deventer was left in charge of Sir William Stanley and his kernes, and the campaign, which had been like a blaze of straw, was ended.

Leicester's presence was found necessary in England.

With the natural sympathy of one worthless person for another, he had taken a fancy to Stanley, and chose to give him an independent command; and leaving the Government to the council of the States, and the army again without a chief, he sailed in November for London.

It was well for England, it was well for the Queen, that those who were intrusted with the interests and honour of their country were not all such as Leicester, and were not all within reach of her own paralyzing hand. Pitiful as the failure had been, it had not wholly undone the effects of the exploits of Drake; and another English soldier, who was far away and left to himself, had through this whole summer done timely service.

The destruction of the Geraldines, and the crushing of the rebellion in the Pale, had been followed by a mutinous calm, of which Elizabeth had taken advantage to stop further supplies, and to leave Ireland, according to her favourite theory, to pay its own expenses. The execution system, notwithstanding the fair promises with which Sir John Perrot commenced his administration, was continued with a vigour which seemed intended to clear the south of its remaining population. Sir William Stanley, then in command at Youghal, reported that he had hanged within a year, by order of law, above three hundred rogues, and had so terrified the rest 'that a man might travel over the whole country and none molest him.'¹

¹ Stanley to Walsingham, September 17—27, 1584: MSS. Ireland.

‘Give me fifty thousand pounds for three years,’ says Perrot, ‘and I will undertake to settle Ireland. Now is the time.’¹ Though the hanging ‘by order of law’ was undiminished, the Deputy recommended a political amnesty, and the occupation of Ulster, whose inhabitants had not suffered, by a strong garrison. To confiscation in the Northern Provinces he was opposed. He did not think it desirable ‘to take the chiefs’ lands from them or banish their captaincies, or alter their ancient customs, matters hardly to be endured by reasonable men.’² Religion, the especially sore subject, he preferred, unlike Grey and Sidney, to leave in abeyance. ‘A temporizing course was set down;’³ ‘there were not of the birth of the land forty Protestants in Ireland;’⁴ and the Queen, not caring to provoke resistance, was ready to dispense even in the Pale itself with the oath of Supremacy. ‘Touching the refusal of the oath of Supremacy by the gentlemen of the Pale,’ wrote Walsingham to the Archbishop of Armagh, ‘which your lordship thinks must be punished with severity, the matter hath been considered here, and in respect of their rawness in religion, making the oath a matter of conscience, it is thought not convenient they should be brought into it by compulsion, against their conscience, but won with time, by instruction, and labour of those to whose charge it doth belong.’⁵

¹ Perrot to Walsingham, October 20—30: MSS. Ireland. 1585: MSS. Ibid.

² Waterhouse to Burghley, October 23—November 2: MSS. Ibid. ⁴ The Archbishop of Armagh to Walsingham, July 8—18: MSS. Ibid.

³ Wallop to Walsingham, April, ⁵ Walsingham to the Archbishop Indirectly war was continued upon idolatry. Perrot, in a progress through Ulster, got possession of 'Holy Columbkil's cross,' a relic of miraculous power. He sent it over as a present for Lady Sidney or Lady Walsingham to wear at Court.¹ The Queen, either for this or some similar offence to the prejudices of the people, 'rebuked him for lack of discretion;' but her own application of the methods by which Irish Popery was to be encountered was at least equally unpromising. According to the theory, Protestant ministers ought to have been placed in the Church benefices, to teach and preach; but in 1587, between Dublin and Valentia, 'there was not a single church standing, except in the Haven towns;' ² and the incumbents, where incumbents had been appointed, could not teach what they did not themselves believe or understand. The livings were for the most part 'farmed' out to laymen, who either provided an Irish rogue to read the service, or obtained dispensations for themselves or their children, without pretence of orders, 'to hold benefices with cure.'³ of Armagh, December, 1585: MSS. Ireland.

¹ Perrot to Walsingham, October 20—30, 1584: MSS. Ibid.

² Considerations touching the state of Munster, 1587: MSS. Ibid.

³ 'There are here in that part of the country that should be best reformed (the neighbourhood of Dublin) so many churches fallen down, so many children dispensed withal to enjoy the livings of the Church, so many laymen, as they are commonly termed, suffered to hold benefices with cure, so many clergymen tolerated to have the profits of three or four more pastoral dignities, who being themselves unlearned are not meet men, though they are willing, to teach and instruct others, as whose beholdeth this miserable confusion and disorder, and hath any zeal of

The bishops, where their authority extended, emulated the rascality of the Crown farmers.

‘The ordinaries and patrons,’ wrote Andrew Trollope, whose accounts of Ireland have been already quoted, ‘have so ordered the matter as most ministers are stipendiary men. Few have five pounds a year to live on, the most not above four marks. In truth, they are such as deserve not livings or to live.’¹

From such seed as this no golden harvest was likely to spring. ‘The interval of quietness which now smileth on the State,’ said Sir Richard Bingham, the Governor of Connaught, ‘is even as a summer’s sun on a winter’s day, flattering and altogether unstable.’²

The single element which promised better things lay in the English settlements that were beginning to take root in Munster. The first commencement of colonization, ten years before, had called the entire South into rebellion; but the chiefs who rose in defence of their land were dead; their children were in exile, or were hiding in the cabins among the mountains. The Geraldines were gone; the properties of three quarters of the clans had been confiscated; and with some pretence of justice, where insurrection had been tried and failed, the conquerors entered into possession. Cork, Kerry, and Limerick were mapped out and divided on paper into blocks of twelve thousand acres each, to be held on God in his heart, must not choose but make the same known.’—W. ham, October 26—November 5, 1587: MSS. Ibid.

Johnes to Walsingham, July 14—24, 1584: MSS. Ireland.

² Bingham to Burghley, March 7—17, 1585: MSS. Ibid.

¹ Andrew Trollope to Walsing-

quit-rents under the Crown. Beautiful pictures were drawn, which remain among the curiosities of the Record Office, of model Irish properties: great squares with a church in the centre of each; at one angle the Lord's demesne, a thousand acres of park, with a handsome Elizabethan manor house; over against it, 'her Majesty's portion,' four hundred acres, set apart to maintain a police station. In a third angle stands the school, and the rest is divided into smiling farms, with solid barns and cattle-sheds.

So excellent, so inviting was the conception, that, desolate as the country was now represented to be, many an English adventurer was found willing to try his hand to convert it into reality. Walter Raleigh took a grant, and Chidley and Champernowne, and cadets of half the families in Somerset and Devon, Stowells, Chichesters, Pophams, Coles, Carews, Bullers, Harringtons, Warres, Hippisleys, and scores besides them. The names of those who accepted lands on speculation, to hold at secondhand by agents, have perished out of Irish memory; but others who went in person, and cast their fortunes in their new home, with the chances of it for better or for worse, took root and slowly grew, and became the means, they and those like them in Ulster afterwards, of giving Ireland some kind of stable order.

But many a storm had to pass first over their heads, and many a rude lesson to be learnt: one especially, the most essential and the hardest to accept, that the Irish were not wolves to be hunted down and destroyed, out a race of human beings, who had souls and rights like themselves.

Meanwhile, though Munster could not resist, and Perrot promised that there should be no confiscation elsewhere, the old alarm revived. The Jesuits' agents were busy in Ireland or elsewhere, fanning the sparks of discontent. Chronic agitation in Ireland was an essential part of the general Catholic scheme, that when the invasion came off at last the attention of England might be distracted; and neither the religious indifference of the Government nor the political amnesty allayed the suspicion of the Western and Northern tribes, who felt their existence threatened by the settlements.

The Scots too were a perpetual blister. The Highlanders of Argyleshire and the Western Isles were all Catholics, and at once devoted to Mary Stuart, and bent upon the appropriation of Antrim and Donegal, of which for a century they had been endeavouring to get possession. They had their own wrongs at Rathlin and elsewhere to revenge; and whenever the Queen of Scots' faction wanted to give trouble to England, a hint had but to be given to the MacConnells, and a thousand or two of redlegged Gaels crossed the narrow strip of water to the Giant's Causeway, to lend their swords to the Ulster Chiefs, or to maraud and plunder on their own account. The interference of Elizabeth in the Low Countries had created a universal expectation of war. Irish and Irish Scots were alike set fermenting by the reports which were circulating that the invasion of England was to be attempted in earnest at last. The small English force in the island was reduced by the demand of men for Flanders; and in the summer of 1586 the Connaught Burkes rose in arms, shut themselves up in their castles and in the islands on their lakes, and declared themselves in rebellion once more. 1586.

August.

Perrot had found the common fortune of Irish Deputies: with the best intentions he had displeased every one. The Irish council was split into factions. Perrot was a straightforward soldier, vain, passionate, not very wise, but anxious to do what was right; and he had to act with men who were either, like Archbishop Loftus, self-seeking scoundrels, or were linked in a hundred ways with Irish interests. When he would not lend himself to dishonest manœuvres, the council had crossed and thwarted him. In return he had sworn at them and insulted them, and quarrelled with them all, good and bad.¹

A Deputy so conditioned was in an ill situation to deal with a rebellion; more particularly as he had fallen out with the President of Connaught, Bingham, on whom the immediate duty of repressing it was thrown. He did not believe perhaps that there was danger. He took no steps to send assistance, and as the public service had been pared to the bone, as even the supplies of ammunition had been cut short, and Athlone Castle was without powder, Bingham was looking anxiously about him, when news came that three thousand Scots had landed at Lough Foyle, and were on their way down to join the insurgents. Bingham hurried at once to Galway. With his own money (for wages and allowances were as usual behindhand) he bought up all the powder in the town; and then, with such scanty force as he could scrape together, he went off at full speed to Sligo to intercept the Highlanders before they could reach Connaught. He found them on Lough Gill near Hazlewood. They were so numerous that he did not venture to attack them except at advantage. He fell back to Colloony, to the bridge over the Arrow, and laying wait there till they came on, he fell upon them at midnight as they were crossing the river, and drove them through the darkness into the black reedy meadows towards Ballisadare.

¹ 'If anybody petition that his cause may be heard before the council, the Deputy answers in a fury. What tellest thou me of the council? What care I for the council? They are all of them but a sort of beggars and squibbes, puppies, dogs, dunghill churles. Yea, even the proudest of them came hither with their hose patched on their heels.'—Loftus to Burghley, December 4—14, 1586: MSS. Ireland.

September. But they passed the Arrow at a ford near the sea; it was fine September weather, and the Scots being light of foot, and the ground being dry and firm, they slipped past Bingham into Mayo. They had reached Ballina before he knew what had become of them. The Burkes were but twenty miles distant, and if the two parties united the whole province would probably be in a flame.

Spreading a report that he was falling back to Athlone to wait for reinforcements, Bingham followed them by forced marches, and came up with them again when they were least looking for him, in a straggling camp on the bank of the Moy, with the broad deep river rolling in front of them.

It was the same misty morning of the 22nd of September when Sir Philip Sidney was receiving his death-wound at Zutphen. The Scots were five to one; but they were caught unarmed, unprepared, or sleeping. The loose-ordered clansmen, however formidable when they went deliberately into action with the pibroch blowing and the war-cry ringing, could not rally from a surprise, and were like a flock of frightened sheep. Hewn down under the English swords, run through with English lances, the horsemen wheeling round them, they were forced back in helpless masses upon the sedgy bank, where they were either killed as they stood, or, flinging away their arms, plunged into the water to be shot or drowned. Curiously, very few could swim. About a hundred reached the Tyrawley shore, and of those the greater number found the not uncommon fate of Irish sympathizers and were murdered by the peasants. Eight or nine hundred were killed in the meadow, and the rocks on the river's side above and below, as the tide went back, were fringed with the stranded bodies of the rest.

By this tremendous overthrow the long trouble with the Scots in Ireland was brought to an end. The Connaught insurrection collapsed like a pricked air-ball; and so deep and enduring was the impression left upon the Irish mind, that for three years at least, and those the years when Spain was to make its long threatened effort, Ireland was in profound peace.¹

¹ Bingham to Loftus, September 23—October 3; To Fenton, September 24—October 4. Compare the long and minute account in STOWE.

CHAPTER LXIX.

EXECUTION OF MARY STUART.

AMONG the causes which had made Elizabeth so unwilling to convert her interposition in the Netherlands into a serious war, had been the belief which she had held from the beginning of her reign, that the religious quarrels of Europe would be ultimately settled by a compromise. That the King of Spain should be willing to treat at all with an excommunicated Sovereign was a proof in itself that he did not hold the extreme theory of the Papal prerogative; and that he should have borne in patience to see an English nobleman placed at the head of his revolted Provinces, his colonies plundered, and even Vigo, a town on the sacred soil of the Peninsula itself, sacked and spoiled, showed that he must be extremely unwilling to go to war. In France, between the League and the Huguenots there was a middle party of conciliation larger than either, who were ashamed of the stain of St Bartholomew, and were honestly anxious to save their country from the envenomed conflict which threatened it. Even the Pope himself, in his dread of Spanish ascendancy, was said to be inclining to moderation.

There were still two futures apparently open to Europe, and one of them not more likely than the other. The Jesuits' theory was that no terms should be made or observed with heresy or schism. Those who had abandoned the creed of Rome, and those who had fallen off from its communion, were to be coerced into submission at the point of the sword. If these counsels were to prevail, there was nothing left but a Protestant alliance to oppose them. The Low Countries were the outworks of England, and the Scheldt was as much an English river as the Thames. But if these counsels were not to prevail; if the Catholic laity were growing weary of the struggle; if the misery of Christendom was producing in any considerable measure an inclination for a more tempered policy, then for England to throw its sword into the scale might determine the balance to immediate evil. Could Spain, vulnerable as she had been proved to be throughout her empire, be brought to consent to some imperfect toleration, even but for a few years, to give time for passion to cool, the peace at which Elizabeth was aiming might be pushed to a universal settlement; a General Council might meet under happier auspices, to undo the work of Trent; and European Christianity be re-established on a broader basis.

And there were many reasons for supposing that Philip would not prove implacable. Notwithstanding his gold fleets, he was financially ruined. The succession question lay in the way of the invasion of England, and in some form or other it was almost certain to involve him in war with France. Many of the English Catholics were unfavourable to the personal pretensions on which, if he moved, he was determined to insist; and the Pope, while equally cold towards Philip's claims on the reversion of the crown, was indisposed also to part with money. Walsingham and Burghley still believed that the probabilities were for war. They believed also perhaps that a compromise, if it came, would be no less fatal than persecution to everything which they individually most valued. Yet in the face of their mistress's objections it was hardly possible to carry through a determined course of action; she was incapable, as they perceived, of conducting 'any matter of weight,' and she refused to allow herself to be guided. They had both concluded therefore that, dangerous as it was, peace might be the wisest choice for her—peace however in reality, not in word and pretence—peace, which at least for a time would give the Provinces a respite from violence, and England security from invasion; not a peace which, after a few years of dishonourable quiet to England, while her natural allies were destroyed on the Continent, would be followed by a fresh rupture and a Catholic revolution.

The difficulty was to know the state of feeling of the Catholics generally—of the Catholic courts and the Catholic laity throughout Europe. Politicians and conspirators had become so skilful in the arts of falsehood, that the real intentions of any one had become all but inscrutable. No statesman living was better served by spies than Walsingham. He had correspondents in the College of Cardinals itself;¹ the Jesuit fathers in the French and Roman seminaries were made the dupes of their too successfully trained pupils, and pretended English converts, after saying mass in the chapel at Rheims, would cipher to Elizabeth's cabinet the secrets, so far as they could learn them, of their spiritual prison-house. Cherelles, the secretary of the French ambassador, was bought to watch his master; priests who were travelling disguised in English counties, with credentials from Allen and Parsons, were Walsingham's instruments, and communicated to him all that they could learn under the seal of confession.² Every Catholic family in England was thus under surveillance; the whereabouts of every seminary priest was known; the means by which they entered England; the friends who received them; the converts whom they recovered to the Church. The refugees on the Continent were watched with equal care, their letters copied, their whispered conversations caught and reported. Yet the accounts were contradictory, and no certain conclusions

¹ 'J'entends à mon grand regret des mauvais bruitz d'aucuns près de vostre Sanctité, que l'on dit recevoir gasge de cest estat pour trahir la cause de Dieu; et il y a des Cardinaulx y entaschez.'—Mary Stuart to the Pope, November 23, 1586: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

² 'Il n'y a College de Jesuites ni à Rome ni en France où ils n'en trouvent qui disent tous les jours la messe pour se couvrir et mieulx servir à ceste princesse. Mesme il y a beaucoup de prêtres en Angleterre tolerés par elle pour pouvoir par le moyen des confessions auriculaires decouvrir les menées des Catholiques.'—Mémoire de M. de Chasteauneuf: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

could be drawn from them. The protection which Elizabeth had so long received from the jealousies between France and Spain was enhanced by analogous differences among her own Catholic subjects. Philip, with all his care, had not been able to keep his views upon the succession a secret. The Catholic English aristocracy had always been the advocates of the Scotch title. The union of the crowns had been the weightiest of their political arguments. They now found themselves called on to sacrifice their country to an extreme construction of their religious obligations, and they were distracted and confused. The Jesuits were universally for Spain. Allen and Parsons knew no nation but the Church. They argued with Philip that even if James consented to be reconciled, no dependence could be placed upon an interested conversion. The most Catholic King, claiming descent from John of Gaunt, had already once been their titular Sovereign, and at his coming to England as husband to Queen Mary had brought with him the first reconciliation. They relied on him for a second and final one. They wished to see the proud English rebellious spirit crushed. 'They desired the Spaniards to be conquerors, and to live under their subjection.'¹

Those, on the other hand, who could not forget in their creed their loyalty to the country which gave them birth, so dreaded a foreign conqueror, that they began also to dread his assistance. English voices were heard saying in Rome, that the Queen would be tolerant if she were unprovoked, that the whole policy of the Jesuits was a blunder, and that English gentlemen, whatever their creed, would never willingly become subject to a stranger, or, if they could help it, allow his presence among them.¹ The English Catholics, as a body, had given Elizabeth no reason to complain of them. Though three-quarters of the nation they had endured the proscription of their creed. They had submitted to make professions which they disapproved, or they had paid for nonconformity by severe fines and by exclusion from the public service. They had seen their spiritual knights-errant from the seminaries imprisoned, racked, and dying traitors' deaths, and they had not rebelled. They had refused, with a few passionate exceptions, to sacrifice their country to their religion; and they had proved at once that they were not the dupes of a wild fanaticism, and that they could not and ought not to be permanently disabled from a voice in the administration of the country. On the other hand, there were many desperate and dangerous men among them—how many it was impossible to say. The Percies and the Howards were deeply committed. Half-a-dozen noblemen at least had concerted a rising in connection with the Duke of Guise, and others were supposed to be within the reach of temptation to declare on the same side. If peace there was to be, a real reconciliation between Elizabeth and the Queen of Scots must form a necessary part of it. To a person of Elizabeth's temperament, to whom the Protestant creed was as little true as the Catholic, who had a latitudinarian contempt for theological dogmatism, who believed in material prosperity, and order and law and common sense, a moderate settlement of her own and Europe's difficulties must have been infinitely tempting. Mary Stuart promised in words everything which even Walsingham could ask, but the possibility of concluding with her depended on the inner purpose of herself, of her friends, of her son, of Philip, and of the Pope. If the Queen of Scots was still treacherous, if the English Catholics were yielding after all to Jesuit influence, if the League was to become dominant in France, and if Philip's present willingness for peace was only a mask to throw Elizabeth off her guard, then to release her prisoner, to force the Low Countries into a treaty, to make any concession, even the lightest, was to disarm in the presence of the enemy.

¹ Factions among the Englishmen in the King of Spain's service, or resident in Rome or France, | August, 1587. Endorsed Secret Intelligence: MSS. Domestic.

¹ 'Et qu'ils ne tient soing d'user d'armes d'aultres, qu'ilz ne veulent et ne permettront que l'estranger entre en Angleterre.'—Père la Rue | to the Queen of Scots, November 24, 1585: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

The evidence on the two sides was so nearly equal, that it was hard to decide. If one secret letter spoke of the Catholics as divided, others reported them as heartily unanimous. The Queen's own council was split like the country, and she herself at variance with herself. So subtle was European diplomacy, that the most trusted agents might be secret traitors, the most seemingly exact information contrived only to deceive.

No one was more conscious of this than Walsingham, and he felt it imperatively necessary to obtain a clue to the Catholic secrets on which he knew that he could depend. Scotland was the open gate for the invader to enter into England. The Protestant Lords had been restored. The King spoke fair. He professed to be sound in religion. He said that he was divided from his mother. But there was no Earl of Murray in Scotland now who had been never known to lie. No Murray, not even a Morton. The Scotch statesmen were of the school of Maitland of Lethington, and James himself was the aptest of his pupils. There were those who said that he was a Catholic at heart, and that when the time of action came he would be at the disposition still of his cousin of Guise. What was James at heart? What was Mary Stuart? What were the English Catholics? What was the Valois King at Paris, on whose aid in the day of peril Elizabeth so utterly relied? What were the real intentions of her brother-in-law of Spain? Broadly, if she made peace in the Netherlands, was there or was there not to be liberty of conscience in Europe—liberty of conscience, if not of worship? or was England to be invaded after all in the interest of the Queen of Scots and the Pope?

There was one way, and perhaps only one, by which all these questions could be answered. The Queen of Scots must be again enabled to open a correspondence which she and her friends could believe to be perfectly safe, and her letters and theirs must be passed through the hands of Walsingham. Round her, so long as she lived, conspiracy whether European or English necessarily gathered. Nothing had been done in the past, and nothing had been projected, on which her advice had not been first asked and taken. She had agents at every Court, who took pains that at least to her every fibre of the truth should be known. Political correspondence throughout her residence in England had been the occupation of her life. So long as she resided with Lord Shrewsbury her servants had been under loose surveillance. They walked and rode where they pleased. They visited their neighbours and received visits in return. Both they and their mistress required their wardrobes to be replenished, their libraries to be supplied with fresh volumes from London and Paris. Luxuries and necessities came continually to Sheffield, and sometimes letters were inclosed in the frames of the boxes, or concealed beneath the linings or between the planks. Sometimes a small roll of paper was sewn into the hollowed heel of a new shoe or boot. Sometimes a set of handkerchiefs from the milliner would be written over with invisible ink, or again, ciphers intelligible to herself or her secretaries were noted on the margins of new books.

On her removal to Tutbury and the change of guardians all this was at an end. Paulet, himself a rigid Puritan, filled his household with servants whose faith was proof against corruption. Not one of her people was allowed to leave the castle without a soldier in close attendance. The coachman who exercised her horses, the almoner who distributed her charities among the poor, in vain attempted to evade Paulet's scrutiny. Nothing of any kind reached his prisoner's hands which had not been searched with an ingenuity which left no chance of concealment. She was permitted to send letters openly through the French ambassador, but they were liable always to be examined ; and except through this unsatisfactory channel she was cut off from all communication with the outer world.

It was certain that she would chafe under the restraint, that anxiety and the want of her usual occupation would render her confinement unendurable to her, and that if any avenue could be opened for her to which she thought she could trust, both she and her correspondents would instantly and eagerly avail themselves of it. Delicate contrivance was necessary. It would be unsafe to admit the castle officers into the secret, and the usual inspection therefore would have to continue, and be in some way evaded. Her own suspicions, also, would be excited if access to her was suddenly made easy. One letter or one packet would not be enough. What Walsingham wanted was a sustained, varied correspondence with many persons, protracted for an indefinite time—with the Pope, with Philip, with her son, with the Archbishop of Glasgow, with Guise, Mendoza, and the English refugees. In possession of this, he could either convince his mistress of her own unwisdom, or satisfy himself that she was right, and that the treaty might safely go forward. But the problem was an extremely difficult one. He must find some one who could obtain the confidence of all these persons, and induce them to trust him with their letters. He must in some way or other enable this person to convey the letters to the Queen of the Scots and convey back her answers. He dared not venture the experiment without Elizabeth's permission. She gave it, and she kept the secret to herself. It was impossible to say what strange revelations might lie before her. For all she could tell, for all Walsingham could tell, half her Cabinet might be found privately in the Queen of Scots' interest. Mary Stuart was the next immediate heir to the crown; Elizabeth had refused to allow her to be disinherited; and English public men were but mortal, and might have thought it but common prudence to make their peace in time.

The chief instrument had first to be found. Walsingham has not left on record more of the transaction than was necessary. It is possible that the plot which he set on foot was suggested by the person who undertook to execute it.

There was in Staffordshire a family of some standing named Gifford. They were related to the Throgmortons and other of the great country houses. They were uncompromising Catholics; and the father, John Gifford, for continued recusancy had been sent for to London and imprisoned.¹ Of his sons, one was in the Queen's

¹ The word prison as applied to recusants must not be understood to imply a dungeon, or any very unbearable restraint. Francis Mills, one of Walsingham's secretaries, thus incidentally describes the condition of a priest confined in the Marshalsea:—

'C. was with me last night, and tells me he was yesterday invited for his farewell to a banquet in the chamber of Lister, the priest in the Marshalsea, where among other guests were three gentlewomen very brave in their attire, two of them daughters to Sir John Arundel, the guard on service in the Palace, two others were Jesuits in the seminary at Rheims. George, called Doctor Gifford, was 'a priest and reader of divinity there.' Being a man after Allen's heart, and saturated with the genius of the place, he represented the spirit of his order in its most detestable shape. He was among those who, without the courage to attempt the deed themselves, were anxious that some one else should murder the Queen, and the Prince of Parma, in the expectation probably that he would induce his brother to act in it, gave him money to get the assassination accomplished.¹

In Gilbert Gifford the Jesuit training produced a character of a different type. He was taken from England when he was eleven years old, and the Order therefore had him entirely to themselves, to shape for good or evil. In age he was by this time about twenty-five, and looking younger, with a smooth, third the daughter or wife of one Mr Becket. There were also one Brown, a citizen, and one Mr Moore, with others. It was Magdalen day, and the priest catechised the company with the doctrine of Popish repentance, taking for his theme the story of Magdalen, absurdly applying the same to his purpose. You see how these kind of prisoners be by their keepers looked unto.'—F. Mills to Walsingham, July 23, 1586 : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

¹ 'Mr George Gifford was practised by Parma to kill her Majesty, and had received to that attempt eight or nine hundred pounds.'—Confession of Poley, August 8, 1586 : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

'Doctor Gifford, priest and reader of divinity in the English seminary at Rheims, did solicit me to have slain the Queen's Majesty, or the Earl of Leicester, which act he affirms to be of great merit, and the only means to reform the State; and a thing approved by Doctor Allen as he gave me to understand.'—Confession of John Savage, August 11, 1586 : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

beardless face. He had been ordained deacon, and had been reader of philosophy at the seminary; but being a good linguist he had travelled on the business of the Order, and at Paris he had made acquaintance with Morgan in the Bastile, with Charles Paget, his cousin Throgmorton, and the Archbishop of Glasgow. Having been at a later period of his life discovered in a brothel, he perhaps formed other connections also there of a yet less reputable kind, and either as an effect of looseness of life, or from inherent scoundrelism of temperament, he offered his services and the opportunities at his command to the English Government. In the spring of 1585 he was communicating in a tentative manner with Sir Edward Stafford, the English ambassador.¹ A little after we find him engaged with Walsingham.

So far as possessing the confidence of the ultra-Catholics he was everything that was to be desired. His father was a confessor. One of his brothers was the confidant of Parma and aspiring to regicide. Another was in a position, if he could be prevailed on, to assist in striking the blow. He himself was dexterous, subtle, many-tongued, and a thoroughly and completely trained pupil of the Jesuit school. He had already gained the regard of Morgan. To be trusted by Morgan was to be trusted by the Queen of Scots. On all sides he was exactly suited to Walsingham's purpose.

And he had one more qualification. Nothing could be done while the Queen of Scots 1585.

September.

¹ Stafford to Walsingham, April 13, 1585: MSS. France.

was at Tutbury. The approaches to the castle were too difficult, the guard too effective to be evaded. The Queen of Scots was clamorous to be removed, in the hope, poor creature, that she might find communication elsewhere less impossible. Walsingham, for the same reason, was equally anxious to humour her. Between the recall of Mauvissière and the appointment of M. de Chasteauneuf, there was a short interval during which there was no French minister in London. The moment was taken to close the last avenue which she possessed. She was informed that her packets must for the future be sent through Walsingham.¹ She lost little that was substantial by the change. The letters which she wrote to Mauvissière were always subject to be read, nor under any circumstances could she have trusted him with her political secrets. But she had been accustomed to pour out her private complaints to him. Through him she had independent access to Elizabeth's ear. It was felt, and Walsingham meant it to be felt, as rendering her isolation more complete, and irritating her eagerness to welcome a new opportunity without too curious a scrutiny.

The last letter which she had received from Mauvissière had wrought further upon her humour in the same direction. It had told her that James was becoming every day a more confirmed Protestant, and that he was on the most cordial relations with Elizabeth, to whom he had transferred the name of 'mother.'

¹ Heads of a letter to Sir Amyas Paulet, September 13—23, 1585: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

‘I found her,’ wrote Paulet, ‘marvellously incensed, renouncing all her former proffers, and protesting that fair words shall never persuade her to make the like again; that she is spoiled of her son by violence; and to entertain him in his course, she cannot be suffered to have intelligence with him. She could not satisfy herself with complaining, and in very sharp and bitter terms, having lost all patience, and crying vengeance against her enemies.’¹

Elizabeth made a favour of consenting to her change of residence, and accompanied it with a lecture on irritability. The Queen of Scots’ passionate and unthankful dealing, she said, deserved little favour. She had never entered into any treaty with her, but there was discovered some notable treason against her practised by herself or her dependents. She was not so weak and inexperienced as to be carried by anybody from what was agreeable to reason and honour. The Queen of Scots should leave those quarrels and temper her patience. If any prince but herself had received the wrong which she had received at the Queen of Scots’ hands, ‘she should not have been in case to have complained.’ Since however she disliked Tutbury, and the cold air might disagree with her in the coming winter, she should be removed to some more convenient place. Chartley Manor, the house of the young Lord Essex, was large, roomy, and well defended. Sir Amyas

¹ Paulet to Walsingham, September 8—18: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Paulet might look at it and report on its capabilities.¹

Now, Chartley had not only the advantages which Elizabeth described, but the Chartley estate adjoined the property of the father of Gilbert Gifford. Gilbert was familiar with house and grounds as boys only are or can be. He knew where the walls could be scaled for birds' nests, and where there were hiding-places which would baffle Paulet's sentinels. The household would have to depend for its supplies on the neighbouring town and farm-houses; and a Gifford, dear for his own sake, and dearer for his father's persecution, would find sworn friends in every peasant's cottage. John Gifford's own house would have been still more convenient. Walsingham mentioned it incidentally to Paulet as for some reasons preferable, and desired him to examine it, but without venturing to explain his motive.

Paulet, never guessing that he was traversing Walsingham's plans, objected strongly. The neighbourhood was ill-affected, he said, and the house itself without moat or wall, the windows opening into the garden, and difficult if not impossible to guard. Sooner than take his prisoner to such a place as that, he preferred to keep her at Tutbury.

Walsingham said no more. Chartley would do very well. It was large, warm, and well furnished. It was surrounded by water, and (no unimportant consideration) it was but twelve miles distant. 'You would hardly believe,' said Paulet, 'the baggage that this Queen and her company have of books, apparel, and other like trash; Nau and Curle (the two secretaries) praying me to make provision of eighty carts at least, and affirming that a hundred carts will not serve the turn; and yet they have no bedding nor other household stuff save the Queen's wardrobe, a matter of nothing.' ¹

¹ Elizabeth to Paulet, September 13—23: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Mary Stuart was delighted with the change, and utterly unsuspecting. Elizabeth's homily ^{December.} had worked her into a frenzy,² which Paulet had studiously aggravated, 'making her disclose her passions in writing which were far more violent in her speech.'³ He had affected to persuade her to remain at Tutbury, though Elizabeth had consented to her removal. He had made her only, as he probably intended, the more eager to go. She said if she was kept at Tutbury, 'she would die in her bad lodging, with other bitter words wherein she was no niggard when she was moved with passion.'⁴ She went Walsingham's way, believing it to be her own, and before Christmas she was comfortably established in her new home.

At once there dropped upon her, as if from an invisible hand, a ciphered letter from her faithful Morgan. Paulet had been taken into confidence, with Phillipps, Walsingham's secretary, an accomplished master of the art of cipher, and one other person whose assistance Phillipps had secured—a brewer at Burton who supplied

¹ Paulet to Walsingham, December 12—22: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Paulet to Walsingham, September 23—October 3: MSS. Ibid.

³ Paulet to Walsingham, December 12—22: MSS. Ibid.

⁴ Paulet to Walsingham, October 10—20: MSS. Ibid.

Chartley with ale. A separate cask was furnished for the Queen of Scots' ladies and secretaries; a hint was in some way conveyed to Nau to examine it closely, and when the ale was drawn off there was found at the bottom a small water-tight box of wood,¹ in which was Morgan's packet. It contained an introduction of Gilbert Gifford, as 'a Catholic gentleman, well brought up in learning,' on whom the Queen of Scots might thoroughly depend, and with whose assistance she might correspond with himself and with her other friends in England and elsewhere.² The cask came in weekly. The box reinclosed in the empty barrel would carry out her answers, and the chain of communication was at once complete.

The brewer had been purchased by high and complicated bribes. He was first paid by Walsingham; next he was assured of lavish rewards from the Queen of Scots, which to secure her confidence it was necessary to permit him to receive. Lastly, like a true English scoundrel, he used the possession of a State secret to exact a higher price for his beer.³ Phillipps came to reside at Chartlley under the pretence of assisting Paulet in the management of the household. Every letter conveyed to the Queen of Scots and every letter which she sent in return was examined and copied by him before it was forwarded to its destination, and Morgan's introduction of Gifford, which betrayed her into Walsingham's hands, was the first on which he had to exercise his skill.

¹ 'Gifford s'adressa à celuy qui fournissoit la bière pour la provision de la Reyne, la quelle à la mode d'Angleterre se porte toutes les semaines, et ayant faict faire un petit étui de bois creux, il mettoit ses paquets dans le dit étui bien fermé et les jectoit dans un vaisseau de bière, le quel le sommelier retiroit et le bailloit à Nau.'—Mémoire de M. de Chasteauneuf: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

² Morgan to the Queen of Scots, October 5—15, 1585: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. Deciphered by Phillipps.

³ Paulet's solid morality was scandalized at this last feature. 'The honest man,' he wrote, 'plays the harlot. He is so persuaded that I cannot spare his service that he has required an increased price for his beer in unreasonable sort; and that so peremptorily as I must yield to

Gifford himself, too young and innocent-looking as he appeared to Paulet for so involved a transaction, had organized his own share of it with a skill which Sir Amyas's blunter mind failed at first to comprehend. Sir Amyas thought that his remuneration from Walsingham ought to have contented him. Gifford, wiser than he, knew that gratuitous services were suspicious. He wrote to the Queen of Scots saying that he was honoured in being of use to her, but reminding her that he was risking his life, and capitulating for a pension.¹ At points between Burton and London, he had found Catholic gentlemen with whose assistance the correspondence could be transmitted. They were told no more than that the packets contained letters of supreme importance to the cause. One of them, who resided nearest to Burton, received a his asking or lose his service. I think his new mistress and her liberal rewards do make him weary of other service.'—Paulet to Walsingham, May 25—June 4, 1586: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

¹ 'Surely I do not mistrust the fidelity of your friend, but I fear lest his young years and want of experience have not been answerable to his will, and that for want of judgment he hath played the wanton in writing to this Queen. He hath capitulated with her for pensions, and I cannot tell what.'—Paulet to Walsingham: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. Undated.

bag weekly from the brewer, and carried it on to the next, by whom it was again forwarded. So it was passed from hand to hand to the Jesuit agency in London. The treachery was at Chartley only. From the time that the letters left the brewer's house, they were tampered with no more. The London Jesuits receiving them by their confidential channel, and little dreaming that they were transcribed already, distributed them to their ciphered addresses, and returned answers in the same way, which again, after inspection by Phillipps, were deposited in the cask. Gifford was at first upon the spot and active in person, but when the road was once established, he was needed no more. He went abroad again to see Morgan, and gather information wherever he was trusted. In his absence his cousin took his place, as an unconscious instrument of the ruin of the lady whom he worshipped as his Queen. All parties in the correspondence had special designations. In the letters of Mary Stuart, Gilbert passed by the name of Pietro ; the cousin, of Emilio. Between Paulet and Walsingham the brewer was christened in irony 'the honest man ;' Gilbert was Walsingham's 'friend ;' and the cousin, the 'substitute.'

Six persons only were in possession of the full secret: Elizabeth and Walsingham, by whom the plot had been contrived ; Gifford and the brewer, who were its instruments ; Phillipps, by whom the ciphers were transcribed and read ; and Paulet, whom it had been found necessary to trust. All the rest were puppets who played their part at the young Jesuit's will. The ciphers threatened at first to be a difficulty. Phillipps was a practised expert, and with time could perhaps have mastered all of them. But time was an element of which there was none to spare, where a correspondence was to be watched but not detained, and where a delay in the transmission might lead to discovery. The overconfidence of Morgan however in Gifford's probity deprived the unlucky Mary of this last protection. Fearing that his old ciphers might have been discovered, he drew fresh tables, not for his own use only but for the whole party of the Paris conspirators, for Guise, for Mendoza, for the Archbishop of Glasgow, for Paget, and for Arundel ; and he forwarded duplicates to the Queen of Scots. The key of his own, which unlocked the rest, he gave to Gifford to carry to her, and the very first letter which she availed herself of her recovered opportunity to write, was in this identical cipher. It was to 'Pietro's father,' old Gifford, who was in the Tower, full of tender consolation, and of promises that if ever she became his sovereign, his own and his son's services should not be forgotten.¹

The very inmost secrets of the Catholic confederacy were now open to Walsingham's inspection. The papers which he was about to see were from the persons at whose instigation, if England was really to be invaded, the enterprise would be set on foot. Here there would be no blinds, no purposely falsified intelligence, no hasty rumours suggested by fear or hope or fond imagination. The exact truth would be told to the

¹ The Queen of Scots to Pietro's father, December, 1585; MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Queen of Scots, and she herself in time would reveal her most inward purpose. It would be ascertained now whether he or Elizabeth had been right. If Spain was still deaf to Jesuit entreaty, the Queen might pursue safely her own policy of peace, and no objection could be reasonably made.

The first prize was an accumulation of ciphers from Morgan, Paget, Père la Rue, and the Archbishop of Glasgow, which had been lying at the French Embassy unforwarded for want of opportunity. Some of them, those especially from La Rue, have been already quoted, and were, on the whole, calculated to justify Elizabeth's view. They showed the Catholic Powers uncertain and divided, Spain still afraid to move for fear of France, Mary Stuart herself distrusted, the Pope undecided, Philip embarrassed by the succession question, and the persistence of James in heresy made the most of as an obstacle to interference.

Leicester was by this time gone to the Low Countries. It was too late to recall him. It was not too late to prevent him from exasperating Philip by mischievous activity; and thus had grown the vacillations and perplexing movements of the winter and spring. What would be the effect of Leicester's acceptance of the government? what of Drake's exploits in the West Indies? If in the face of such affronts and injuries, the Catholic King remained impassive, there must be either conscious weakness which it would be needless to fear, or there must be a sincere desire for peace, which it would be unjust and foolish to refuse to reciprocate.

A letter from Morgan of the 18th of January, written as soon as he knew for certain that Gifford had found the way to deliver it, must have been opened with the deepest anxiety. It was to the same purpose as those which had gone before. Spain had as yet made no sign. Morgan said that he had written to Lord Lumley desiring him to keep up the spirits of his party, but that he had received no answer. 'There was decay in the Queen of Scots' service.' 'Men had drawn marvellously back, at home by the tyranny of the time, and by the hardness of princes abroad.' The Pope wished well to her, but was powerless. The King of France would do nothing to offend England, and would allow nothing to be done. He had revoked the toleration edict, but his secret effort was to break the neck of the League, and shake the credit of the Duke of Guise. He feared the Huguenots less than he distrusted the House of Lorraine, and therefore Morgan concluded, though it went to his heart to say so, that nothing could be done for her; he could but pray, as the sole refuge of conscious impotence, that God would mend all.¹

The letters which followed were not more encouraging. Charles Paget informed the Queen of Scots, on the 14th of February, that he and the other English refugees were in great distress. The pensions promised them by Philip had not been paid, and they were quarrelling over the succession to the crown. The Archbishop of Glasgow and Guise were in favour of James. The English exiles were suspected of inclining to Spain, and were looked on coldly at the French Court in consequence.¹

¹ Morgan to the Queen of Scots, January 18 — 28: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. Decipher. This letter contains a curious passage, which some one marked with a finger ☞. 'William Cecil' (Burghley's grandson) 'is become a Roman Catholic, and hath been at Rome, and hath done obedience to his Holiness, and was well respected there. But this is kept secret. He is the heir of Burghley's house.'

The Archbishop of Glasgow, at the end of March, was still more despondent. The hopes formed of Scotland, he said, had been thwarted by the Master of Gray. Guise was too much occupied in France to attend to England. The French King had at one time seemed better disposed, but it was only a feint to discover the intentions of Guise, and when asked directly for assistance, had refused to give it. No resolution had been formed by any one,² and 'the enterprise' was in abeyance. Mendoza, the Archbishop said, laid the blame on the French Government. The King of Spain was unable to undertake anything, lest he should have France as well as England on his hands.

Again Morgan reported that 'the French King had been at hand with the Pope, to provide that nothing be attempted against England ;'³ and Mendoza him-

¹ Charles Paget to the Queen of Scots, February 14—24: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. Decipher.

² 'Le Roy refuse ce que luy-mesme avoit acheminé; sérieusement rien a esté fait ni resolu de la dicte entreprise.' — The Archbishop of Glasgow to the Queen of Scots, March 21—31: MSS. MARY QUEEN

OF SCOTS. Decipher.

³ Morgan to the Queen of Scots, March 31: MSS. Ibid. In this letter for the first time there is an allusion to Leicester, which though it throws no light on the effect of his proceedings on Philip, must have edified Elizabeth.

'Leicester, like himself, hath self bore his personal testimony to the same purpose.

‘The King of France and the Queen-mother,’ he wrote, ‘are not only not inclined April. to assist in the reduction of England and the punishment of the present occupant of the throne, but they are determined to defend her and stand by her. They have requested the Pope to discountenance all violence, and to cease to urge the invasion upon Spain, lest it provoke a heretic league, and lead thus to general confusion. I hope in God that he will soften the hearts of these people. They are now as hard as stones.’¹

It was the old story. Not a single obstacle had been removed. France and Spain stood where they had always stood, warning each other off from interference; and, instead of preparing to revenge upon Elizabeth his own and the Church’s wrongs, Philip had only aggravated the natural difficulties of the position. His taken the government of Holland and Zealand in his own name, contrary to his commission, whereupon she of England stormed not a little, terming him traitor and villain, and there be instruments that help to push forward this subject to his ruin (underlined in the original and marked ). He takes the matter upon him as though he were absolute King, and has many personages of good place out of England, the best number whereof desire nothing more than his confusion.’

¹ ‘Solamente diré no está la voluntad del Rey de Francia y su madre no solo prompta para la reduccion

de Inglaterra y castigo de la Reyna que la posee, pero paran tan de su parte para defendelle y oponerse que no haya execucion. Pues han hecho por medio del Cardinal d’Este decir á su Santidad no inste al Rey mi Señor que haga la impresa de Inglaterra, porque esto seria causa acordarse con los hereges de su Reyno y de otras provincias para el defendelle. Espero en Dios que ha de ser servido de ablandar el pecho deste Rey de Francia y su madre que tan empedernescidos se muestran en este particular.’—Mendoza to the Queen of Scots, April 4. Decipher: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

manœuvres to secure the succession had divided the English, had alienated the Scots, and, if persevered in, threatened to unite the Guises with the French Crown in opposition to him. Elizabeth's insight had been so far justified, that the conditions really existed for a favourable settlement with her brother-in-law; and in her endeavours after peace, which were never more strenuous than at this moment, she at least had a real foundation to go upon.

But she had to do with a party who were not inclined to sit down under disappointment. Alva had told the English Catholics fifteen years before, that if they wanted Spain to help them, they must first help themselves; and he had indicated the way in which they should proceed. Again and again they had tried and failed; but there had been many failures with the Prince of Orange, and yet there had been success at last, and Gerard's successful shot was an enduring encouragement to persevere. Elizabeth's life was the only obstruction. When Elizabeth was dead, every Catholic gentleman in England would take arms for her lawful successor. Elizabeth dead, the enchantment which paralyzed their combination would cease of itself, while infinite ducats in this world and paradise and canonization in the next were waiting for the Ehud or the Judith who would rid the saints of their oppressor.

May. It was at this moment, subsequent to Mendoza's desponding letter, and before the end of the first week in May, that the famous Babington conspiracy organized itself into shape. It has been represented as set on foot by Walsingham, to tempt the Queen of Scots to ruin herself. It was utterly unconnected in its origin either with him or with his instruments. The channel of communication which Gilbert Gifford had opened was made use of by the conspirators, but the purpose had no existence in Walsingham's original design, nor does it appear that Gifford himself was even trusted with the secret, or was more than partially, accidentally, and externally connected with either Babington or his accomplices.

The reader will remember a knot of devout young gentlemen who entertained Campian at his coming to London, and formed themselves into a society for the protection and support of the Jesuits. One of these, Anthony Babington, of Dethick, in Derbyshire, a person of considerable fortune, had been a page at Sheffield, when the Queen of Scots was first in charge of Lord Shrewsbury, and like so many others who came within the spell of her influence, he became passionately devoted to her and her cause. Experience had not taught Elizabeth the imprudence of filling her household with Catholics. Their handiwork can be for ever traced behind the scenes, betraying the secrets or thwarting the policy of her ministers. She had seen once already in Doctor Parry, that her generous confidence was no security against treason. She was about to be rewarded with a concluding illustration that human obligations are but as straws before the fascinations of theology; that there is no villany which religious temptation will not sometimes elevate into the counterfeit of virtue.

Young Catholics of good family were always certain of a warm welcome at Court; and it was among these and in the household itself that Babington sought and found the friends who were to unite with him in his country's liberation. The original instigator appears to have been John Ballard, one of the two Jesuits who had sought and obtained the sanction of Gregory XIII. to the Queen's murder, and who had since clung to his purpose with the tenacity of a sleuth-hound. In the preceding September, when the interference in the Low Countries was first resolved on, taking advantage of the irritation which was certain to be felt in the Catholic and semi-Catholic families, Ballard had travelled through England under the name of Captain Fortescue, disguised as an officer with blue velvet jerkin and cap and feather. He had penetrated every county, and conversed with every gentleman who could be trusted. In all he had found the same feeling—regret, perplexity, and exasperation—an ardent desire in Catholic and schismatic¹ to see England reunited to the Church, and a readiness still to rise in insurrection if they saw their way to success. The impression of Ballard was the very opposite to Morgan's. The nobles and the leading gentry, so far as Ballard could gather, had never been more earnest. Lord Henry Howard, Lord Arundel, and his brother, appeared still eager to hacienda, por no perdella, les hace, obedeciendo las leyes de la Reyna, ir á las perversas platicas y á algunos recibir la abominable communion.' —Mendoza al Rey, 27 Setiembre: TEULET, vol. v.

¹ Philip asking for an explanation of the word schismaticos, as applied to a party in England, Mendoza answered, 'Ellos conocen la verdadera religion y profesan en sus coraçones, pero el amor de la

revenge the execution of the Duke of Norfolk. Arundel, though a prisoner, let him know that he had means to make himself master of the Tower; while his uncle Lord Henry undertook to raise the eastern counties. A young Percy, calling himself Earl of Northumberland, Lord Strange, the heir of the house of Stanley, Lord Stourton, Lord Darcy, Lord Compton, Lord Windsor, Sir John Constable, and others besides, had bound themselves by some kind of oath to stand by each other and the Church. Sir William Courtenay had promised to seize Plymouth. Lord Montague, Lord Vaux, Sir T Tresham, Sir Thomas Fitzherbert, Sir William Catesby, Sir William Southwell, were ready to join in a revolt; when once it had broken out; and Claude Hamilton and Lord Maxwell might be depended on with an army of Scots.

It was the same confederacy which had been many times formed and dissolved as often. Ballard spoke of promises.¹ He represented all these persons as having pledged themselves to take arms if they could depend positively on assistance from Spain. There was however this peculiarity in the present combination—in the opinion of Mendoza, that which made it so peculiarly promising—that the first step was to be the killing of the Queen. An insurrection against Elizabeth living was found impossible to bring about. With Elizabeth dead, every Catholic would feel not permitted only, but bound in honour and duty, to take arms for her lawful heir. And this time the deed was to be actually done. Ballard, after having completed his tour, and sketched a plan for the assassination, went to Paris, and consulted Mendoza; and Mendoza, with apparently no consciousness that he was relating anything particularly atrocious, told Philip that no scheme so likely to be successful had ever been formed for the recovery of England; that there was no longer any occasion to watch for opportunities; six of the Queen's own attendants had undertaken to kill her, who had access to her presence at all hours and places.¹ They were ready to stab her if necessary under the cloth of state itself. They waited only till means had been provided for the escape or rescue of the Queen of Scots at Chartley, and till either the Prince of Parma, or a fleet from Lisbon, was ready to strike in at the moment of the confusion.

¹ Mendoza to Philip, August 13: TEULET, vol. v.

As Ballard told his story to the Spanish ambassador, it seemed as if all Catholic England was a party more or less directly to the intended villany. No suspicion however could be more unjust. A few, a very few persons only beyond the principals, were aware that Elizabeth's life was aimed at; and the promise of insurrection was probably no more than a declaration of the party in favour of the Queen of Scots' claims on the succession, and an engagement to support those claims by arms if disputed by the Protestants.

The other part of the account however, even to the basest details of it, was perfectly correct. It was shamefully true, that a body of gentlemen, some of them sworn servants of the Queen, others connected directly or indirectly with the Court, had bound themselves to abuse the peculiar confidence which the Queen had placed in them and kill her. Babington, instigated by Ballard, had found accomplices in Charles Tilney one of her gentlemen pensioners; in Edward Abington the son of her under treasurer; in Jones the son of the master of the wardrobe; in Dunn who was in the First Fruits Office; in Robert Barnwell an Irishman who was on a visit to the Court; and in other young men of family whom she had encouraged to come about her—Chidiock Tichbourne, Edward Charnock, Edward Windsor Lord Windsor's brother, Sir Thomas Gerrard, and Thomas Salisbury who at one time had been a follower of Leicester. One only of the six spoken of by Mendoza, John Savage, was free from this exceptional and peculiar baseness. Savage had been a soldier under Parma. He had passed through Rheims on his return to England, where Gilbert Gifford's brother George had set his mind running upon regicide; and finding what was going on, he volunteered to join the conspiracy.

¹ 'Á que se han ofrecido y acordado seys gentilhombres criados de la Reyna y que andan de las puertas | adentro.'—Mendoza al Rey, 3-13 Agosto: TEULET, vol. v.

The plan was to dispatch the Queen first, and afterwards Cecil, Walsingham, Hunsdon, and Sir F. Knowles; and this being done, and the strength of the Protestant party being in the Low Countries, the sanguine Mendoza imagined that the revolution would be accomplished on the spot. He made light of difficulties in his eagerness to be revenged for his expulsion. He wrote enthusiastically to Philip, entreating him to give the conspirators his support; and through Ballard, and by a letter, he sent them his own warmest encouragement to persevere in an enterprise so Catholic and so worthy of the ancient English valour.¹

Having done his work in Paris, Ballard returned to England to report Mendoza's answer. Before he went however, he saw Charles Paget and let him know generally that an insurrection was about to break out. He saw Morgan in the Bastile, to whom he told everything; and Morgan introduced him to Gilbert Gifford, as an instrument through whom communication was possible with the Queen of Scots.

If there was a person from whom the conspiracy ought most carefully to have been concealed, that person was Mary Stuart. She could herself do nothing, and to acquaint her beforehand with so dark a purpose was to expose her to gratuitous danger, and was to ask her for a direct sanction which she could not honourably give. Paget wrote to tell her that a rebellion was not unlikely, that the Prince of Parma might be looked for at Newcastle or Scarborough, and that means would be taken to ensure her own safety.² If he knew more he was prudently silent. Morgan, who was aware of her digna de animos tan Catolicos y del antiguo valor Ingles.'—Mendoza al Rey, 13 Agosto: TEULET, vol. v.

¹ 'He hecho el acogimiento al gentilhomme que merecia semejante propuesta, y por ser tan Christiana, justa, y aumento de nuestra santa fe Catolica y servicio de V. Mag^d, les he escrito dos cartas por diferentes vias, animandoles á la empresa como

² Charles Paget to the Queen of Scots, May 19—29: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

rashness, and who must have or ought to have guessed that she would be untroubled with weak scruples, had the singular imprudence to introduce Babington to her, to mention him to her as a person whom she had once known who was about to do her service, and to send her a cipher of which he had given the duplicate to Babington himself.¹ He did not at first enter into details, but he gave mysterious hints that there was something in progress, besides and beyond a mere insurrection. He mentioned Ballard's name as concerned in it. In momentary caution he said that he had advised Ballard not to write to her about it; and he advised her in turn, whatever she might hear, to hold no intelligence with Ballard, 'for fear if he or his partners were discovered, they might by pains discover her Majesty to have had dealings with them:' but he had the inconceivable imprudence to add in a postscript to Curle, which it was certain that the Queen of Scots would see:—

'There be many means in hand to remove the beast that troubles all the world.'²

And even this was not enough. He was so delighted for Mary Stuart's sake, that he could not but make her the sharer herself of the happy secret. A few days later he told her plainly 'that there were good members attending upon opportunity to do the Queen of England a piece of service which, if it pleased God to lend assistance, he trusted would quiet many things.’¹

June.

¹ Morgan to the Queen of Scots, May 7—17: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Morgan to the Queen of Scots, June 14—24: MSS. Ibid.

These letters were forwarded to Chartley by the route which Walsingham had opened. Gifford, though he accompanied Ballard from Paris to England, was personally ignorant of what was going forward. It was not till afterwards that he learnt it in conversation from Ballard himself. Though he probably saw Walsingham in London therefore he had nothing of moment to make known to him. But the letters themselves, as they passed into Phillipps’s hand, told their own story; and it must have been with profound curiosity that both Walsingham and Elizabeth must have watched for the effect upon the Queen of Scots.

She herself, happy in the removal to Chartley and the secret access which she possessed once more to the outer world, had recovered her health and spirits. She had been treated with unusual indulgence. Her legs had swollen in the winter, and on her first arrival she had been unable to walk; but as the spring came on she was driven out in a carriage or was wheeled in her chair through the garden. We catch a glimpse of her enjoying ‘a duck hunt’ in one of the ponds;² and when summer came her spirits lifting her body, she was able to mount her horse again and gallop with the hounds, or strike a deer with a crossbow.³

¹ Morgan to the Queen of Scots, July 19—29: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Paulet to Walsingham, June 3—13.

³ ‘God, I praise him continually, hath not set me so low but that I am able to handle my crossbow for killing a deer, and to gallop after the hounds on horseback.’—

The general political news which reached her was less entirely discouraging. Claude Hamilton, whom Elizabeth had restored with Angus and Mar, was as active in her favour as when he charged up the hill at Langside, and was sanguine that if England was held in check, he could at any moment be master of Scotland and its King. James himself was in appearance hopelessly English. The long-talked-of League between him and Elizabeth was at last completed. There had been infinite haggling over the details. The Scots insisted on a quasi recognition of the King's title to the succession. The King himself stood upon the 5000*l.* a year which Elizabeth had once promised and had afterwards cut down. With a double compromise, Elizabeth at length subscribed a bond that she would 'do nothing and allow nothing to be done to the diminishing, impairing, or derogating of any greatness that might be due to him unless provoked on his part by manifest ingratitude:' James consented to lose a thousand out of his five; and the treaty thus ordered was signed at Berwick by commissioners of the two countries on the 2nd of July.

No clause had been inserted or demanded, not a word had been spoken on either side, implying the existence of such a person as Mary Stuart. She was prepared for it; she had known from the beginning of May that so it was to be; and before any of the letters could have reached her on the great business that was in hand, she had taken her own measures. She had written to Mendoza, that in consequence of her son's obstinate persistence in heresy, she had finally disinherited him. Mendoza, she said, must keep her secret; if known in France, it would cost her her dowry; if in England, it would be her destruction. But 'regarding more the interests of the universal Church than of her own family,' she had bequeathed her prospective rights to the King of Spain.¹ By the same post she bade Paget urge Philip once more 'to set on England,' not 'to stay longer at flattering of biles by lenitives,' but 'to purge the spring of the malign humour that had engendered them.' This and only this was the remedy for the ills of Europe. It ought to have been followed long before, but it was not yet too late. She did not inform Paget of her views for the future. She spoke as if she had still hopes of her son; she seemed rather to desire that he should be seized and sent to Spain or Italy, and that Claude Hamilton should govern Scotland as Regent, which would then be at Philip's service for the invasion.²

These and similar letters to other friends must have convinced Elizabeth as she read them, that her cousin was not yet so subdued, that an amicable arrangement could be ventured with her. The assassination
July. plot came opportunely to test her disposition to the bottom. There were powerful grounds for believing that the Queen of Scots had been acquainted with the attempts of Somerville and Parry. She had denied all knowledge of either of them, with expressions of the utmost abhorrence. Morgan was now telling her in unmistakable language that there was to be another attempt of the same kind. Would she approve or would she disapprove? It was an anxious question. Elizabeth did not yet know the particulars. She had Ballard's name, and she had Babington's name; she had learnt that 'the beast was to be removed that troubled the world;' and for her own safety's sake she might have ordered, at any rate, the arrest of these two men; but she chose to endure the danger, that she might unravel the mystery, and test her kinswoman to the bottom.

¹ The Queen of Scots to Mendoza, May 20—30: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

² Mary Stuart to Charles Paget, May 20—30: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

Mary Stuart was in the humour to be worked upon. She was excited by new hopes; she was exasperated by disappointment and her sufferings at Tutbury. Elizabeth's life lay between her and the throne of England, and alone prevented the Catholics everywhere from declaring in her favour. Whatever became of James afterwards, there was no question but that she herself was the immediate heir; and could the conspirators have been contented to act and to trust to her approbation afterwards, there could be little doubt that she would have looked leniently on the crime by which she profited. Elizabeth, had the situation been reversed, would have executed the assassins to prove that she had not been connected with them; but Mary Stuart, among her many crimes, was never false to her friends, and stood through good and evil by those who risked their lives to serve her.

The 'gentlemen' however who had undertaken the business, did not feel this confidence. Regicide, which appeared so glorious and easy when the execution was distant, became more agitating as the moment approached for action; and Ballard who, without mentioning names, had now communicated the secret to Gilbert Gifford, told him that before any active step could be taken 'he must obtain the Queen of Scots' hand and seal to allow of all that must be practised for her.' Without this his labour was vain, and nothing could be done.¹ He had himself promised that he would not write to her; but Babington was about to make use of Morgan's introduction to send her a few words, and Gifford must convey his letter by the secret channel.

Gifford carried what Ballard had told him to Walsingham. Warrants were drawn out and hung suspended over Ballard and Babington in case they made a dangerous move or were frightened and attempted to fly, and the plot continued to develop itself.² The Queen of Scots, in acknowledgment of Morgan's letter, had herself written a few lines of gracious recognition to Babington. In reply and in the name of his companions, he laid the details of the scheme before her as 'his most dear sovereign,' and requested her commands.

He said that on her being separated from Lord

¹ Gilbert Gifford to Walsingham, July 11—21: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Phillipps to Walsingham, July 7—17: MSS. Ibid.

Shrewsbury and transferred to the charge of a wicked Puritan, a mere Leicestrian, a mortal enemy to her Majesty and the States Catholic, he had despaired of his country and had intended to leave it. He had been on the point of departure, when Father Ballard held out hopes to him that better things were possible. He had therefore determined to remain, and with the hazard of his life do her Majesty one good day's service. He had conferred with his friends, and, with the assistance of the Lord Jesus, he had found assurance that something could be achieved. There were three points to be attended to: a harbour would have to be chosen and secured where her allies from abroad could land; she herself was to be rescued from Sir Amyas Paulet; and the usurping competitor was to be dispatched. For the performance of each and all of these, the intending actors had made a solemn vow, and upon 'assurance by her Majesty's letters to himself,' were ready 'to take the sacrament together,' 'either to prevail in the Church's behalf or die in so honourable an attempt.' Delay being dangerous, they requested her to let them know her pleasure. The northern counties were already prepared, and the Prince of Parma was assured of a welcome reception at any landing-place upon the east coast. He himself, with her approbation, proposed to make a dash, with a hundred followers, on Chartley. 'For the dispatch of the usurper, from the obedience of whom they were by the excommunication of his Holiness made free, there were six noble gentlemen his private friends, who for the zeal they bore to the cause and her Majesty's service, were ready to undertake that tragical execution.'¹

The interest grew deeper. Babington's letter was given immediately to Gifford; it was examined by Walsingham before it left London, and was forwarded by the usual road; and Phillipps, who had been in London and had there deciphered it, returned to Paulet at Chartley to watch the effects. Mary Stuart knew Phillipps by sight; a spare, pockmarked, impassive, red-haired man, something over thirty. She had been already struck by his appearance. Morgan had suggested that he might not be proof against a bribe. She had tried him gently and without success, but she had no particular suspicion of him. He knew the moment when the letter reached her. He knew that she had read it. When she drove out in her carriage afterwards she passed him and he bowed respectfully.

'I had a smiling countenance,' he said, 'but I thought of the verse—

'Cum tibi dicat Ave. Sicut ab hoste cave.'

Some remorse he could not choose but feel. She was in his toils, and he was too certain that she would be meshed in them. Another letter from her and the work would be done.

¹ Anthony Babington to the Queen of Scots, July 12—22: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS. The decipher was afterwards submitted to Babington himself, and he wrote upon it, 'This is a true copy of the letter which I sent to the Queen of Scots.' It is impossible to pretend therefore that the Queen of Scots was informed only of an intended rebellion, and that the plot for assassination was concealed from her.

‘We attend,’ he wrote, ‘her very heart at the next.’¹

Paulet had less self-command. He probably liked ill the work that he was about when he found the turn which it had taken; there had been a consciousness in his manner which she had observed, and she had felt vague uneasiness about him. She had made advances to him, to which he had not responded. She had feared that if the Queen was killed it might go hard with her if she was still in his hands, and before Babington’s letter came, she had written to the Archbishop of Glasgow, bidding him ask Sir Edward Stafford to intercede with Burghley to provide her with another guardian, better inclined to her and her rights after the death of his mistress.² Stafford she knew to be her friend. Burghley she thought, and justly thought, wished well to her. ‘You see,’ wrote Phillipps, commenting on her words to Walsingham, ‘how she is weary of her keeper. She is very bold to make way to the great personage, and I fear he will be too forward in satisfying her for her change till he see Babington’s treasons.’³ These words are unexceptionable evidence in Burghley’s favour that he at least was no party to an unfair conspiracy against her, and was in no humour to tolerate foul play.

¹ Phillipps to Walsingham, July 14—24: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² ‘Se rende au reste fort insolent en tous ses departemens vers moy. Donnez advis de cecy au grand Tresorier par l’Ambassadeur Stafford, et faictes luy remonstrer tant de ma part que de tous mes parens et amies ma vie ne pouvoir estre seure en la garde et mains de mon dit gardien, mesmement si ceste Royne venoit à faillir.’—The Queen of Scots to the Archbishop of Glasgow, July 12—22: MSS. Ibid.

³ Phillipps to Walsingham, July 19—29: MSS. Ibid.

Walsingham was still in great uncertainty. Ballard, supposing Gifford to know more than he did, talked to him with considerable unreserve. Gifford had gathered that his and Babington's accomplices were persons near about the Queen. They were followed at night if they went abroad, and their houses watched to discover by whom they were visited. The group of traitors was tolerably well ascertained, but nothing definite could be proved as yet against any individual.¹ Babington presently disappeared; a spy, perhaps Gifford himself, ascertained that he had gone for a week to his house in Derbyshire, and that he expected to receive the Queen of Scots' answer to his letter at Lichfield.

It came at last. She was five days composing her reply, with the many other letters which she despatched by the same post.

The confessions of her secretaries describe the mode in which she worked. Not a paper of any consequence was ever written by them, except in her cabinet and in her presence. She sat at a table with Nau and Curle opposite to her. She either wrote herself or dictated in French to Nau the substance of what she desired to say. Nau took down her words, and she looked them over, and approved or altered as the case might be. He then cast them into form; she read his draft, and then if the letter was to remain in French, it was ciphered and sealed by herself. If it was to be in English, it was translated by Curle, and again read to her and ciphered.

¹ Secret Intelligence, July, 1586: MSS. Domestic.

Not a despatch of any kind was ever sent out which had not been composed, ciphered, read twice or thrice, and then sealed either with her own hand or before her eyes.¹

For five days she was thus at work, before the packet was in Phillipps's hands which contained the letter that he was looking for. It was thick and the ciphers were many and voluminous. She had written to Charles Paget, observing the same caution as himself about names, but telling him that a distinguished Catholic had consulted her on a movement that was to be made in her favour. She said that she had answered him point by point. She had instructed him how he was to proceed in England, and what he was to look for from abroad. Now if ever, she said, was the time for the Pope and the King of Spain to strike a blow in earnest and cease to beat the air with vain negotiations.

To Lord Paget and to Sir Francis Englefield, who were at Madrid, she had written—to the first generally, to Englefield more particularly, in a strain which showed that she still doubted Philip's resolution. Protesting against the peace which she half believed him seriously to meditate, and the mere report of which had chilled the hearts of true Catholics to stone, she said that arrangements had now been made for a revolt which, if the King consented, could not but succeed. Her own escape, which had hitherto made the chief difficulty, she believed to have been safely provided for.

To Mendoza, acquainted as he was with every detail

¹ Confessions of Nau and Curle, September : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

of the conspiracy, she contented herself with sending a cordial approval. To Morgan and the Archbishop of Glasgow she poured out her exulting hopes that the hour of her deliverance was at hand. To the French ambassador Chasteauneuf—the wisest friend, could she but have known it, that she possessed, and the one therefore whom she trusted least—she addressed also, under the affected disguise of cipher, a complaint of Elizabeth's treaty with Scotland, lest he should suspect her of deeper designs, which he might dissuade, or thwart, or betray.¹

Besides these, and probably composed before any of them, was the answer to 'the distinguished Catholic,' Anthony Babington himself,² containing 'her very

¹ Letters from the Queen of Scots, July 17—27, 1586 : LABANOFF, vol. vi.

² The authenticity of this, as of the Casket letters, has been vehemently challenged by the Queen of Scots' historical defenders: it is necessary therefore to premise that it was sworn to by the two secretaries in the deciphered form in which it was produced by Walsingham, as having been written by Nau, from minutes in the Queen's hand, translated into English by Curle, and read over to herself and approved by her in the usual way before it was ciphered. She challenged the production of her autograph. It had, of course, never gone beyond her own room, and it could not be found. But Nau's minutes of it were found. The letter itself was acknowledged by Babington, as the same which he received in cipher. Phillipps's copy of the cipher was examined by the privy council, and the decipher verified. It still bears upon it the signatures of the noblemen by whom it was examined. The original cipher having been passed on to Babington was never recovered; and Prince Labanoff, whose chivalry in behalf of Mary Stuart sees truth in every word she spoke herself and fraud and forgery in every charge alleged against her, considers that the compromising sentences were interpolated by Phillipps before it left Chartley. The forgery was gratuitous if forgery there was, for the genuineness of Babington's own letter informing her that the assassination was intended is neither questionable nor questioned, and such heart,' as Phillipps expected that it would. Babington had written to her as his sovereign. She addressed him parts of her reply as Prince Labanoff admits to be her own, contain a full general approbation of his intended proceedings; and no prohibition of, and therefore a tacit consent to, the murder. The arguments on which Prince Labanoff relies are three.

First. That the original ciphered letter was not sent to its destination at once like the rest, but was taken by Phillipps to London to Walsingham.

Secondly. That it was detained eleven days before it was in Babington's hands, presumably with a dishonest intention.

Thirdly. That the interpolation can be proved from a confused postscript on a separate piece of paper, discovered by Mr Tytler in the State Paper Office. The Prince conceives that Phillipps intended first to make a mere addition, that he changed his mind, and recomposed afterwards the entire letter, that it was detained for that purpose, and that although one of the most dexterous manipulators of cipher in Europe, he did his work so clumsily that it can be seen through with ease by a critic of the nineteenth century.

Neither fact nor inference are correct.

First the original letter was not detained, but was forwarded in the usual way the day after it came into Phillipps' hand. Walsingham indeed told him to bring it to London, but too late to prevent its departure. Phillipps had it on the evening of the 18th—28th of July. On the 19th—29th he wrote to Walsingham 'that if Babington was in the country the original would be conveyed into his hands.' It had been given to 'Emilio' to take to him at Lichfield, and was evidently already gone; for Phillipps recommended Walsingham to have Babington's house carefully searched, being sure that the letter would be kept, and 'wishing it to be found for an evidence against her.'—Phillipps to Walsingham, July 19—29; MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

It is true that Babington did not receive it for eleven days, but in a second letter to the Queen of Scots he himself explained the reason. 'Your letter,' he says, 'I received not till the 29th of July [Aug. 8]. The cause was my absence from Lichfield, contrary to promise.'—Babington to the Queen of Scots, August 3—13: MSS. Ibid.

The argument from the postscript it is unbecoming to call preposterous, yet it is hard to say what other name to give it, for it implies that Phillipps preserved, endorsed, and placed among the papers to be examined by the privy council his own first draft of a forgery, which he rejected as unsuited to his purpose. A note from Curle to 'Emilio' in turn as 'trusty and well beloved.' She applauded his zeal in the cause of herself and the Church. She bade him weigh well his resources, calculate the numbers that he could bring into the field, the towns that he could gain possession of, the succours on which he could rely from abroad. She advised that the Catholics should be told everywhere to collect arms privately, as if to defend themselves against some intended violence, and she bade Babington learn from Mendoza when help might be looked for, and time his movements accordingly.

'When all is ready,' she then continued, 'the six gentlemen must be set to work, and you will provide that on their design being accomplished, I may be myself rescued from this place, and be in safe keeping till our friends arrive. It will be hard to fix a day for the execution; you must have a party therefore in readiness to carry me off. And you will keep four men with horses saddled, to bring word when the deed is done, explains the mystery. Some 'addition' to the letter had been sent by mistake. It had perplexed Emilio, who had written to know what it was and what he was to do with it. Curle answered, 'I doubt by your former, which I found some difficulty in deciphering, that myself have erred in setting down the addition which I sent you through some haste I had then in despatching thereof. I pray you forbear using the said addition until that against the next I put the whole at more leisure in better order for your greater ease and mine.'—Curle to Emilio, July 28—August 7; MSS. Ibid.

Curle was by that time aware that Babington had not been at Lichfield, and therefore supposed rightly that the letter was still in Emilio's keeping. His description applies exactly to the 'postscript,' which forms Prince Labanoff's text. It is among the other documents of the conspiracy, and is endorsed by Philipps himself, 'P. S. of the S. Queen's letter to Babington.'

that they may be here before my guardian learns of it. To prevent accident, let the horsemen choose different routes, that if one is intercepted another may get through. It will be well also to have the common posts and couriers stopped. Give the gentlemen all the assurances which they require on my part. You will consider and consult together whether if, as is possible, they cannot execute their particular purpose, it will then be expedient to proceed with the rest of the enterprise. If the difficulty be only with myself, if you cannot manage my own rescue because I am in the Tower, or in some other place too strong for you, do not hesitate on that account. Go on for the honour of God. I would gladly die at any time could I but know that the Catholics were out of bondage. I will do what I can to raise Scotland and Ireland. Beware of traitors. There are even priests in the service of the enemy. Keep no compromising papers about you, and reveal as little of your intentions as you can to the French ambassador. He is a good man ; but his master is too nearly allied with this Queen and may cross her purpose.

‘There are three ways in which my escape may be managed. I ride sometimes in the open ground between this and Stafford. It is usually an entire solitude, and my guardian who attends me takes but eighteen or twenty horse with him, only armed with pistols. We could arrange a day, and fifty or sixty well-mounted men could carry me off with ease.

‘Or you might fire the stables and farm-buildings here some midnight, and your people might surprise the house in the confusion. They might wear a badge to recognize each other.

‘Or again, carts come in here every morning with stores. You might personate a driver, and upset one of the carts in the gateway; and the rest of you lying concealed among the bushes might rush in. The guard’s lodgings are half a mile off.

‘Burn this immediately.’¹

A postscript² adds: ‘I would be glad to know the names and qualities of the six gentlemen which are to accomplish the designment, for that it may be I shall be able upon knowledge of the parties to give you some further advice necessary to be followed therein; *and even so do I wish to be made acquainted with the names of all such principal persons, as also who be already as also who be*³—as also from time to time particularly how you proceed, and as soon as you may, for the same purpose, who be already, and how far every one is privy hereunto.’

If this letter was the genuine work of Mary Stuart, if any part of it was hers—supposing her to have received and read the letter of Babington to which it was an answer—Phillipps, on sending the decipher to Walsingham, was right in saying that he had now material

¹ The Queen of Scots to Anthony Babington, July 17—27. Condensed: Printed by LABANOFF, vol. vi. The letter is in French, and was apparently in two parts. Curle writing to Emilio, tells him to deliver the two letters. Babington acknowledging the correctness of Phillipps’s transcript, says,

‘C’est la copie des lettres de la Reyne d’Escosse dernièrement à moy envoyés.’

² This is the document on which Prince Labanoff founds his argument.

³ The words in italics are struck through with a pen.

sufficient, that there was no need to run further risk, and that it would be well to secure the principal conspirators at once. His only anxiety was that the original letter should be recovered. Babington, he thought, 'for all her commandment,' would not destroy it, and he wished it 'to be found as an evidence against the Queen of Scots, if it pleased God to inspire her Majesty with that heroical courage that was meet for avenge of God's cause and the security of herself and the State.' ¹

The Queen of Scots was the victim of treachery—so it has been often said, and so it will be said again—and if by treachery it is meant that she was deceived, the charge is just. But it is false, absolutely and utterly, that the plot was set on foot by agents of Walsingham to tempt her to join it in her desperation and then to destroy her. Walsingham had contrived an ingenious scheme to gain political information. He obtained what he sought, and he obtained also by accident the knowledge of a conspiracy to which she was a party. But he was a looker-on and nothing besides. Elizabeth's murder was the favourite project of the Jesuits. At the particular moment when the correspondence of the Queen of Scots was passing under his eyes, it happened to ripen towards action.

The treatment which Mary Stuart had received at Elizabeth's hands is said to excuse if not to justify her. As she told her story herself it did excuse her. Coming into England of her own accord, having been promised welcome and help there, she had been deprived of her liberty for eighteen years, and her name had been blackened with calumny. She had been tantalized with hopes of release, only, when the cup was at her lips, to see it snatched away as if in purposed mockery. She had been treated as a criminal and threatened with death. She had been separated from her child. His affection had been stolen from her, and the name of mother bestowed upon her oppressor. And if the refinements of cruelty betrayed at last a maddened woman into desperate courses, she is held to have a claim for acquittal from the moral instincts of mankind.

¹ Phillipps to Walsingham, July 19—29: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Elizabeth had certainly contrived to make such a representation of the case possible. In the dread of seeming to sanction the rebellion of subjects against their sovereign, she had disregarded the advice of her ministers, and had used language on the faith of which the Queen of Scots did really come to England, and was not permitted again to leave it. In the crooked ways in which she so much delighted she had more than once played her off against her son, and for her own purposes had held the succession to the crown undetermined, and had amused Mary Stuart with the prospect of it.

But if it be taken as a whole, and looked at from first to last, the fault of Elizabeth's conduct to her unlucky kinswoman was rather weakness—weakness persevered in despite of remonstrance, out of an exaggerated fear of being reproached for dealing more hardly with her rival and heir than she had herself been dealt with by her own sister.

Elizabeth coming to the throne herself with a stain upon her birth, had found the leopards of England quartered with the 'lilies of France,' and a French army making Scotland a stepping-stone towards forcibly dispossessing her of her crown. She had successfully asserted her rights. The French plenipotentiaries at the capitulation of Leith surrendered in Mary Stuart's name the claims which she had advanced. Mary Stuart had first delayed and then refused to ratify the treaty save on new conditions, which she had no right to demand. She had remained after her return to Scotland a quasi-competitor for Elizabeth's throne. She had intrigued with the disaffected Catholics in England, and with the Spanish ambassadors in London. She had chosen for her husband a Catholic subject of Elizabeth, a Prince of the blood royal, to strengthen her position with the English nobility as a preparation for a revolution which was to unseat Elizabeth in her favour. Had she fallen into Elizabeth's power at the time of the Darnley marriage, the usage of the age would have justified her execution. She had done more to deserve it than Lady Jane Grey, whose death had been approved by the Catholic opinion of Europe.

Her story took another turn. She forgot her ambition for a time in a personal passion, and she became the heroine of an adulterous melodrama. Her husband was murdered, and she married the murderer. Her subjects took arms, dethroned, imprisoned, and intended to send her to the scaffold, and the world would have been no more troubled with her and her misfortunes, but for Elizabeth's gratuitous interference. Elizabeth saved her life. Elizabeth, in the exaggeration of pity, undertook that if she could escape from Lochleven she would give her an asylum in England, and after the lost battle at Langside, Mary Stuart took her at her word, crossed into Cumberland, and claimed to be replaced upon her throne by English arms.

Setting aside the immediate pretensions which she had put forward to Elizabeth's place, she was her heir-presumptive in blood. And what had been hitherto the condition of persons so unfortunately situated? Mary Tudor had been restrained to her house under Edward VI. Elizabeth had been the prisoner of Mary. Lady Catherine Grey, who was given precedence in the will of Henry VIII., had been separated from her husband, had been sent to the Tower, and had pined away and died.

In dealing with Mary Stuart Elizabeth was embarrassed by a rash engagement, which would have sat lightly on any previous English Sovereign. She had promised more than she could perform immediately with fairness or decency; but she gave the Queen of Scots an opportunity of clearing her reputation, and had she succeeded would undoubtedly have restored her.

When the Casket letters demonstrated her guilt—when the mere authoritative publication of them would have silenced her friends for ever, would have made her succession in England impossible, and have left her the unpitied victim of her own crimes—Elizabeth closed the inquiry, forbade a verdict, and purposely left it open to the world to believe that she was possibly innocent.

As the immediate consequence, Mary Stuart caused first an open insurrection in England, and then wove a second great conspiracy of which a Spanish invasion and the Queen's murder were intended features. The English Parliament like the Scots would then have had her put to death—but again Elizabeth interposed. It was not wholly in generosity. She thought her throne would be more secure if the Great Powers could look forward to the peaceful accession of a Catholic Sovereign, while she held her probable successor in her own hands as a pledge for quiet in her own lifetime. Mary Stuart was not allowed to leave England, but she remained in charge of Lord Shrewsbury, neither more nor less a prisoner than Elizabeth had herself been under her sister. She lived with the insignia of Queen at the house of an English nobleman, who was notoriously a friend of her title. She was maintained in luxury at Elizabeth's cost, with all the enjoyments which an English country house could afford. Residing in the heart of England, she became the centre of the hopes of the great Catholic party, and so far was she from being an unwilling prisoner that she might have escaped had she pleased, but would not. In her own opinion, and in the opinion of Philip of Spain, she was in the situation most favourable to her prospects. She had but to remain quiet, and if she outlived Elizabeth her accession was absolutely certain.

But neither she nor the English Jesuits would consent to wait. Both wished to anticipate the natural action of time. The Jesuit mission of 1580 was the commencement of a new series of conspiracies. Ireland was set on fire. Scotland was shaken with revolution. England was threatened with fresh rebellion, and the Queen with assassination.

The Jesuits had been worsted. Some scores of them had been hanged. The Queen of Scots had exchanged a luxurious residence with a semi-Catholic English Earl to sharp confinement under a Puritan keeper. The Protestant Government was more firmly established in Scotland, and her son, supplanting herself, now aspired to the second place after Elizabeth.

She had professed to be worn out with the struggle: to be willing to relinquish her ambition, and to desire only to be allowed to retire from the world and its vanities, and to spend what remained to her of life in religious meditation.

Elizabeth put her sincerity to an unexpected test. Had she been in the mood in which she pretended to be, the 'treachery' of Walsingham would have been the truest kindness, for it would have dispelled effectively and for ever the remains of Elizabeth's mistrust.

Unfortunately for herself her professions were but air. She was the old Mary Stuart still, the same bold, restless, unscrupulous, ambitious woman, and burning with the same passions, among which revenge stood out predominant. Hers was the panther's nature—graceful, beautiful, malignant, and untamable. What was to be done with her?

In the conspiracy itself there was every circumstance to aggravate its atrocity. The gentlemen who had undertaken to kill the Queen were persons to whom her generosity alone had given the opportunity of which they were prepared to avail themselves. She had allowed them familiar access to her presence, though known to be Catholics, as an answer to the calumny that Catholics were necessarily disloyal; and they had let the Jesuits persuade them that to repay her confidence with murder was an act which would be regarded as meritorious in Heaven.

Walsingham was in no haste. Gifford told him that he had been directed by Ballard to go to Spain, to learn when a fleet might be looked for on the coast, and that till his return no active attempt would be made. He wanted more precise information. He now knew that there were six persons who were to act against the Queen, and that Babington was not one of them, for Babington was to rescue the Queen of Scots. He had discovered that twelve or fourteen young gentlemen were in the habit of supping together, or meeting at each other's houses, and that among these the six would be found. He was unable as yet to individualize them. The details however were rapidly filling in. The vain fools, anticipating their coming glories, had their pictures taken in a group, as the deliverers of their country, with Babington in the midst of them. Some one, probably Gifford, contrived to show it to the Queen. She recognized Barnwell, the Irishman, and when she next saw him at the Court she looked at him with a steadiness which would have alarmed a wiser man.

Babington came from Derbyshire to London at the end of July. Emilio, whom he found there, gave him the Queen of Scots' letter. He prepared to go as she directed to Paris, to talk with Mendoza. Mendoza, in one of his letters, had mentioned a certain Mr Pooley as a reliable Catholic. Pooley had been connected at one time with Leicester; he was attached afterwards to Sir Philip Sidney; and was now in the service of Sidney's widow, and residing in Walsingham's house. A passport being necessary, and Walsingham being the person through whom to obtain it, Babington applied to Pooley for an introduction to him, and the Secretary, when he was admitted, must have looked with some curiosity on the man whose letters he had been watching. Babington told him that he had business on the Continent, and by way of recommending himself offered, if Walsingham would allow him, to use his leisure as a spy upon the refugees.

Walsingham gave him an encouraging answer, saw him again and again, detaining him under various pretexts, and gave him hopes of introducing him to Elizabeth. Supposing Pooley to be trustworthy, and bursting with self-importance, Babington on one of these visits fell into a long conversation with him, showed him Mary Stuart's letters, and told him that he would soon see the realm invaded, and the Queen killed.¹

¹ Confession of Pooley, August, 1586: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Never were men engaged in so desperate a service more infatuated idiots, and never had Mary Stuart's genius failed her more egregiously than in trusting them. Unsuspicious of the eyes that were upon them, and full of careless confidence, while Babington was waiting for his passport, he and his companions were entertaining each other in glorious tavern dinners, or feasting in the summer nights in the suburban gardens. On the 3rd—13th of August they had a sudden alarm. A servant of Ballard's, who knew more than was good for them, was discovered to have been in the pay of the Government.¹ The base material of which Babington was made instantly revealed itself. Caitiff at heart in the midst of his bravado, he wrote the same day to Pooley, bidding him tell Walsingham that there was a conspiracy in hand, and that he was prepared to reveal it.²

Walsingham, to Pooley's surprise, received the news with great composure. He sent no answer, and Babington was still more terrified. The next morning (August 4—14), the police came into a ^{Aug. 4—14.} tavern in which several of the party were assembled, with a warrant for the arrest of Captain Fortescue, alias Ballard, who was taken and carried off in his plumed cap and blue velvet. Still however the object was to persuade them that they were not discovered. None of the rest were touched; to blind them the warrant against Ballard was signed only by the Lord Admiral, and the charge against him was merely of being a disguised seminary priest.

¹ Babington to the Queen of Scots, August 3—13 : MSS. MARY | ² Pooley's confession.

QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Further evidence was wanted, and it had become desirable to betray or force one of the party whose guilt was known to confess. The Queen suggested that a ciphered letter might be conveyed to Ballard as if from one of the confederates, to which he might be tempted to write an answer. But Phillipps had no keys to any of Ballard's ciphers, and this contrivance, ingenious as it was, had to be abandoned.¹ It was next proposed to arrest Gilbert Gifford, and confine him in the same cell. But Ballard was beginning to mistrust Gifford. There was no one else with whom he was likely to be open, on whom Walsingham could himself depend, and the unhappy creature was consigned therefore to the Tower and the torture chamber.

His companions meanwhile who were left behind in the tavern, the second fright coming so close upon the first, looked blankly in each other's faces. It was easy to talk finely about martyrdom in a glorious cause; but the Tyburn quartering knife had its terrors for the strongest nerves, and the men who do desperate actions are not those who talk about them.

Babington, already distracted, went to Savage, the boldest of the set, who had not been present, told him that Ballard was taken, and that all would be discovered.

¹ 'Touching the use of a cipher, there is none between him and any other come to my hands, so as nothing can be wrought that way as | your Majesty politickly adviseth.'—Walsingham to Elizabeth, August 5—15: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

If that was so, Savage said, one of them had better go at once to the Court, and kill the Queen without delay. Babington bade Savage go. Savage said that he had no dress, and that the ushers would not admit him.¹ Babington flung a handful of money into his lap, bidding him go buy a dress, and be quick about it, and without waiting to learn the result, he rushed off to Pooley, and sent him with a second more urgent message to Walsingham.

Pooley returned with the strange answer that Babington might come again in a day or two. Babington supped that night with two of Walsingham's servants. During the meal a note was brought in for one of them, which he contrived to glance at, and saw that it contained directions that an eye should be kept upon himself. He slipped away in the dark, leaving his cloak and sword behind him, flew to such of his friends as he could find, and told them that all was lost. They scattered instantly, self-condemned, completing by their flight the evidence of their guilt. Babington, with four others, plunged into St John's Wood, then a forest interspersed with farms, and after vainly trying to obtain horses, they disguised themselves as labourers, stained their faces with walnut juice, and lay concealed in a barn at Harrow. They were not long undiscovered. The morning after their flight an account of the conspiracy was published ; the names of those who had fled or concealed themselves were proclaimed ; and loyal

¹ Proceedings against John Savage : State Trials, vol. i.

England in a frenzy of excitement, was in search of them. At the end of ten days Babington, Barnwell, Charnock, Gage, and Dunn were dragged from under the straw, and carried exultingly into London, while bells were rung and bonfires blazed, and the eager throngs poured out their emotions in thanksgiving psalms. The rest had been already taken, or their capture soon followed. Tichbourne, who had a bad leg, and could not move, was arrested in London with Savage and Tilney. Salisbury was overtaken in Cheshire; Abington evaded discovery till the end of August, but was found in a hay-stack in Worcestershire. Other persons were seized as accessories, or charged with assisting the principals to escape. Lord Windsor's brother and Sir Thomas Gerrard alone of the whole set made their way to the Continent.

Divided and separately examined, they had neither spirit nor faculty for concealment. Little could be wrung from Ballard, but Savage, who, next to Ballard, had most to tell, confessed freely all that he knew. He told how he had been solicited to regicide by the converts at Rheims; how Ballard and Babington had selected six of them afterwards to do the deed, and how the six were himself, Thomas Salisbury, Chidiock Tichbourne, Barnwell, Abington, and Tilney. He described, so far as he had been himself admitted to the secret, the plan of the intended invasion, and the names of those who were expected to rise in rebellion.

The fate of the conspirators was certain, and the proceedings with them simple and straightforward. It was more difficult to determine how to act towards the person in whose interests the plot had been conceived. It was easy to arrest and accuse her, but the object was to separate her from her papers, to charge her suddenly, cut her off from communication with her secretaries and servants, and preclude the possibility of her secreting or destroying anything.

The Queen consulted Paulet, who suggested that he might take her out hunting; she could be met in the field, charged then and there with the conspiracy, and carried under a guard to some neighbouring house; while he himself, at the instant of the challenge, would ride back to Chartley, seize and separate Nau and Curle, and take possession of her closets and cabinets.

This, it was thought, would do. Not a hint of what had passed in London could penetrate the house without Paulet's knowledge, and there was no occasion for haste; but the evidence of the secretaries was wanted in the investigation in London, and he was ordered to execute his plan without delay.

Mary Stuart, flushed with the excitement of her new hopes, was in high spirits, and when Paulet, one bright August morning, suggested that they should kill a buck at Sir Walter Aston's park, she caught at it with delight. Tixall, the place to which they were going, was nine miles off. It was a long ride, and the more welcome from the rarity. Most of her own people were of the party, the two secretaries among the rest. The cavalcade had almost reached the gates of the park, when a company of horse were seen waiting in the road.

Mary Stuart's first thought must have been that Babington was come. It could hardly have been otherwise. She had told him to be on the watch for her on an expedition precisely of the kind. But if it was so she was swiftly undeceived. Sir Thomas Gorges, a gentleman of the Court, rode forward, and touching his cap with grave ceremony, presented an order from the Queen for the arrest of Nau and Curle, and her own immediate removal to Tixall.

She saw at once that all had been discovered. Desperate as when fate overtook her before on the slopes of Carberry, she raged and stormed, and showered invectives on Gorges and his mistress. She bade her servants draw their swords, if they were men, and fight for her.¹ But it could not be. They were but a handful, and submitted to be disarmed. The secretaries were carried to London, and she herself was led as a prisoner to Tixall.

Paulet, with Secretary Wade, who had accompanied Gorges down, galloped back to Chartley, where drawers, boxes, and cabinets were broken open and searched. Everything that was found was secured—correspondence, minutes, note-books; the keys and tables, among the rest, of sixty ciphers, which are now extant among the Queen of Scots Papers, and letters from many an English knight and nobleman, paying court to his future Sovereign. These last Elizabeth burnt, while the

¹ 'Que la mit en telle colère | que les siens se missent en défense.'
qu'elle l'outragea forte des parolles, | —D'Esneval to Courcelles, October et sa maistresse; mesmes voulust | 7, 1586: MSS. Scotland.

writers, so Camden says, 'having some inkling thereof, began from that time to show themselves the Queen of Scots' deadly adversaries, lest they might seem to have favoured her before.' Everything was packed together, sealed, and taken to London, to be examined by the council, who were now for the first time to learn the secret history of Mary Stuart's relations with the Catholic Powers since her arrival in England.

So delicate a matter was it that every document of consequence was submitted to a committee, of which two Peers were members who had been hitherto the keenest advocates of her claims: Shrewsbury, in whom she had herself the most perfect confidence, and Cobham, who had more than once been implicated in conspiracies in her favour. Every deciphered letter in the vast collection bears endorsed upon it the signatures of Shrewsbury and Cobham, besides those of Burghley and Walsingham, and Sir Francis Knowles. The cipher-keys themselves bear signs of no less scrupulous examination. The most exaggerated precautions were thought necessary against suspicion of unfair dealing.

The Queen of Scots was kept at Tixall for a fortnight. The house was small and inconvenient, and at the end of that time Paulet was allowed to take her back to Chartley. She was still in wild condition; dishevelled for want of attendance and change of clothes, and disfigured with suffering. A crowd of beggars were at the gate of Tixall as she passed through. 'I have nothing for you,' she cried in a loud voice to them; 'I am a beggar as well as you; all is taken from me.'

‘Good gentlemen,’ she said, weeping, to the escort which formed round her, ‘I am not witting or privy to anything intended against the Queen.’

The first news that she heard on reaching Chartley was that Barbara Mowbray, her favourite attendant, who had married her secretary Curle, had been prematurely confined from the shock. Before returning to her own rifled room, she flew to her friend’s bedside, and characteristically, as if it had been ordered by Providence that in every feature of her disposition she should be the opposite of Elizabeth, she told her that any fault which could be charged against Curle she would take upon herself. The child, a girl, was living, but, the priest having been removed, was unbaptized. She asked Paulet to let his chaplain christen it, but when she said it was to bear her own name, he refused. Instantly she laid the infant on her lap, took water herself from a basin, and sprinkled its face, saying, ‘Mary, I baptize thee in the Name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.’

Then she went to her own apartments, to find drawers and boxes open and empty, and her most secret papers gone. ‘Some of you will be sorry for this,’ she said sternly to Paulet, who was attending on her. ‘Two things cannot be taken from me—my English blood and the Catholic religion, which I will keep till my death.’

Elizabeth had no braver subject than Paulet, not one who would have broken lance with lighter heart in her behalf against the stoutest knight in Christendom; but there was something in this fiery woman that awed and frightened him. He dreaded a rising in the country. He urged her removal to some stronger place, as a matter of pressing necessity, wishing evidently that she was in the Tower, and that he was rid of his responsibilities with her.¹

The Queen, though she did not give him the relief which he desired, yet appreciated his services. To each one of the privy council she expressed 'her marvellous satisfaction' with his behaviour, and to himself she wrote a letter, in which her better nature struggles with her affectation with rather more success than usual.

'Amyas,' she wrote, 'my most faithful and careful servant, God reward thee treblefold in three double for thy most troublesome charge so well discharged. If you knew, my Amyas, how kindly, besides dutifully, my grateful heart accepteth and praiseth your spotless actions, your wise orders, and safe regards, performed in so dangerous and crafty a charge, it would ease your travails and rejoice your heart. In which I charge you carry this most just thought, that I cannot balance in any weight of my judgment the value that I prize you at, and suppose no treasure to countervail such a faith; and shall condemn myself in that fault, which yet I never committed, if I reward not such deserts. Yea, let me lack when I most need, if I acknowledge not such a merit with a reward. Non omnibus est datum. Let your wicked murderess know, how with hearty nouncing the Anglican Establishment 'as a politic church, such as Machiavelli might have approved.' The arrest of Babington and his confederates was like the rising of a stage curtain. A Paris massacre was looked for, and universal carnage. One hour came news that Parma had landed at Newcastle, the next that Guise was on the coast of Sussex. Walsingham himself, to whom the truth was exactly known, thought it not unlikely, that on hearing of the discovery, either Guise or Parma, or both, might really risk some effort, as a last chance, to save the life of the Queen of Scots. The League had an army in Normandy, ready, so intercepted letters said, to embark at a day's notice. Any moment the blazing beacons might bring word that they were on the English shores.

¹ Paulet to Walsingham, August 27—September 6: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Though the Stanleys generally were Catholic, Lord Derby himself was loyal. Couriers rode post to Lancashire, with lists of recusants who were to be immediately secured; and in a few days three hundred of the principal gentlemen in the northern counties were on their way to London under a guard. Warnings were despatched to Scotland; strong garrisons were thrown into Portsmouth and Plymouth; the musters everywhere were called out, and nine thousand trained soldiers were held ready to cover the south coast. The fleets at Chatham and Portsmouth, thanks to the care of Sir John Hawkins in high order and condition, were manned, and sent to watch the French harbours.¹

¹ Notes of things to be put in execution, August, 1586. Walsingham's hand: MSS. Domestic.

The terror among the Catholics was equally violent. After their last disappointment, they had resolved to have no more to do with conspiracies, and most of them had not guessed to what they were committing themselves when they had allowed Ballard to feel their disposition on the succession. They found themselves suddenly suspected of being accomplices in a plot for their Sovereign's murder, their leaders arrested, themselves regarded as venomous beasts, and betrayers and enemies of their country. They cowered shivering in their houses not daring to show themselves in street or village, and they looked for nothing better than the Queen of Scots' execution, and their own proscription and destruction.¹

The discovery had burst upon the council with as much suddenness as on the country; and council and household were in dismay and agitation. Elizabeth herself, though on her the knowledge had broken gradually, was perhaps the most agitated of all. She saw the tremendous alternative which she would now be called upon to face. If the presence of the Queen of Scots in England had caused personal danger to her, it had been at the same time her highest political security. The Catholic Powers had let her alone; her own Catholic subjects had for the most part been loyal, so long as the heir of the crown was a princess of their own faith, whose pretensions under a thousand provocations the reigning Queen had scrupulously respected; if they had attempted violence, they knew that she might be killed, and that the best to which they could then look forward was another war of the Roses embittered by religious animosity. They had preferred to wait for their legitimate rights, and the great body of country gentlemen remembered that if Catholics they were Englishmen, and had listened coldly and reluctantly to the exhortations of the Jesuits. To the Protestants, on the other hand, who had been Elizabeth's active supporters, the prospect of Mary Stuart's accession had throughout been an unmingled peril. Predominant above all religious differences, there was a fixed resolution in the nation to have no second war of succession if it could possibly be avoided. If Mary Stuart was alive at Elizabeth's death, every one felt that she would and must become Queen. James of Scotland would then of course become a Catholic. The English Protestants would be like the Huguenots in France, and the best for which they could hope would be a few years' precarious toleration to be trampled out of existence in the end. Self-preservation therefore, on their part, demanded that she should now pay the penalty of her crime. Then at least they would have a successor to look forward to, who was nominally a Protestant; if an armed struggle was to come, they would go into it with their Sovereign on their side; and they had been too faithful to Elizabeth to enable her lightly to refuse their righteous demands. Her private interest was still to let Mary Stuart live. Her obligations as a Queen required that justice, long evaded, should claim its due at last.

¹ Secret advertisements to Walsingham, August, 1586: MSS. Domestic

A public trial of Babington and his accomplices could not be avoided, and Mary Stuart's correspondence with them must inevitably be exposed. The council advised an immediate call of Parliament; and the experience of the last session showed but too clearly what Parliament would recommend. It must have been at this time that, struggling with contending feelings, Elizabeth wrote secretly to Mary Stuart to tell her that if she would confess her guilt and ask for forgiveness in a private letter to herself, her crime should be again overlooked, and she should hear no more of it.¹ 'It was not to entrap her,' as Elizabeth could most honestly say. She knew as much as the Queen of Scots could tell her, and the evidence was overwhelmingly conclusive. It was to find an escape out of her own dilemma. She understood the person with whom she had to deal. If Mary Stuart could once be brought upon her knees, she felt that her spirit would be broken and that she would be dangerous no more.

September.

But no answer came, and time pressed; and Paulet refused to be responsible for his prisoner if she was left at Chartley. Day after day the council sat at Windsor, and the Queen was 'variable as the weather.'² She was impatient that something should be done, yet she objected to everything that was proposed.³ She tried to avoid a meeting of Parliament,

¹ Speech of Queen Elizabeth in Parliament: CAMDEN, book iii. p. 98.

² Burghley to Walsingham, September 10—20: MSS. Domestic.

³ Burghley to Walsingham, September 8—18: ELLIS, 1st series, vol. iii.

and yielded only when her ministers were unanimous on the necessity of it, 'to make the burden better borne, and the world abroad better satisfied.' She found herself obliged also to permit an inquiry into the conduct of the Queen of Scots, and a special commission was named of peers, judges, and privy councillors. But she could not decide where the commission should sit or whither the Queen of Scots should be removed. The council proposed the Tower. It was 'flatly refused.' They suggested Hertford Castle. She consented for a day, and then said it was too near London. Fotheringay she thought was as much too far. 'Many other places were named, as Grafton, Woodstock, Northampton, Coventry, and Huntingdon; but none of them were allowed, either for lack of strength for her keeping, or of a spacious place for the cause to be heard in, or for lack of lodging for the assembly.'¹ 'So with weariness of talk,' said Burghley, 'her Majesty left off all till a time I know not when.' For some cause, perhaps because he had disappointed her in advocating severity, she was especially irritated with Burghley himself. He had been appointed Lord-Lieutenant of Hertfordshire. Without assigning any reason, she struck off his name. 'I count it,' he said, 'in the number of many other disgraces though not diseases.'²

Fotheringay was at last pitched upon, a strong roomy castle in Northamptonshire, belonging to the Crown. If remote from London it was the nearer to Chartley, and the removal thither could be effected with the less difficulty. Many members of the existing Parliament being in the Low Countries with Leicester, a dissolution was declared by letters patent, and writs were sent out for a new general election. October was named for the meeting of the commissioners at Fotheringay. The interval was occupied with the trial and punishment of the rest of the conspirators.

¹ Burghley to Walsingham, September 10—20: MSS. Domestic.

² Ibid.

While these arrangements were being concluded at Windsor, Walsingham had been taking depositions and hearing confessions in London. The entire web had been unravelled ; and the various schemes revealed in which it had been proposed to get the assassination accomplished. Ballard, after the fashion of his order, had advocated the corruption of the palace servants, and 'the taking the Queen away by poison as most easy and less dangerous to the doer ;'¹ the gentlemen 'liking not this, but preferring to do it valorously in the garden or the park.'²

The two secretaries, after long denials, were brought gradually to acknowledge the receipt of Babington's letter, and the composition of the answer in their own presence.³ Nau's minute, overlooked at first in the search at Chartley, was found in a bundle of papers which he himself pointed out.⁴

¹ Confession of A. Tyrrell, August 30—September 9 : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Ibid.

³ Walsingham to Phillipps, September 3—13, 4—14 ; Confession of Curle, September 5—15 ;

Confession of Nau, September 5—15 ; Matters wherewith Nau is to be charged, September 21—October 1 : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

⁴ Wade to Phillipps, September 7—17 : MSS. Ibid.

On the 13th—23rd of September a special commission sat at Westminster, and Babington, Ballard, Savage, Tichbourne, and three others were brought to the bar. Savage, whose confession had been the most ample, was the first arraigned. He pleaded guilty. His account of himself, for its peculiar clearness, was read aloud by the Clerk of the Crown; and the crowd which thronged the hall listened with heightening fury, as they heard how the Jesuits at Rheims had taught the legitimacy and the merit of murder. The story was long; the day was almost over before it was finished. On a question from Hatton, who was one of the commissioners, Savage said that he had made his confession freely without threat of torture. The court then adjourned, and the trial was resumed the following morning. With reservations imperfectly sustained, and equivocations attempted and withdrawn, the rest of the prisoners pleaded as Savage had done. They pretended conscience as their motive, and Babington charged Ballard with having seduced him from his allegiance. They were sentenced in the usual form. On the 15th followed the arraignment of their remaining companions. They had been divided into two groups, perhaps because the evidence was more complete against some than against others. The first seven knew that it would be useless to attempt a defence; the second seven said they were innocent, and demanded a trial. Abington had written out a confession in the Tower, but had torn it in pieces and required to be confronted with the witnesses against him, according to a late Act of Parliament. He was told that he was not indicted under that Act, but under the common law and the Statute of Edward III. which did not require the presence of witnesses. The forms, according to modern notions, were irregular; but there was no real doubt of the guilt of any of the party, except possibly of Jerome Bellamy, a Harrow farmer, whose crime was the having concealed Babington and supplied him with food. In the existing temper of Court and country to have knowingly countenanced the chief conspirators in the faintest degree, was to have shared their crime.

They were all sentenced together, and the usual five days were given them to prepare. They deserve no pity. Fanatics like Jaureguy or Gerard, who brood in secret and alone over an idea till it has become a second nature and a destiny to them, are monomaniacs whose crimes inspire fear and detestation, but have nothing in them of the more revolting elements of baseness. Even the Hamilton who shot the Regent Murray was inspired by the clan hatred which ran so fiercely in the veins of Scotchmen. But if the Church of Rome attempts to palliate the acts of the Babington conspirators, it must set aside obligations which have been held sacred from the beginning of time. The Protestant advisers of the Queen had warned her of the disloyalty of her Catholic subjects. She was told that men who owed allegiance to Rome could not possibly be faithful to herself. She had refused to believe it. With the contempt of bodily danger which was the finest element in her character, she had selected her immediate attendants from the families of the recusants, and had trusted them with the guardianship of her person. Parry's treason had made no change. With an extravagant generosity she refused to hold his fellow-religionists responsible for the crimes of a single villain. And the result of it was, in the words of Mendoza, the most promising conspiracy which had yet been set on foot to destroy her; the chief actors in it, the six who were to strike the blow, being persons in whose fidelity she had been foolish enough to place confidence, and who had access to her presence at all hours and places. They were not all her sworn servants. They had not all been even presented to her. But the elements of success on which Mendoza calculated, and on which Ballard had particularly dwelt, was their having secured assistance among the pensioners and among those who were free of the palace; and the treachery therefore in all alike is equally inexcusable.

The further and special infamy attached to Babington, that he had not even the proverbial honour which belongs to thieves, and would have saved himself at the last moment if he could at the expense of his confederates. In horror at the fate which he saw before him, on the day before he was to suffer he wrote a despairing appeal to the Queen whom he would have murdered. He admitted that his crime was too great for human commiseration, but he prayed her 'to work a miracle of mercy' upon him, and to make her glory shine as conspicuously as his own horrible practices had been detestable.¹

¹ A. Babington to the Queen, September 19—29: MSS. Domestic.

No answer was vouchsafed him. Another fragment of his handwriting survives of a date yet later. Sir Francis Knowles and two of the judges visited him the following morning, and for the last time he authenticated in their presence the alphabet of the cipher which he had used with Mary Stuart.¹

Immediately afterwards he was carried to Tyburn, with Ballard, Savage, Barnwell, Chidiock Tichbourne, Tilney, and Abington. The rest were retained for the morrow. The blood of the people was up on both sides. An agent of Walsingham's sent him word the night before that the Catholics were desperate; knots of hot-blooded young men were taking vows that they would still do the work; some swore that they would kill the Queen, some that they would rescue Mary Stuart if they died in hundreds for it.² The Government on their side were determined to show to them, that if they played with treason, they should be made to suffer the very worst which the law would permit. To the Paradise promised them in the other life the Queen's power did not extend; but even with Paradise immediately beyond, death could still be so inflicted as to make the method of it moderately terrible.

They were permitted each in turn to speak to the crowd. Ballard said that in what he had done and meant to do, he had sought only the advancement of what he called true religion. Babington said that the murder of the Queen had been represented to him as 'a deed lawful and meritorious.' Savage used nearly the same words. Tichbourne, paying an involuntary compliment to Elizabeth's notorious clemency, did not pretend that he was innocent, but admitted that he had expected to be pardoned. All called themselves ardent Catholics, and assumed the character of soldiers of the faith. Those who expressed regret for their crimes qualified their sorrow with conditions. They asked forgiveness if they had done wrong, not choosing to compromise their orthodoxy by allowing the possible unlawfulness of what the Pope had sanctioned. They were all hanged but for a moment, according to the letter of the sentence, taken down while the susceptibility of agony was unimpaired, and cut in pieces afterwards with due precautions for the protraction of the pain. If it was to be taken as part of the Catholic creed that to kill a prince in the interests of Holy Church was an act of piety and merit, stern English common sense caught the readiest means of expressing its opinion on the character both of the creed and its professors.

¹ 'I do acknowledge the last of the within written alphabets to be the very same by which I writ unto the Queen of Scots.—Anthony Babington, September 20—30.—MSS. Domestic.

² Secret intelligence, September 19; MSS. Ibid.

Elizabeth forbade a repetition of the scene on the following day. The remaining offenders were allowed to hang till they were dead.

But justice was still unsatisfied. The instruments of the conspiracy were gone. The person in whose interest it had been formed, the person in whose interest, so long as she lived, similar conspiracies would never cease to be formed, remained to be accounted with.

Never had lady of romance been more fatal than Mary Stuart to worshippers of her beauty or champions of her wrongs. From Châtellar to the last mournful list of gentlemen they formed now a long procession. Poet and musician, knight and noble, had fallen under the enchantment, yet the ranks continued to fill. New aspirants were for ever found to the post of glory and danger, and each fresh enthusiast who consecrated his life and his sword to her, was more determined and more unscrupulous than the last.

What was to be the end of all this? How long was England to endure it? The question was most perplexing on all its sides. There was no precedent in English or Scotch history for the trial of a prince. Princes had been brought to justice by easier and less conspicuous methods, which now were passing out of date. The Lochleven abdication had never been formally recognized, and Mary Stuart was still a Queen regnant in English law. Elizabeth dreaded the suspicion of being influenced by personal motives if she dealt hardly with her. Had she left her to her fate in Scotland, or punished her after the first rebellion, it would have passed as a matter of course; but her exceptional tenderness had created a prescriptive right to its continuance. Again, crowned heads might hold their order insulted by the trial of a sister Sovereign before the subjects of another. The French Court might have no love for Mary Stuart, but she was still Queen Dowager of France, and a sensitive people might feel their honour engaged in her defence. The King and the Queen-mother too, although they were content that she should continue a prisoner, yet were interested in keeping her alive, as a bar to the pretensions of Philip to the English crown.¹

About James of Scotland there was at first not much uneasiness. M. d'Esneval, the French ambassador at Holyrood, thought that little opposition was to be expected from him. D'Esneval had gone to London to consult Chasteauneuf. He had left M. Courcelles in charge, and to him he wrote bidding him tell the King, that if he allowed his mother to be tried, he would be disgraced and dishonoured throughout Christendom, and that if she was condemned he would lose his chances of his English inheritance.² Dishonour however was but a word, and on the more substantial danger the King's fears had already been set at rest. Among the papers at Chartley had been found his mother's will disinheriting him. A copy of it was immediately forwarded to him, with assurances that whatever happened his own prospects should not be compromised. An answer came back that the King would not interfere unless she was threatened with execution; and even so, his anxiety was chiefly lest he should be considered himself a consenting party, while his most intimate advisers were seemingly in favour of extremities.

'The King,' wrote the Master of Gray to Archibald

¹ 'Este Rey y su madre huelgan que la de Escocia sea prisionera, y viva—para impedir con esto la succession de V. Mag^a á aquella corona —y los Ingleses hallan que quantos provechos les redundan de tenella captiva en su poder se les trocarian en daño si la acabaren.'—Mendoza al Rey, 7 Diciembre: TEULET, vol. v.

² D'Esneval to Courcelles, September 2, intercepted and deciphered; MSS. Scotland.

Douglas, at the Court in London, 'is well willed in all things as ye left him, and very glad of the discovery of this matter. But his opinion is it cannot stand with his honour that he be a consenter to take his mother's life, but he is content how strictly she be kept, and all her auld knaivish servants hanged, chiefly they that be in hands. For this you must deal warily to eschew inconvenients, seeing necessity of all honest men's affairs requires she was taken away.'¹

Walsingham answered that the King's open consent would not be required. For a son to make himself a party against his mother would, he admitted, be contra bonos mores. It had been determined however to try her under the Act of the last Parliament, and in consideration 'of the hard measure which his father received at her hands,' the Queen trusted that he would not raise 'objections.'² At the worst, and if he was still restive, a Succession Act might be constructed as a sop.³

¹ The Master of Gray to Arch. Douglas, September 18—28: MURDIN.

² Walsingham to the Master of Gray, September 17—27: MURDIN.

³ Chasteauneuf wrote to pray him to exert himself, 'sans se laisser abuser d'une vaine declaration de successeur dont l'on commence déjà à parler icy pour l'endormir.'—Chasteauneuf to Courcelles, September 25—October 5. Intercepted: MSS. Scotland.

Chasteauneuf however had little hope of success. Lord Hamilton had already spoken at the instigation of Courcelles. James had answered that he loved his mother, but did not love her actions. He had seen a letter from her, he said, in which she threatened that if he disobeyed her, he should be reduced to the Lordship of Darnley. More than once she had tried to depose him, and put a Regent in his place. For the future she would be made to conduct herself in another fashion, and he hoped the Queen would so bestow her that for the rest of her life she would have to confine her-

Chasteauneuf prayed Burghley to procure him an audience, and he tried to throw a shield over Nau as a French subject. But Chasteauneuf was nothing unless Henry and Catherine spoke behind him. He was suspected of being a Guisian. Burghley told him briefly that Nau was a villain, who had conspired to assassinate the Queen, intimating at the same time that intercession would be equally vain for his mistress.¹

Throughout September the correspondence found at Chartley was carefully examined. It contained the Queen of Scots' inner history for many years, and formed a curious commentary on the professions with which she had besieged Elizabeth. Traces, not of her participation only but of her own originating hand, were visible in every trouble which had distracted Scotland, and in every movement which had seemed to threaten an English revolution, and proof was found in abundance, had proof been needed, that the worst suspicions formed about her had fallen short of the reality.

A preliminary meeting of the Peers who had been placed on the commission was held at Windsor on the 28th (September 28th—October 8th), where the letters were read to them, and the ciphers were offered for their examination; the Queen of Scots meanwhile being carried to Fotheringay, apparently in no alarm for herself, and consenting readily to the removal as bringing her so much nearer the French ambassador.²

self to saying her prayers.—Courcelles to the King of France, October 4: Egerton Papers.

France, September 7—17, September 23—October 3: Egerton Papers.

² Paulet to Walsingham, Sep-

¹ Chasteauneuf to the King of September 15—25. The usual care

When the first consultation was over, Chasteauneuf was admitted to the Queen's presence. He read aloud to her a letter from his master, congratulating her on her escape from the conspiracy, and humbly, diffidently, and without touch of menace, deprecated severe proceedings with the principal offender. If this was to be the tone of France, there was nothing to fear. The Queen replied graciously but firmly. The Queen of Scots' guilt, she said, was too palpable for doubt. She wished that she could so blind herself as to believe her innocence to be possible. She touched in outline the Queen of Scots' history. She said that for twenty years she had shielded her life and her reputation, and three times the Queen of Scots had conspired for her own destruction.¹ She had forgiven her. She had cautioned her to beware how she offended again. She had cautioned Nau when he was at the Court. She could now give no promises as to what she might or might not find it necessary to do.

October.

Ten days later (October 8th—18th) as many Peers as could be collected met the twelve judges at Westminster. The Chancellor related the particulars of the plot. He read Babington's letter to them, with the Queen of Scots' answer to it. He was taken for her bodily comfort. The train of carts was sent before her with her enormous luggage.

¹ She mentioned one instance of which I have found no details in the State Papers — 'une conspiration faicte à Paris il y a deux ans par deux Escossois que l'on suscita pour la venir tuer icy avec le sceu et consentement de ladicte Roynne d'Escosse.'—Chasteauneuf to the King of France, October 4—14 : Egerton Papers.

read the confessions of the secretaries, and the confession of Babington himself; and he required the opinion of every one present on the course which it would be right to pursue. Peers and judges answered one by one that the Queen of Scots must be brought to trial; and they were then required, with every other member of the House of Lords, who was in England and of age, and not engaged elsewhere on public duty, to repair without delay to Fotheringay and constitute a court there. Chasteauneuf expected that the Queen of Scots would be declared incapable of the succession, and would be sentenced to death. The council and the people generally, he said, were earnest that she should be executed, but he did not think Elizabeth herself would consent to extremities if she could help it.¹

Secretary Davison confirmed the opinion of the French ambassador. No sooner were the Lords gone upon their errand, than Elizabeth began to agitate herself about James. When the Queen of Scots was dead there would be no one between James and the succession. He was out of her power, and; although he now spoke fair, might play his mother's part over again with more advantage. Davison tried to reassure her, and 'she seemed to rest somewhat satisfied.' 'But when you have done all,' he wrote to Walsingham, who had gone with the rest to Fotheringay, 'I fear she will keep the course

¹ 'Qui est de la priver de tout le droict qui elle a en ce Royaulme et la condamner à mort. Je ne croy pas que elle voulsist que l'execution s'en ensuyoiſt; mais si elle croit la pluspart de son conseil et la voix commune de tout le peuple, elle la fera mourir.'—Chasteauneuf to the King of France, October 9—19.

she held with the Duke of Norfolk, which is not to take her life without extreme fear compel her.' ¹

She had however consented that the court which she had constituted should not only hear the cause but conclude it and pass sentence. Many of the Commissioners must have been among those whose letters of devotion to Mary Stuart had been found among her papers. The Earls of Rutland and Cumberland, Lord Montague, Lord Lumley, and St John of Bletsoe, had been calculated on by Mendoza with certainty as leaders of the expected rising. Lord Morley, who had sued for his pardon and had been restored, was sent with the rest to give proof of his loyalty, and with others of the same party to acknowledge publicly the worthlessness of the person for whom he had been half prepared to sacrifice his country. As the Marquis of Exeter and another Montague formed part of the court which sentenced Sir Thomas More, and wanted courage to pronounce him innocent, so these noblemen dared not refuse their ignominious service, and may have been among those who 'showed themselves the Queen of Scots' deadly enemies, lest they might seem to have favoured her before.'

The castle of Fotheringay stood not far from the Nen, upon a slight eminence rising out of the level country. There was a small village below and nearer the river; and, the castle being already filled with Paulet's soldiers, and the train of the Queen of Scots, the Commissioners had to accommodate themselves as they could in the cottages and farms. Parties of doubtful looking people were reported to have been seen in the neighbourhood before their coming; perhaps if opportunity offered to do some stroke of business there. The Peers' retinues therefore were in their full numbers, and armed to the teeth. Two thousand horse in all were crowded into the village and the neighbourhood. It was late autumn, the 21st of October, by modern reckoning, when most of them arrived. Mary Stuart having taken no notice of Elizabeth's invitation to her to confess, and being understood to persist in declaring herself innocent, the Queen wrote again to her regretting that she could be so void of conscience as to deny what was so clearly and evidently proved; by so doing she had made it necessary to bring her to trial, and she was required to answer and give credit to the honourable personages sent down to her, as if in the presence of the Queen herself.¹

¹ Davison to Walsingham, October 10—20: MSS. Domestic.

One more chance was allowed her. 'If she showed a disposition to confess in private, before the commission opened, to one or more of the privy council, her request was not to be refused.'² But she had experienced Elizabeth's weakness, and meant to presume upon it. The letters which committed her being in cipher, there were this time no damning writings in her own hand to be produced against her. She had resolved upon the high line of defiance and injured innocence, and in a letter to the Duke of Guise, which as she had no secret avenues of communication she must have intended to be opened and read, she spoke of herself as preparing to die in the cause of religion. She bade Guise have no fear for her constancy. She promised to do no dishonour to the House of Lorraine, and she desired only that her body might be laid beside her mother's, and her heart with that of the King her husband.¹

¹ Elizabeth to the Queen of Scots, October 6—16: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Davison to Walsingham, October 8—18: MSS. Domestic.

She gave no hint of desiring a private interview. On the 12th—22nd of October therefore, the morning after the Commissioners' arrival, Sir Walter Mildmay waited upon her with Paulet, and presented the Queen's letter. She read it over, and complained as usual of her general ill treatment, and of her enemies at the Court. She found it strange, she said, that her Majesty should write to her in form of commandment, and that she herself should be expected to answer as a subject. She was born a Queen, she repeated, according to her stereotyped formula. She refused to prejudice her rank, or her royal blood, or the rights of her son who was to come after her, or to set so poor a precedent for other princes as she would do if she submitted to so great an indignity. She was ignorant of the laws of England, nor could she tell who could be her peers to try her. She was without counsel. Her papers had been taken from her, and her secretaries removed. She had never injured the Queen by thought or deed ; neither word nor writing could be proved against her. She had come to England for succour, and she had been detained as a prisoner there. The laws of the country had been no protection to her, and she would not answer to them.¹

¹ Mary Stuart to the Duke of Guise, September, 1586: LABANOFF vol. vi.

Her refusal to appear had been anticipated. Sir Walter Mildmay withdrew. A few hours after Burghley came to her with the Chancellor. Neither her imprisonment nor her prerogative, they said, could exempt her, living as she was in England, from the obligations of a subject. The commission had come down with full powers to try her, and if she refused to appear she would be proceeded against in her absence.

Still she stood her ground. She was no subject, she said, and would die a thousand deaths before she acknowledged herself a subject. Before one tribunal only would she consent to stand. She would answer to the Parliament of England, before which she had always desired to defend herself.

The law books contained no precedent for the position in which she stood, and the law itself had not provided for so strange an anomaly. She was an independent sovereign, but her place in England was as heir to the crown. To detain her against her will, and to hold her answerable to the laws of a country which she was eager to leave, was to treat her worse than a prisoner of war ; yet by her place in the succession she possessed rights in England, rights which she had been allowed to assert, and rights which Elizabeth had recognized in not allowing them to be impugned, and England in turn possessed corresponding rights over her. Her obligations none the less existed, that neither common law nor statute law had defined them. She had urged against the pretended disabilities of aliens, that Scots were not aliens. She could not have the advantages of naturalization, and at the same time disclaim its responsibilities. She was not an ordinary stranger, and prisoner or no prisoner, sovereign or subject, she could not be permitted to conspire the Queen's death that she might come the sooner by her inheritance. Had Elizabeth imprisoned her without provocation, stained her character with calumnies, and deprived her or tried to deprive her of her place in the succession—that is to say, had her own version of her story been true—there would have been a moral justification of her conduct: but Elizabeth had shown a forbearance towards her without precedent in history, and the present difficulty of dealing with her arose from the exceptional tenderness with which, for the first time, a pretender to the crown had been treated by the possessor of it. Cecil said something of this kind to her, 'which she seemed' however 'little to esteem.'

¹ Narrative of proceedings, October 12—22 : MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Throughout this day and the next the point of law was argued. She was ready, she said, to appear before the Commissioners, provided it was understood and acknowledged that she did not appear as a criminal or as subject to English jurisdiction. Let Parliament declare her next in the succession, or let the Queen declare her next of kin, and she was willing to acknowledge that England had claims upon her; she would then answer in Parliament, or answer before the Queen in person: but she declined to submit herself to the judgment of her adversaries, whom she knew to be determined to condemn her.

‘We then,’ replied Cecil, when she announced her intention, ‘will proceed to-morrow in the cause, though you be absent and continue contumacious.’

She appeared satisfied that it should be so.

‘Search your conscience,’ she said. ‘Look to your honour. God reward you and yours for your judgment against me.’

But Mary Stuart had a justly high opinion of the effect of her personal presence. Her most ardent desire had been to stand confronted with the English nobles. She had confidence in her presence of mind, in her intellect, in the majesty of her appearance and bearing. She had never yet in private encountered any man, except perhaps John Knox, who had resisted wholly the fascination of her presence. As she looked over the list of Commissioners, she must have seen the names of many whom she knew to have been her friends. She perhaps thought it might be prudent to use the opportunity of showing herself to them. The first lawyers in England would be in the court, but on that score she had neither diffidence nor alarm. She was not afraid to encounter the ablest of them with their special weapon of the tongue, and she had no fear that they would have the advantage of her.

She sent for Burghley in the morning, and told him that if the Court would allow a protest she was willing to attend. To allow it, Burghley said, was beyond the Court's power, but it should be received and enrolled. She hesitated; and acquiesced.

The Chamber of Presence, a great saloon, sixty feet long, had been arranged for the trial. At the upper end there was a chair of state, with a canopy representing the throne. Benches were arranged on either side. On the right sat the Chancellor, Lord Burghley, nine Earls, and Viscount Montague; on the left were thirteen Barons.¹ Below these, right and left also, were the Privy Councillors Hatton, Walsingham, Crofts, Sadler, who had held Mary Stuart in his arms when she was a baby, Mildmay, and Sir Amyas Paulet. In front of the Earls on one side, sat the two Chief Justices Wray and Anderson, with Manwood the Chief Baron; on the other four of the Judges. The Attorney and Solicitor-General, Popham and Egerton, sat at a small table immediately before and under the chair of state. In the centre of the room a chair was placed for the Queen of Scots.

She entered composedly in the plain grey dress which she usually wore, and after glancing round the room took her seat. The Chancellor rose, and said briefly, that the Queen having been advertised to her

¹ Earls Oxford, Kent, Derby, | ley, Stafford, Grey, Lumley, Stur-
Worcester, Rutland, Cumberland, | ton, Sands, Wentworth, Mordaunt,
Warwick, Pembroke, Lincoln. | St John of Bletsoe, Compton, and Barons Abergavenny, Zouch, Mor- | Cheyney.

great sorrow that the Queen of Scots had conspired the destruction of herself and the State, had sent them to hear what was to be objected against her, and her defence, if she was willing to make one.

She replied, rising also, that she had come to England to seek assistance which the Queen had promised her, and she had been held prisoner ever since. She was not an English subject. She was a Princess, and answerable as such to no earthly tribunal whatever. She did not appear as a criminal; but understanding that certain things were to be objected to her she was ready to hear and refute them.

Bromley rejoined that every person, of what degree soever, who in England broke the laws of England, was answerable to those laws.

The protest and the answer were recorded, and the business proceeded.

Gawdy, one of the Judges of the Queen's Bench, opened the case for the Crown, stated the circumstances of the Babington plot, and concluded that the Queen of Scots was privy to it, approved it, and abetted it.

She was in somewhat the same position as she had been at the time of the inquiry at York. She knew that something had been discovered which touched her, but she did not know how much, or with what distinctness.

She said boldly that she knew nothing of Babington, had never spoken to him, written to him, or received letter from him. She protested that she had never intended harm to the Queen, or knew that it had been intended by others. She inquired what evidence they had against her, and desired to see it.

Babington's letters to her were read over.

'It may be that Babington wrote these letters,' she said, 'but let it be proved that I received them. If Babington or others affirm it, I say they lie openly.'

Babington's confession was produced, and Savage's and Ballard's. Every fresh feature must have taken her by surprise, but her self-possession did not fail her, and still she clung to her denial.

Last came her own letter, written in reply to Babington. She denied that it was hers. It might be in her cipher, but she had neither dictated nor written it. Cipher was easily counterfeited, and for all that she knew the letter might have been composed by Walsingham.

Few persons present knew how the conspiracy had been discovered, but rumours had perhaps gone abroad that there had been treachery, and that Walsingham had been concerned in it.

'I call God to record,' he said rising, 'that as a private person I have done nothing unbecoming an honest man, nor as I bear the place of a public person have I done anything unworthy my place. I confess that being very careful of the safety of the Queen and realm, I have curiously searched out the practices against it. If Ballard had offered me his help I should not have refused it.'

It was a random shot. She must have seen that it told, and with great skill she pressed the point no further. She begged him not to be displeased with her. Reports had reached her, she said, but she did not believe them, and she could but wish that he in turn would give as little credit to calumnies against herself. 'Do not believe,' she exclaimed, 'that I have consented to the Queen's destruction,' and then with a burst of tears, 'I would never make shipwreck of my soul by conspiring the destruction of my dearest sister.'

They pressed her with the confessions of Nau and Curle. She asked why they had brought the confessions, why had they not brought the men themselves, and placed them face to face with her? Curle, she said, was a plaything in the hands of Nau; and for Nau, availing herself adroitly of English prejudice though her uncle was the object of it, she said he had been secretary to the Cardinal of Lorraine, and could be bribed or frightened into swearing anything. She admitted freely, that considering herself to have been unjustly detained in England, she had sought help wherever she could hope to find it, and the frankness of her confession bespoke credibility to her denials. Then in the grand style of which she was so accomplished a mistress, though scarcely keeping her promise to Barbara Mowbray, she continued:—

'All majesty and all safety of all Princes fall to the ground if they depend on the writings and testimony of secretaries. I delivered nothing to them but what nature delivered to me, that I might at length recover my liberty. I am not to be convicted but by my own word or writing. If they have written anything which may be hurtful to the Queen my sister, they have written it without my knowledge; let them bear the punishment. Sure I am if they were here present they would clear me of blame.'

Burghley reminded her of her correspondence with Morgan and Paget and Mendoza. She adhered to her point that she had done no more than she had always warned Elizabeth that she would do,—throw herself on the support of the Catholic Powers. She confined her denial to the conspiracy for the assassination, and no question could shake the constancy with which she clung to it; no cross question could entangle her in contradiction. She still solemnly declared that she knew nothing either of Babington or Ballard.

So the first day closed. She had produced some effect, but probably less than she had expected. When the court resumed the next morning, she was warmer and more passionate. She complained that her reputation was argued away by the wretched inferences of lawyers. 'Princes anointed,' she seemed to think, were not like common mortals, and the word of a prince, if solemnly given, was an evidence not to be challenged. The cause was so handled, she said, that she was made to descend from her proper dignity, and appear like a criminal before a court of justice. The object she well knew was to exclude her from the succession, but she was more like Esther than Judith, more willing to pray for the people than to injure the meanest of them; and she used words which, if they meant anything, implied that she was still open to conversion to Protestantism if the real objection to her was her creed.¹ With an assumption which, considering the presence in which she spoke, was extremely ingenious, that the charge against her had been invented by the Puritans for a political purpose, she intimated that they might fail after all; 'the Princes her kinsmen' might prove too strong for the Reformation, and their whole cause might be overthrown. She renewed her own protest; she declined to submit to the judgment of a court which she accused of being prejudiced against her, and again she required her denial to be believed, as made on the word of a Princess.

Burghley, feeling himself especially challenged, undertook to reply.

'The Queen of the castle,' he said in a letter to Davison, 'was content to appear again before us in public to be heard. Her intention was to move pity by artificial speeches, and to lay the blame on the Queen and the council that all past troubles did ensue. I so encountered her with reasons out of her own experience, as she had not that advantage she looked for, the auditory finding her case not pitiable, her allegations untrue; whereby great debate fell yesternight very long, and this day renewed with great stomaching.'²

He spoke with stern plainness, recapitulating the acknowledgments of Babington and the secretaries, and

¹ 'Her enemies,' said she, 'had divulged abroad that she was irreligious.' 'The time was when I would have been instructed in the Protestant religion, but they would not suffer me to be so, as if they cared not what became of my soul.' —CAMDEN.

² Burghley to Davison, October 15—25: ELLIS, 1st series.

leaving the Commissioners to decide whether the Queen of Scots or they were to be believed. He rebuked the insinuation of unfair purposes, and he was able to do so with the more confidence because he had been so notoriously favourable to her before the discovery of the plot, that he had not been trusted with the secret by which it had been detected. Mary Stuart charged him with being 'her adversary.' 'I am adversary,' he said; 'to Queen Elizabeth's adversaries,' and with successive illustrations out of her other letters he exposed more and more distinctly her sustained and elaborate artifices. He charged her with having attempted to make over her rights in England to the King of Spain. He proved that Allen and Parsons were at the very moment engaged at Rome in persuading the Pope to consent. He questioned her out of her letters to Mendoza. He quoted her own words, that if her purpose was known, her friends in England would be lost to her for ever. But England, he told her, was not to be conveyed like an estate by the will of its self-imagined owner; and in the ears of all but the wildest fanatics the name of a foreign sovereign was detestable as death.

She was not to be quelled. She listened in cold scorn. When Burghley ended she demanded again to be heard in Parliament or to speak in person with the Queen, and then rose with undisturbed self-possession and left the room.

At this moment she had not the slightest misgiving that she was really in personal danger. She had amused herself throughout the scene with watching the faces of her judges. She examined Paulet afterwards, 'as to who this lord was and that was,' and seemed 'extremely curious.' 'She noted also who had spoken much and who little or nothing.' She observed casually to him that English history was a bloody one; but 'had no meaning in her speech,' so far as Paulet could gather, 'to reach to her own cause.' 'She was utterly void of all fear of harm.'¹

She perfectly comprehended Elizabeth's character. The court had been commissioned to pass sentence. On the second day of the trial a courier arrived from Windsor with 'a few hasty lines scribbled at midnight,'² ordering them to stay further proceedings till they had returned with their report to London. The assembly was prorogued for ten days, and the place appointed for the next meeting was the Star Chamber.

There was no question of the magnitude of the danger to which the country had been exposed. The King of Spain had been so much taken by Mendoza's account of the plot, that he had overcome his hesitation, and he had been pricked in conscience at his past remissness. To kill Elizabeth he said was an enterprise so saintly,³ and would be of so great service⁴ to Almighty God, that God he was assured would prosper it, unless provoked by the backwardness of men. He had therefore given orders to

¹ Paulet to Walsingham, October 24—November 3: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Davison to Walsingham, October 14—24: MSS. Domestic.

³ 'Tan santa empresa.'

⁴ 'De tanto servicio.'

equip a squadron with all speed at Lisbon, and had directed the Prince of Parma to cross the Channel immediately that the deed should be done.¹ The evidence that had convinced Burghley that the Queen of Scots was a party to the conspiracy, had convinced Mendoza also. He told the King that she had implicitly acknowledged it in a letter to himself.²

Her bold denials however had shaken some of her hearers, and when they next came together 'the matter,' as Walsingham informed Stafford, 'was more advisedly considered.' 'The two secretaries were brought before the Lords, and openly affirmed as much vivâ voce as they had before deposed in writing, which brought a great satisfaction to the Commissioners, inasmuch that albeit some of them stood well affected to her, yet considering the plainness and evidence of the proofs, every one of them after this gave their sentence against her, finding her not only accessory and privy to the conspiracy, but also an imaginer and compasser of her Majesty's destruction.'³

Found guilty, she became thus incapable, ipso facto, under the Act of 1584, of succeeding to the crown. The Queen and the approaching Parliament were left to decide what should be done further; the commission only, before it dissolved, relieving the anxieties of James of Scotland by a declaration 'that the sentence

¹ Philip to Mendoza, September 5: TEULET, vol. v.

² 'La Reyna de Escocia me parece que debia de saber bien el negocio por lo que se vee por una carta que me ha escrito.'—Mendoza al Rey, 10 Setiembre: TEULET, vol. v.

³ Walsingham to Sir Edward Stafford: ELLIS, 1st series, vol. iii.

derogated nothing from him in title or honour, but that he was in the same place, degree, and right, as if it had never been pronounced.’¹

There was an expectation that Spain might still move notwithstanding the discovery. Huntly and Claude Hamilton had sent an express to Philip, imploring him not to be discouraged. They promised if Parma would lend them six thousand men to coerce James, and force him to interpose in his mother’s behalf. But Philip, disheartened because God had done less than he expected, and considering perhaps that Mary Stuart was an obstacle to his ambition that it might be convenient if Elizabeth removed, turned a deaf ear, and determined to work the problem his own way.

Chasteauneuf’s misgivings grew darker. He knew that Elizabeth was unwilling to consent to execution ; but if sentence of death followed upon the verdict of the commission, as it was likely that it would, he thought Mary Stuart’s enemies might some day find the Queen in a yielding humour, and persuade her into signing the warrant. Mary Stuart might then be put out of the way privately, and it would be given out that she had died of a cough.²

For the present however everything rested with Parliament. It had been summoned for the 15th of October. It was prorogued till the 27th, and again till the 29th (New Style November 8th), when it was opened by commission, Elizabeth herself not appearing.

¹ CAMDEN.

² Chasteauneuf to Brulart, November 6 : Egerton Papers.

The Lords were bound by the judgment which they had already given. The Commons had twice before petitioned that the Queen of Scots should be put to death ; and every knight and burgess had come from his home with a mind made up, that the peace and prospects of the nation should no longer be vexed with this eternal trouble. After an explanatory speech from the Chancellor, a resolution was passed for an immediate address to the Queen. A joint committee of the two Houses was appointed to draw up a form. The conspiracy was gone over once more in all its particulars. The depositions were heard and reheard. The successive paragraphs as they were sketched were referred back and debated in the Houses themselves. Finally, after eight days' consideration, a form was agreed on, and was presented by a joint deputation.

'The Queen of Scots,' said the Lords and Commons, 'regarded the crown of England as belonging to herself, and would never cease to seek what she conceived that she had been unlawfully deprived of. She was hardened in malice, and so bent upon the destruction of her Majesty, that if she could compass it, she cared not what might happen to herself. She was a fierce, hard, and desperate woman, and as long as she lived her Majesty would never be in safety. She was poisoned with Popery, and was burning to destroy the Gospel in England and everywhere. The King of Spain was preparing to invade the country as soon as her Majesty should be killed, and the nation would then become the slave of strangers, the Commonwealth would be destroyed, and the rights of the Crown would be sold to an Italian priest. From the day that the Queen of Scots came to England she had been a canker at its heart corrupting the minds of the people. Popery was thriving through her presence, and mercy, if mercy was shown her, would be cruelty to all loyal subjects. Further weakness on the part of her Majesty would decide those who were wavering to go over to the enemy, and the association formed for her protection would be broken up, for the members of it would be forced by herself into a violation of their oaths. The Queen of Scots, in joining that association, had passed her own sentence; and for the cause of God, of the Church, the realm, and her own person, they demanded that a just condemnation might be followed by as just an execution.'¹

Those to whom it has been given to have a perfect insight into the motives of human actions, are assured that Elizabeth throughout her dealings with the Queen of Scots, was animated by a mean, malicious, personal jealousy, and they interpret and comment upon her answer to the prayer of her Parliament on the same theory. Intuitive certainty is beyond the reach of argument. More humble inquirers however, who are contented to study Elizabeth's character in its outward manifestations, can understand what she said without suspecting her of hypocrisy; nay, may consider the present as one of the few instances in which she expressed in public her exact meaning with entire sincerity.

¹ Petition of Parliament, November, 1586: D'Ewes' Journals. Abridged.

She spoke with feeling of the Divine protection which had shielded her from so many dangers. She acknowledged simply and gratefully the loyal affection which throughout her reign she had met with from her subjects. 'Her life,' she said, 'had now been dangerously shot at, and nothing had grieved her more than that a person of her own sex, of the same rank and degree, and nearly allied to her in blood, had fallen into so great a crime. So far was she from bearing the Queen of Scots ill will, that she had written secretly to her that if she would confess her fault, her practices should be wrapped in silence. Even now, if the Queen of Scots would repent, and if there were no other interests in the matter but her own, she would still willingly pardon her. Nay, if England might by her own death attain a more flourishing estate and a better prince, she would gladly lay down her life. She cared to keep it only for her people's sake. For herself, she saw no great cause why she should be fond to live or fear to die. She was in a cruel position. She was called on to order the death of a kinswoman, whose practices had caused her deep distress. Her situation was so unprecedented, and the matter itself of so great moment, that she trusted an immediate resolution would not be demanded of her. In concerns less important than the present she was accustomed to deliberate long upon that which was once to be resolved. She promised to pray God to illuminate her mind to foresee what would be for the good of the Church and Commonwealth, and admitting that there would be danger in delay, she undertook to give her answer with due conveniency.’¹

Opinion which has credited Elizabeth with a statesmanship which she did not possess, has condemned her no less unreasonably for qualities which in a private person are blameless and interesting. She was a woman of clear intellectual perception, but without intellectual passions ; singularly careless of herself and therefore of undecided temperament. On great questions, where arguments are equally balanced, the loves and hates of men, their beliefs and sympathetic convictions, rather than conclusions of reasoning, give them resolution to plant their steps firmly. Elizabeth had none of these, and was in consequence uncertain, unstable and vacillating.

She was, literally and truly, extremely embarrassed. She could not tell what to do, and she said so. The responsibility lay wholly with herself, while the interest was less hers than the realm’s. To Protestant England the Queen of Scots was a menace of civil war and ruin. To Elizabeth, if individually dangerous, the Queen of Scots was also a political security. To put her to death would be at once dreadfully distressing to herself, and would be construed by the charity of the world into private revenge. The execution would involve an entire change of policy. The shifts which had served her so long would serve her no longer. For the remainder of the reign she was almost certain to be involved in war, while she would risk offending France and Scotland, whose friendship was of vital consequence to her.

¹ Speech of the Queen, November 12—22 : CAMDEN. Abridged.

After three days' consideration, she sent a message to the Houses asking them to find 'some other way.' There was a distinct alternative, in which the moderate part of Europe was entirely prepared to acquiesce. The crown might be settled by Act of Parliament upon James, and the Queen of Scots be kept in solitary confinement for the rest of her life, where no eye but a single attendant's should ever look upon her again.

It was a compliment to Mary Stuart's character and ability, that death was believed to be the only prison that would hold her. So the Scots thought when she was at Lochleven. So the English Parliament thought now. Lords and Commons, after another week's discussion, voted unanimously that there was 'no other way' but execution. The original petition was enrolled. The Chancellor and the Speaker were sent down to Richmond to say that the clemency so long shown the Queen of Scots had encouraged her dangerous boldness, that to hesitate longer would be sinful, 'and would be likely to provoke the anger of Almighty God.'

As perplexed as ever, Elizabeth could neither consent nor refuse. She spoke at length, repeating much of what she had said before, and she gave at last what she called 'an answer answerless.' The continuance of the pressure was painful to her, and Parliament was adjourned till February. Burghley wished her to promise, that 'she would prefer no other men's advice, being strangers, before that of her own people,' and though she could resolve no further, to allow at least the sentence of the commission to be published. 'It was more than a month old.' 'It was still dumb, it was time that it should speak.' This if nothing else would give the nation some satisfaction.¹ She agreed at last to take this one small step, but reluctantly and not till after many days.

Meanwhile the French Government, sincerely anxious to save Mary Stuart's life, had roused James into unwilling activity. M. de Belière, the Minister of Finance at Paris, was coming over on a special embassy. James was required to send some one to unite in a joint intercession, and could not refuse. William Keith was chosen to go to London, and was instructed to act with Belière. The Master of Gray however intimated to Walsingham that the King, though very earnest that his mother should not be executed, yet might be reconciled to much by an increase of pension, and by a Parliamentary recognition of his title.²

The Queen, as usual, 'was not disposed to redeem perils at so dear a price,'³ and James hinted significantly that if she refused he might be driven to interpose in earnest. 'The King,' wrote Gray to Archibald

¹ Burghley to Davison, November 24—December 1: MSS. Domestic.

² The Master of Gray to Walsingham, October 11—21, October 23—November 2, November 6—16.

³ Walsingham to Davison, October 13—23: MSS. Scotland.

Douglas, who was again at the English Court, 'begins to think that he has done more for the Queen than he has received appearance of good meaning, and wills you and me to make it manifest that he may be compelled to follow some other course ;' 'and by God,' continued Gray, who had done his best to keep James quiet, and was uneasy for the consequences to himself if Mary Stuart was spared, 'by God, I am of opinion if franker meaning and dealing be not used towards him he shall do this in effect ; in conscience as yet he is right fast and will be loath to take evil impressions ; but you know what time works ; all men drive at him, first for his mother, next for his title.' ¹

In plain language, James was willing to sell his interest in his mother, but he required to be paid for it. His terms seeming likely to be refused, he was disposed to make himself disagreeable. He affected to listen more seriously to the remonstrances of Courcelles, the French ambassador. He undertook to send a second representative to London of higher rank than Keith, with a more emphatic message. But he was still thinking more of himself than of his mother. He chose Gray as the person who should carry it, and Gray, though not liking the work on which he was to be sent, dared not decline.

'Refuse I,' he wrote again to Douglas, 'the King will think I know already what shall come, and if she die will quarrel with me. Live she, I shall have double harm. Refuse I not, if she die, men will think I have lent her a hand. Live she by my travail, I bring a staff to my own head, yet if I cannot eschew I mean to accept the commission.’¹

¹ Gray to Douglas, November 10 : MURDIN.

Elizabeth’s resolution was not likely to be affected either way very deeply by such limping dealings as these. The attitude of France was more dangerous. Before the trial at Fotheringay, Dr Wotton carried copies of the compromising letters to Paris, with the confessions of the secretaries, and was directed in showing them to the King to say that ‘the Queen of Scots’ malice had grown to a point that it could no longer be borne with.’ Elizabeth had twice saved her life, had saved her honour ‘by suppressing the infamous letters between her and Bothwell,’ and now in self-protection must look to herself.² The King had replied by bidding Chasteauneuf protest against the trial of a sovereign Princess who was exempt from human judgment,³ and when Chasteauneuf reported the sentence of the commission and the petition of Parliament for the execution, M. de Belèvre came over in haste to entreat, and if entreaty failed to threaten.

When contemporary statesmen, with the fullest opportunities for forming a judgment, come to opposite conclusions, the historian is bound to speak with diffidence. Mendoza at Paris believed that Henry was in earnest, that for political reasons he desired the Queen of Scots' life to be spared, that Elizabeth herself was equally determined not to put her to death, and that she affected uncertainty only to sell her at a higher price to France.¹ The Pope was of the same opinion as regarded the King's disposition. The Nuncio at Paris, at Mendoza's instigation, had reminded Henry that if the Queen of Scots was out of the way the crowns of England and Ireland, both by her own will and by right of succession, would fall to the King of Spain; that France was therefore in the first degree interested in keeping her alive. The Nuncio's report had probably satisfied Sextus, who persuaded himself therefore that she was in no danger. Olivarez, on the other hand, was unable to believe that Elizabeth would have gone so far if she had not intended extremities, or that, considering the extreme importance of the French alliance to her, she would have dared to bring the Queen of Scots to trial unless assured of Henry's connivance.²

¹ Gray to Douglas, November 27; MURDIN.

² Instructions to Dr Wotton, September 29—October 9.

³ The King of France to Chasteauneuf, November 1—11: MSS. France.

Sir Edward Stafford tried to discover whether Believre carried secret instructions, but he ascertained only that if there was an unavowed purpose in his mission, no one at all, not even Secretary Villeroy himself, was acquainted with it; and he gathered that the jealousy of Spain was undiminished, and that if there was an alarm from Parma, the King could still be de-

¹ 'Por vendelle mas cara á Francia.'—Mendoza al Rey, Noviembre 9: TEULET, vol. v.

² 'Le dixe que si la Reyna muriese fuese cierto Su Sant^a que era con su intelligencia y consentimiento del Rey, pues no era verisimil que teniendo en él toda su esperanza para librarse de Su Sant^a y de V. Mag^a, le quisiese offender en una cosa de tanta importancia.'—Olivarez al Rey, 17—27 de Enero: MSS. Simancas.

pended on.¹ Mendoza adhered to the view which he had all along expressed, that English politics required that the Queen of Scots should be kept alive, and he argued with appearance of reason that if Elizabeth had a private understanding with the King and really meant to destroy her, she would have done it at once without waiting to pass the appearance of an affront upon France by rejecting its intercession.

Amidst these uncertainties Belière left Paris on the 6th—16th of November. He loitered on his way, and was eleven days in reaching Calais, where he found letters from Chasteauneuf, bidding him haste or he would come too late. There was a heavy wind from the south-west, but he crossed in spite of the weather; he found a carriage waiting for him at Dover, and was in London on Monday, the 21st (December 1). He was received by the people with strong demonstrations of displeasure. The political constancy of Henry had not removed the memories of Saint Bartholomew, and the ambassador was suspected of having brought assassins in his train to do the work which Babington had failed to do. The Queen refused to see him till she had given her answer to the Parliament. On the 27th (December 7), the day of the adjournment, she gave him and Chasteauneuf an audience at Richmond.

The reception was formal and cold. The Queen was in her chair of state. Leicester, who had returned from the Low Countries, with Hatton, Burghley, and others of the council, stood behind her, while Belière spoke.

¹ Stafford to Burghley, November 17—27: MSS. France.

The King of France, he said, regretted as deeply as any one the wicked designs of her Majesty's enemies. How far the Queen of Scots had shared their guilt the King could not pretend to say, but he had failed to understand who in such a matter could be her accusers or who could be her judge. Public prosecutors might charge a subject, but the Queen of Scotland, the Queen Dowager of France, and sister-in-law of its King, was no subject, and to pass sentence upon her was to violate the prerogatives of princes. Complimenting the Queen on the majesty of her appearance and on the reputation which she had earned throughout the world for virtue and wisdom, he declared himself unable to believe that the far-famed Elizabeth of England could forget the words of Plato, that common mortals were lead and iron, but that the material of kings was gold.

In the same vein of rhetoric he proceeded to the matter of his argument. Her ministers, he said, pretended that while the Queen of Scots survived, her life would never be safe. The truth was rather that the Queen of Scots' death would aggravate her danger. The Catholic Powers were threatening England in the interests of religion, rather than in the interests of the Queen of Scots. The execution would but furnish them with a fresh and more specious pretext for their enterprise.

'I tell you, Madam,' he said, 'that instead of arresting the invasion with which this realm is menaced, you will only precipitate it. Hitherto the Queen of Scots has been the target which has caught the arrows that have been aimed at your person. She is a stone that you hold in your hand. Fling it at your enemy, and it is gone; you can threaten with it no more. Kill her as some advise you, and her death will arm your adversaries with despair, and will give them a more plausible ground on which to assail you. Your Majesty is a wise and prudent princess; we in France have observed you closely for these nineteen years; you have used the pretensions of the Queen^o of Scots to succeed you on the throne of these realms, as your strongest protection, and it is a maxim among us that those who change the base of their policy are on the way towards a fall. The Spanish Minister in Paris says openly that it will be to his master's advantage if the Queen of Scots is destroyed, being assured that the English Catholics will then give him their undivided allegiance.¹ Your Majesty has reigned long and happily, because so far you have preferred moderation to violence. Honour points clearly towards clemency. Interest is at least equally balanced. Think of the judgment of posterity and of the name which you will leave behind you. Spare this lady and you will lay my master under an eternal obligation, and you will earn immortal renown for yourself.'²

¹ 'Je vous diray, Madame, ce qui m'a esté assuré pour véritable par ung personnage d'honneur qu'ung certain ministre d'ung Prince qui vous peut estre suspecte dit ouvertement qu'il seroit bon pour la grandeur de son maistre que la Roynie d'Escosse fust desjà perdue, pour ce qu'il est bien assuré que le party des Catholiques Angloys se rangeroit entièrement du costé de sondit maistre.'

² Speech of M. Belière, November 27—December 7. Abridged: TEULET, vol. iv.

Elizabeth must have many times repeated the same arguments to herself; but either Belière's oratory sounded hollow, or the King had sent her some private message that he was only moving for form's sake, or else, which is also probable, she may not have trusted him. He had outwardly submitted to the League. She had made another application for Morgan, and Morgan was still withheld from her; even in the Bastile he had been enabled to plot another murder, and as it seemed with impunity.

In a loud voice, and her features working with passion, she replied that she was sorry M. Belière should have come to England on so bad an errand. She appealed to God to judge between her and the Queen of Scots. 'The Queen of Scots,' she said, 'had sought shelter in her realm, had received nothing but kindness there, and in recompense had three times sought her life. No misfortune which had ever overtaken her had cost her so many tears as this last conspiracy.' 'She had read as many books,' she said, 'as any prince or princess in Christendom, and had never met with anything so strange and painful. Her life was naturally valuable to her, and she could not be safe in her own realm. She was a poor lone woman surrounded by secret enemies who were perpetually seeking to kill her.'¹

The tone was unfavourable, but the answer was not final. The ambassadors left her, and afterward Burghley and Walsingham endeavoured privately to convince them that the execution was absolutely necessary. A week later, the Queen sent for them again, and inquired why Morgan was not sent over after this fresh crime. She pointed to Hunsdon, who was standing near, and declared that if her own cousin had conspired against the life of the King of France, she would not have protected him; and she said she wanted Morgan's evidence.

¹ Reply of the Queen of England: TEULET, vol. iv.

'The Queen of Scots,' Belèvre answered, 'had so many witnesses against her already in England that there was no occasion to fetch another from France. The King could not be so inhuman as to send over a knife to cut the throat of his sister-in-law.' 'His master was waiting anxiously for the Queen's resolution. If he was to understand that the request was refused, he must ask permission to return to Paris.'

She said she would give him an answer in three days, and so once more dismissed him.

Elizabeth was perhaps no more certain than the world generally, what France really wished, and Scotland had become equally perplexing. Undoubtedly James was willing to drive a bargain for acquiescing in his mother's death; but Elizabeth would not give him his price, and it was perfectly possible that in his disappointment he might revenge himself as he had done before. Claude Hamilton was still pressing for Spanish assistance in Scotland, and Mendoza was working hard to overcome Philip's indisposition. Spanish honour, Mendoza said, was concerned in making an effort for the Queen of Scots. The Irish enterprise had failed because it was managed ‘por bonetes’—by priests’ caps. The plans for invading England had failed through the weakness of the English Catholics. But with Scotland they would be on solid ground. The Lords there wanted but a handful of money and five or six thousand of Parma’s soldiers. With the help of these, they had undertaken to kill the Lords of the other faction, and the Kirk ministers, to take possession of the fortresses, and to dispose of the King and the realm. James himself was secretly on their side; he had consented to their using any means they could find to extricate him from the English party, and was showing a better disposition in religion than at any previous time.¹

Had Philip come forward effectually, James’s conversion would probably have prospered. But Parma was unwilling to spare troops, and was otherwise unfavourable; and Philip, intent on the succession for himself, was unwilling to embarrass himself with a youth of whom on every ground private and public he thought as ill as possible. Neither Parma’s objection however nor Philip’s politics were fully understood in Scotland; a pressure continued to be laid upon James to accept Spanish help, and James as usual shuffled between the two parties, and held out for a substantial consideration before he would promise Elizabeth to sit still. He concealed his hand carefully, so

¹ The Catholic Lords of Scotland Mendoza says had sent him word that they had ‘consentimiento secreto del Rey para ponelle en libertad por cualquier medio que fuese,

y que ya el Rey á los Catholicos no solo les favorecia en secreto, pero holgaba que le hablasen en materia de religion,’ &c.—Mendoza al Rey, 14.-24 Diciembre: TEULET, vol. v.

carefully that Courcelles says the citizens of Edinburgh hooted him in the street as he passed. He maintained at a public table, that the ties of friendship were more binding than the ties of blood.¹ Many a proud Scot would have had him threaten Elizabeth with war. He said positively that he would do nothing of the kind so long as his personal prospects were respected,² even if his mother were executed. 'The King,' wrote Courcelles, 'desires evidently to reign alone. His own wish for his mother is that she be confined henceforward in one room, never more to speak with man or woman. He would have her declared formally subject to the laws of England, to be tried and put to death if she conspire again, not as Queen but as a private person, and as vassal to the Queen of England.'³ Yet, all the while, he had his intelligence with Claude Hamilton to fall back upon, with what purpose, whether honest, half honest, or wholly dishonest, it is profitless to inquire further.

Gray meanwhile was sent with Robert Melville after Keith, in appearance to support Belière, in reality to demand conditions to which Gray was now aware that Elizabeth would refuse consent; and of the effect of the refusal upon Scotland and upon the King, he

¹ 'Que le sang de parentage ou d'affinité ne nous oblige tant que l'amitié que nous avons envers ceux qui ne sont de notre sang.'—Courcelles to d'Esneval, December 20—30: Egerton Papers.

² He would not go to war, he said, 'mesmes advenant la mort de sa mère, sinon en cas qu'on le voulust frustrer de son tiltre à la succession d'Angleterre.'

³ Courcelles to d'Esneval, December 20—30: Egerton Papers.

could conjecture as imperfectly as any one. He wrote to Walsingham to apologize for his coming. If he was not true to the Queen of England, he said, 'he was content to have his head cut off on a scaffold.' To have refused the mission would have ruined him, but the meaning of it, he declared, 'was modest and not menacing.' If the Queen of Scots' life was not to be spared, he recommended that he and his companion 'should be stayed by the way or commanded to retire.'¹

The King, it seems, was not contented with the declaration of the commission, and desired to obtain a legal engagement, 'that no decree nor procedure in law against his mother should prejudice any title that he might pretend to the crown when it should please God to call her Majesty.'²

The sentence had by this time been published. It was received by the people with an outburst of wild delight. From tower and steeple the bells crashed out, unceasing for a whole day and night. Church answered church till the news had been borne to the furthest glen in Cumberland. London was illuminated. Faggots blazed in town and village; and a shout of exultation rose out of every loyal throat. Protestant England for the first time felt itself secure. The phantom of civil war disappeared which had hung like a nightmare over the country; and tradesman, and yeoman, and peasant at last drew their breath freely.

¹ The Master of Gray to Walsingham, December 13—23, December 20—30: MSS. Scotland.

² The Scottish Ambassador's memorial, December, 1586: MSS. Ibid.

For twenty-four hours the London bells rang on, pealing in Belière's ear the death-knell of Mary Stuart. The Queen had promised him an answer in three days. He accepted the publication of the sentence as a conclusive expression of her determination, and, without troubling her to throw it into words or seeking another interview, he wrote to say that as his master would have taken her consent to his entreaty as the highest of favours, so he would regard his sister-in-law's execution as a mortal offence; and he desired her at least to grant sufficient respite to enable him to communicate with Paris. A deputation of French gentlemen carried the letter to Richmond. The Queen would not see them, but replied through Walsingham that she would consider the request, and soon after sent a verbal¹ answer that she would allow twelve days. The hardest rider in the embassy was instantly on his way to Paris. He returned two days before the time was out, with an answer from the King to Chasteauneuf as sincere apparently as the most single purpose could dictate. Henry undertook, and he said that he was speaking for the House of Guise as well as for himself, that if the Queen of Scots' life was spared she should relinquish her claims on the succession for ever, and never trouble England more. He bade Chasteauneuf lavish money among the council, if money would do good. If nothing

¹ 'Car les Angloys,' says one of the party, 'ont ceste coustume ordinaire de ne negocier rien par escript, mais seulement donner paroles, lesquelles ils revocquent deux heures après.'—Advis pour M. de Villeroy, Janvier, 1587: TEULET, vol. iv.

availed and if the Queen persisted, he said that France could not pass it over.¹

It was now the week before Christmas. The Queen had gone to Greenwich for the usual holyday, and Bellièvre's final interview was postponed till the 27th 1587. (January 6). He had little hope. The people January. with whom he spoke were all in favour of severity. He conceived Elizabeth to have resolved on the execution, and the Court to be acquiescing in it to please her.² When admitted into her presence, he addressed her formally with an elaborate argument. He said, as before, that the death of the Queen of Scots would be more dangerous to Elizabeth than her life; that if she was spared, not his own master only, but every Sovereign in Christendom would become bound for Elizabeth's security; while bloody remedies were more often the beginning of fresh calamities than the end of those which they were meant to cure. To abstain from bloodshed the ambassador said was the first condition of a prosperous reign, and his master could not believe that she would contradict the maxims which had hitherto guided her conduct. If she was determined to persevere however he was obliged to tell her that the King could not regard the Queen of Scots as fairly amenable to English laws, and not only would he resent the execution, on the common ground which he shared with his brother princes, but would have to look on it as a special affront to himself.¹

¹ The King of France to Chasteauneuf and Bellièvre, December 14—24: Egerton Papers.

² Bellièvre to Brulart, December 26—January 5: TEULET, vol. iv.

‘M. Belière,’ said the Queen, when he had ended, ‘does the King your master bid you use these words to me?’

‘Yes, Madam,’ he answered; ‘it is his express command.’

Two hours’ conversation followed, with no positive result. She said she would send some one to Paris to speak to the King. She showed signs of great irresolution, and was unwilling to let Belière leave her. She detained him on various pretexts, and only after a week allowed him at last to go, taking with him a letter of complaint and remonstrance to the King, in which she said she would not be frightened with menaces, and that to threaten her was the readiest way to make the execution certain.²

The second day after Belière’s departure Gray and Melville were admitted also, Gray’s advice to stop them on the road not having been acted upon. Melville had grown old in Mary Stuart’s service. He at any rate was true to her, and had come to London with a purpose as honest as Gray’s was false and treacherous. They said, like Belière, that they had come to intercede for the Queen of Scots’ life. Elizabeth asked what security they could give her for the Queen of Scots’ future behaviour. They answered that the King and the Scotch nobility would be securities for her, and that

¹ Address of M. Belière, December 27—January 6 : TEULET, vol. iv.

² Elizabeth to the King of France.

Holograph. January 10, 1587 : MSS. France.

if she was placed in her son's hands, he would undertake for her safe keeping.

'That,' said Elizabeth abruptly, 'would be to arm my enemy with double power, and make him the stronger to do me hurt.'

The ambassadors starting at the word enemy, she coloured, and said she did not mean that the King of Scotland was her enemy. It was a mode of speech. If they could suggest any means by which her own life could be made secure without the execution, she would be very well pleased.

Melville spoke at length, but vaguely; and knowing that James was at heart only anxious for his own interests, Elizabeth suggested maliciously, that if she pardoned his mother, he should renounce his own pretensions in the event of any future conspiracy. If he would do this the Lords and Commons might perhaps be satisfied, and might allow her to live.¹

Neither Scotland nor James were prepared to sacrifice what they had set their hearts on with so much passion. The Queen told the ambassadors that their request could not otherwise be granted. They made a formal protest and withdrew.

The Queen had promised that she would not allow herself to be moved by the remonstrances of strangers, and she had so far kept her word; but neither the dis-

¹ 'Si le Roy d'Escosse luymesme | Royne d'Angleterre, cela pourroit
voulloit renoncer à tout le droict que | servir à contenter les Seigneurs de il prétend à la couronne d'Angleterre | ce Royaulme.'—Advis pour M. de en cas que il advint cy-après que | Villeroy: TEULET, vol. iv.
l'on conjurast contre la vie de la | missal of Believre and the Scots, nor the attitude of Parliament, nor the feeling which had been displayed so signally in every part of England, had persuaded those who believed that they were behind the scenes that the Queen of Scots was in real danger. The opinion in Scotland was that her pardon was to be part of the conditions of a peace with Spain. In the French embassy there was an expectation that she would be spared at least till the next offence. M. Brulart's secretary, who had been in London with Believre and returned to Paris before him, brought word that the King's intercession had really prevailed. The Queen of Scots was to be brought to the Tower, where she was to be kept as a Carmelite nun, waited on by two women, and never seen but through a grating. Cecil himself, according to Mendoza, wrote something of the same kind to Sir Edward Stafford. 'It will be as I have always told your Majesty,' said Mendoza, in reporting the words to Philip. 'The Queen of England wishes to keep her alive, and the French King and his mother wish her to be held a close prisoner.'¹

To Mary Stuart herself the door of escape ^{1586.} was still held open. Before the publication of ^{November.} the sentence Lord Buckhurst and Secretary Beale were sent to Fotheringay with a copy of it. They were directed to tell her that the court had re-examined her sentence, and had convinced themselves, that notwithstanding her denial, she was still really guilty. Their verdict had been confirmed by Parliament, the Queen was urged 'by many strong and invincible arguments to proceed to her execution, as the seed-plot, chief motive, and author of all the late conspiracies;' and was told that if she did not yield 'she would be guilty, both before God and the whole world, of all the miseries and calamities that might come on her refusal.' 'Albeit' therefore 'she knew not yet how it should please God to incline her heart in that behalf; yet she thought it meet in conscience that the Queen of Scots should be forewarned, that she might bethink herself of her sins and offences, both to God and towards herself, and pray for grace to be truly penitent for the same.' 'Had the fault reached no further than her own person,' Elizabeth 'protested before God that she would have freely pardoned it.'¹

¹ Mendoza to Philip, January 14—24: TEULET, vol. v.

When a sentence of death is communicated, to hold out a hope that it will not be executed is usually equivalent to a promise, and no message could have conveyed more plainly that Mary Stuart had but to confess and express regret, and that her last fault, like the long catalogue which had preceded it, would be forgotten. Mary Stuart however shared probably in the general belief² that Elizabeth dared not execute her, and saw only in the evident hesitation a cowardice on which she might safely presume; while the sentence was a feature in itself, which she could make use of to stir the world in her behalf. She was entreated not to deceive herself. She was told that if she refused to beg pardon her life would be really in danger. Fiercely and sternly she dared the Government to do their worst upon her. Having condemned her to death, they might complete their wicked work, she said, and God would recompense her in Paradise.

¹ Instructions to Lord Buckhurst and Mr Beale sent to the Queen of Scots, November 17—27: MSS.

MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

² Secret intelligence, October 31 —November 10: MSS. Ibid.

In the war of words which followed her keen tongue served her well. Lord Buckhurst said that she had taught the Catholics to regard her as their Sovereign, and that neither religion nor her Majesty herself could be safe while she survived. She thanked God for the importance which was attached to her. She was happy, she said, to sacrifice her life in the cause of God and the Church. They told her she was not to die for religion, but for having compassed the deposition and destruction of the reigning Queen. She replied that she was not so presumptuous as to have aspired to two such high distinctions. So far from having intended the Queen's death, she would not have had her suffer the fillip of a finger. She was persecuted as David was, she said, with an implied comparison of Elizabeth to Saul. Her misfortune was only that she could not like David fly by the window.¹

She was allowed an interval to reflect; and then Paulet came to her and said that since she had shown no penitence, she must hereafter be regarded as a private person. She had forfeited her place as a Sovereign, and he must remove the cloth of state in her chamber.

¹ Mary Stuart to the Archbishop of Glasgow, November 24—December 4: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

She answered that she was an anointed Queen. Man could not take her rank from her, and she would die a Queen in spite of them. They had no more right over her, she said, than a highwayman over an honest magistrate whom he might meet at the corner of a wood. God would avenge her. English Kings had been often murdered, and being of the same blood, it was like enough she would fare no better. They had killed King Richard, and now they might kill her.

Resolute, yet keeping still within the bounds of courtesy, Paulet desired her women to remove the hangings. They refused to touch them, shrieking vengeance on him and all belonging to him. Impatiently he called in his own servants, who tore them violently down. He bade them take away her billiard table, saying sternly that she had now no leisure for amusements, and for the first time he covered his head and seated himself in her presence.¹

Her ingenuity was never at fault. Paulet had told her she was a traitress. Where the arms of Scotland had hung she suspended a crucifix for answer, and pointed to it when next he entered. Though she thought her execution unlikely, she must have felt that it was not impossible, and she was determined that, if die she must, she would give her death the character of a martyrdom. It was true that it was on account of her creed that the English Protestants insisted so fiercely on her punishment. She claimed the benefit of their animosity, partly it may be to improve her prospects in the other world, partly also that in seeming to die for religion, she might inflict a mortal wound on the reputation of Elizabeth, and force the Catholic Powers at last for very shame to revenge her. She had hinted to the Commissioners that she might be converted. From this moment all her efforts were directed to making her Romanism as conspicuous as possible, and to enforcing upon every one that she was to die in the cause of the faith. There was no glory in being executed for an attempt to murder. Dying thus, the world could but say that it was a severe expiation of a real crime. As a martyr she might, like Samson, involve her enemies in her ruin, and purchase pardon for her last falsehood by giving victory to the Church.

¹ Mary Stuart to the Archbishop of Glasgow, November 24—December 4: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

Her almoner had been separated from her since her arrest at Chartley. Paulet offered her the assistance of an Anglican divine, which of course she disdainfully declined. Afraid of being made away with secretly, she wrote to Elizabeth, thanking God that her tedious pilgrimage was now to end, requesting that her execution might be public, that her servants and the other spectators might testify that she died a Catholic, and begging further, that since in England those Catholic rites with which their common ancestors had been buried were no longer attainable, her body might be carried to France where she might lie beside the Queen her mother.¹ To her friends abroad she addressed letters of farewell, worded with the delicate pathos of which she was as great a mistress as of sarcasm, trusting that her servants would find means when she was gone to convey them to their destination. To Mendoza she wrote, bidding him tell Philip she was dying in the good cause; to Guise, that the House of Lorraine had always been ready with its blood in the Church's quarrel, that she was now called on to shed hers, and that it should not be said of her that she was degenerate. She was the first of her race, she said, to die by the hand of an executioner, but to be judged and condemned by heretics was to be accepted in heaven, and she desired him to remember her servants, and to see prayers said for the repose of the soul of his poor cousin.²

December.

To the Pope—who, as she knew from La Rue, had doubted her sincerity—she wrote elaborately and solemnly, declaring herself a true child of Holy Church. She had refused, she told him, the ministrations of heretics; she intended, if her almoner was restored to her, to prepare for death in the usual way by confession, penance, and communion; but, as it was possible that he might be forbidden to have access to her, she humbly besought his Holiness that her general penitence might be accepted, and that he would himself grant her his own absolution. She was coming, like the prodigal, to Christ, and offering her blood at the foot of the cross. She commended her son to his care, to be recovered if possible from perdition. If her son continued obdurate, she bequeathed her right and interest in the English crown to the King of Spain.¹

¹ Mary Stuart to Elizabeth, November 23—December 3: LABAN-OFF, vol. vi.

² Mary Stuart to Guise, November 24—December 4: Ibid.

In point of form and grace Mary Stuart had the advantage of her rival everywhere. Elizabeth, with a general desire to do right, could condescend to poor and mean manœuvres. Mary Stuart carried herself in the midst of her crimes with a majesty which would have become the noblest of sovereigns.

The difficulty in making up her mind which Elizabeth experienced, even in trifles, became absolute impossibility in a matter of so tremendous importance, and it seems as if she was looking about for additional motives to assist her resolution; and to rid herself in some way or other of the importunity of France. Walsingham was absent from the Court. In the curious contradictoriness of her temperament, she had perhaps resented upon him the completeness with which he had unravelled the conspiracy, and forced her into the dilemma in which she found herself. Walsingham, it has been already mentioned, had made himself security for the debts of Sir Philip Sidney. The power of attorney which Sidney had left for the sale of part of his estates was found, after his death, to be informal; and the will, which he had made on the faith of it for the payment of his creditors, could not be executed. The estates were tied up, and the creditors came upon Walsingham, who was consequently ruined.¹

¹ Mary Stuart to the Pope, November 23—December 3: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

The debts themselves had been incurred in the service of the Queen. Walsingham had probably saved Elizabeth from assassination, and England from invasion. The estates of the conspirators, and of more than one unlicensed refugee, had fallen by attainder to the Crown. The Earl of Arundel had been fined thirty thousand pounds; the rents of the vast estates of the Dacres, the Nevilles, and the Percies were paid into the Treasury. It might have been thought reasonable, that out of these resources, if in no other way, some assistance might have been given to a minister who had deserved so well of his Sovereign and his country. Burghley undertook the advocacy of the cause. He represented to Elizabeth that she owed her life to Walsingham's care, and that 'it would be a great dishonour to her if she allowed him to be crushed.' 'She listened, seemingly favourable but slow to resolve.' Leicester however, for some unknown reason, raised objections,² and her natural tendencies, reinforced so powerfully, carried the day. Either she put off the application with some evasion, or she returned a positive refusal. Babington's estates were given, as Burghley notices in his diary, to Sir Walter Raleigh; and Walsingham, in indignant disgust, retired to his house at Barnelms.

¹ Walsingham to Leicester, November 5, 1586: WRIGHT'S Elizabeth, vol. ii. Walsingham to Leicester, November 5: ELLIS, vol.

iii. 1st series.

² Davison to Walsingham, December 10—20: MSS. Domestic.

‘I humbly beseech your Lordship to pardon me,’ he wrote to Burghley, ‘that I did not take my leave of you before my departure. Her Majesty’s unkind dealing towards me has so wounded me, as I could take no comfort to stay there ; and yet, if I saw any hope that my continuance there might either breed any goodness to the Church, or furtherance to the service of her Majesty or the realm, the regard of my particular should not cause me to withdraw myself. But seeing the declining state we are arriving into, and that men of best desert are least esteemed, I hold them happiest in this Government that may be rather lookers-on than actors. I humbly therefore do beseech your Lordship that, as I do acknowledge myself infinitely bound unto you for your most honourable and friendly furtherance yielded unto me in my suit, which I will never forget, so you will be pleased to increase my bond towards you by forbearing any further to press her Majesty in the same, which I am resolved fully to give over. I do assure your Lordship, whatsoever conceit her Majesty maketh of me, I would not spend so long time as I have done in that place, subject to so infinite toil and discomfort, not to be made Duke of Lancaster. My hope is, however I am dealt withal by an earthly prince, I shall never lack the comfort of the Prince of Princes, to whose protection I commit your Lordship. Most humbly taking my leave,

‘At Barnelms, the 16th of December, 1586.

‘Your Lordship’s to command,

‘F. WALSINGHAM.’

Loyalty, and perhaps Burghley's entreaties, in a few weeks overcame Walsingham's just irritation. The Queen never came to his help. He was too pure to imitate other servants of the State, who multiplied indefinitely their nominal salaries by the abuse of their influence. He died two years after, so poor that his body was buried at night to save the cost of an expensive funeral. He returned to his work however. He gave his ungracious mistress freely what remained to him of life, burdening her with no more petitions. But she was punished through his absence in being allowed to entangle herself in an absurd and discreditable artifice.

1587.
January. On the day that Belière left London (January 10—20), a young Stafford, brother to Sir Edward the ambassador at Paris, came to Walsingham at Barnelms, and told him that there was a fresh conspiracy on foot, and that M. Chasteauneuf was at the bottom of it. He had been, he said, at Chasteauneuf's house on the 26th of December, when he had found him sitting over the fire with Belière. Chasteauneuf had taken him aside into a gallery, and had asked him whether he knew any one who, for a high reward, would kill the Queen. The Pope was ready to pension any one who could succeed in doing it with ten thousand crowns a year. Destrappe, Chasteauneuf's secretary, had spoken to him afterwards on the same subject; and Stafford wishing, according to his own story, to learn more, had replied that there was a man in Newgate, named Moody, under arrest for debt, who had been with his brother in France, that might perhaps undertake it. Destrappes desired to see the man. He and Stafford had gone together to the prison, where Moody had talked the matter over with them. The debt being a small one, there would be no difficulty in procuring his release; and Moody had proposed either to poison the Queen's saddle, or introduce a bag of powder under her bed, or something else equally chimerical. Destrappes had listened approvingly; and Stafford, thinking now that he had heard enough, came off with his information to Walsingham.

Stafford was a notorious reprobate. Walsingham, after a few questions, satisfied himself that he was lying. He supposed that it was some trick to extort money from the French ambassador,¹ and sent him about his business. Stafford, rejected by one Secretary, carried his story to another; and in Davison he found a more attentive hearer. It is not likely that Davison was deceived, or any of the council, or the Queen, whom it was necessary to consult before any step was taken; but the charge was thought convenient for the moment, perhaps to embarrass Chasteauneuf, and paralyze the remonstrances of Henry and Catherine, while the Mary Stuart crisis continued. The exact motive is obscure; but that there was a trick of some kind is beyond all doubt.

Walsingham, in a subsequent apology to Chateau-

¹ 'Voyant clèrement n'estre qu'une afronterie de Stafford pour tirer de l'argent de moy.'—Chateau-
neuf au Roy, Mars, 1587: TEULET, vol. iv.

neuf, told him that if he had been himself at Court, no notice would have been taken of the story.¹ Elizabeth jested afterwards with Destrappes, at the inconvenience to which he had been exposed. She said to the ambassador that she had been the dupe of a pair of rogues;² and as the rogues were never punished, they must have been the instruments of a plot of which, if she was not herself the instigator, she could not have seriously disapproved.

However that might be, an express was sent after Destrappes, who had left London the same morning to overtake Belière. He was brought back and committed to the Tower, while Chasteauneuf was invited to attend a council at Burghley's house, and was informed that another conspiracy had been discovered for the murder of the Queen, in which he or some of his people were supposed to be implicated. Stafford's deposition was read to him. He was informed further that Destrappes had been examined on his reaching the Tower, and had not denied that he had seen Moody at Newgate, while Moody again supported Stafford by swearing that Destrappes had said he 'wished such a man could be found in England as he who did the execution upon the Prince of Orange.'

Chasteauneuf listened in the most profound astonishment. Truth and falsehood had been so ingeniously interlaced that he knew not what to say or not to say. The real fact, as he explained it afterwards, had been this :—Stafford had informed Destrappes that there was a man in Newgate called Moody who had something to tell him of importance to the Queen of Scots. Chasteauneuf recognized the name as that of a person who had once carried a letter for him to Chartley, and supposing it might be a matter of consequence, sent his secretary to speak with him. The mystery was merely that, if M. Chasteauneuf would pay the debt for which Moody was imprisoned, Moody said he was ready to kill the Queen. Destrappes instantly left him and informed his master. Chasteauneuf, supposing a trap had been laid to tempt him, forbade Stafford his house, and threatened if he came near him again to send him handcuffed to the council.

¹ 'Walsingham le rejecta fort loing, et si Davison eust faict de mesme, la chose n'eust pas passée si avant; ce qu'il me confessa, m'adjoustant que s'il eust esté à la cour, Destrappes n'eust pas esté pris.'—

Chasteauneuf au Roy, Mars, 1587: TEULET, vol. iv.

² 'Qu'elle avoit cogneu la verité que ce n'estoit qu'une afronterie de deux coquins.'—Chasteauneuf au Roy, Mars 13: Ibid.

He was silent for some seconds, between surprise and indignation. Burghley asked if he wished to see Stafford. At first 'he was so offended that he said he would see no one : he was ambassador to a King, and for the honour of his master would not submit to be accused.' Then he changed his mind. He demanded that Stafford should be confronted with him, when Stafford, to his increased bewilderment, stood resolutely to his story, swore stoutly on pain of damnation that he was speaking truth, and charged Chasteauneuf to his face in voluble French with having personally tempted him to commit treason.¹

The council, 'finding the ambassador greatly dis-

¹ MS. endorsed in Burghley's | the French Ambassador,' January
hand, 'William Stafford's speech to | 12—22 : MSS. France.

quieted, commanded Stafford to depart.' Chasteauneuf, finding words at last, gave his own version of what had passed. He was gravely told that by his own showing he had been guilty of a serious fault. He had been made privy to a wicked device, and the Queen had cause to complain that he had not revealed it.

Chasteauneuf defended himself as well as he could. He said that being an ambassador he did not consider himself bound to report everything that he heard to the Queen. His duty was to communicate not with her but with his own master. The council argued gravely on the other side; Chasteauneuf, already angry, contradicted them;¹ and thus Elizabeth, instead of being on her defence against the French Court, had turned the tables, and appeared to have ground of heavy complaint against the French minister. Secretary Wade was despatched to Paris, not, as Belière had hoped, to tell the King that she had yielded about the Queen of Scots; but to demand in a high tone the recall of Chasteauneuf, and the instant surrender of Morgan and Charles Paget.

So audacious an attitude could not long be maintained. The mistake was acknowledged a few months after, and due regrets expressed; but meanwhile it answered its immediate end. The King was horror-struck at the bare suspicion that his ambassador could have been concerned in a conspiracy,² and said no more about the Queen of Scots. Destrappes remained in the Tower after the groundlessness of the charge had been confessed, lest it should seem as if he had been arrested without cause. Elizabeth, when she released him at last, said, laughing, to Chasteauneuf that she understood his secretary was a lawyer, and that if ever she had a cause to plead before the courts in Paris, he would be able to revenge himself.¹

¹ Narrative of what passed with MSS. France.

the French Ambassador, January 12—22, 1587. In Burghley's hand: ² Wade to Walsingham, January 30—February 9: MSS. Ibid.

Had the council only been concerned in this strange invention, the purpose of it would be intelligible. They might have wished to overcome the Queen's irresolution by a fresh illustration of her insecurity. Her own evident share in the deception negatives this interpretation of it, while, be the purpose what it might, it formed a poor and undignified episode in the tragedy in which it was embedded, and it tarnished a proceeding which so far had been moderate and just. The fury of the people, already suspicious of the French, became ungovernable, and the demand for the execution so violent as to be almost irresistible; yet again it can hardly be thought that Elizabeth had created the excitement as an excuse for yielding, since she did not profit by it, and was no more able to resolve than before. The warrant had been drawn after the publication of the sentence. She had refused to sign it, and the possibilities of the situation were again painfully reviewed.

Beyond the obvious objections to leniency, there were others lying in the constitution of Scotch and English parties, which it was extremely dangerous to overlook.

¹ Chasteauneuf to the King, May 13: TEULET, vol. iv.

In the words of a remarkable document:—

‘Such as were worldly affected that had been used as instruments as well in the late proceedings against the said Queen as at other times,’ if they saw her now spared, ‘would seek to make their own peace to her Majesty’s danger; the best affected that had heretofore shewn themselves careful of her Majesty’s safety, seeing their care frustrate, would give over, and provide for their own safety by retiring themselves out of the realm. The number of Papists, atheists, and malcontents, would marvellously increase in respect of the hope that they would conceive that the Scotch Queen should come to the crown as a thing fatal. The Jesuits and seminaries and their confederates, that built only the hope of alteration of religion on her person, doubting in respect to the infirmity of her body that a more straight keeping of her would hasten her death, would use the greater expedition for the prevention thereof in putting in execution such practices as might shorten her Majesty’s days. The number of those in Scotland, evil affected to religion and the amity of the English Crown, would increase. Those now well affected for their own safety would change their course. The King, if he had no cause to fear any English party, would be brought by persuasion of the Catholic princes to attempt something for the liberty of his mother, and the Catholics abroad would be provoked to attempt something by the ill affected in England.’

Perils might arise from the Queen of Scots' execution, but the perils from the preservation of her life were infinitely greater. 'She was already a Catholic, and so stablished in the opinions of the Catholics of the realm. She had already, by her practices and by long continuance in England, won a great party there, which numbers would increase when they saw her preserved fatally contrary to all reason; and the Catholic princes would join with her son in seeking her liberty, and putting him in possession of the crown. The danger to herself would create no impediment, for she did herself encourage them, praying them to have no regard for her peril but to the advancement of the cause. And they would hope, and not without cause, that when the wise men of England should see her party increased within the realm, and a general combination without the realm for her delivery, they would make dainty to advise any violence against her.'¹

On the back of the imagined conspiracy at the French ambassador's, came news from Holland that Sir William Stanley had consummated his meditated treachery. Deventer was betrayed to the Spaniards, and Rowland Yorke, who was Stanley's confederate, had given up the forts at Zutphen, the solitary prize of Leicester's autumn campaign. Already irritated to the last stretch of endurance, the people became everywhere desperate. From all parts of England came reports of a feverish expectation of change; at any moment the thin bonds which held society together might be dissolved, and collisions between Catholics and Protestants precipitate the long-talked-of civil war.

¹ Discourse touching the Queen of Scots, January, 1587: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Wednesday, It was now the 1st of February (11th, Feb. 1—11. New Style). The Queen was still at Greenwich. Lord Howard of Effingham, not at all the most extreme of her advisers, came to her to represent that the condition of the country could no longer be trifled with; that some positive course or other must be taken with the Queen of Scots. He himself, like every other intelligent statesman who was not a traitor at heart, had long decided that she ought to be executed. For the first time Elizabeth appeared really shaken. The long suspension of the sentence made it doubly difficult to enforce, but she desired Howard to tell Davison, who in Walsingham's absence was acting as sole secretary, to come to her, and to bring the warrant with him. Davison, who was walking in the park, came hastily in, and, after a few words with Lord Howard, fetched the warrant from his room, placed it purposely among some other papers, and took it to his mistress. She talked of indifferent matters, remarked on the brightness of the morning, and inquired what he had with him in his hand. He said he had documents for her signature, and among others one which Lord Howard had told him that she had sent for. She glanced over his portfolio, subscribed the sheets one after another, the warrant among them, and threw it with the rest upon the floor. It seemed as if she had meant to let it pass as if by accident; but if this was her purpose, she changed her mind. She spoke particularly of it ; she said she had delayed so long, in order to show how unwillingly she had consented, and she asked Davison if he was not sorry to see such a paper signed. He replied that he was sorry the Queen of Scots had made it necessary, but it was better that the guilty should suffer than the innocent. She smiled, went through some other business, and then bade him take the warrant to the Chancellor, get it sealed as quietly as he could, saying nothing to any one, and then send it to the persons to whom it was addressed, who were to see execution done. For herself she desired to be troubled no further on the subject till all was over. She specified the hall of the castle as a fitter place than the court-yard or the green, and then bade him call on Walsingham, who had returned to service, but was lying ill in his London house, and tell him what she had done, adding, ironically, that grief would kill him outright.

He was leaving the room when she called him back. When there was anything disagreeable to be done it had been her common practice to let others do it, and to seem to blame them afterwards, and there were more than the usual reasons on the present occasion for her thoughts to run in so tempting a channel. The members of the association had bound themselves as individuals above and beyond the ordinary action of the law to prosecute to the death conspirators against the Queen. Their oath had been sanctioned with insignificant modifications by Parliament, and the case had arisen which was contemplated in the formation of the association. The Queen of Scots was the person against whom both the bond and the Act which was passed upon it were immediately directed. The nation demanded the execution for its own sake as much as for the Queen's. For herself she honestly preferred incurring personal risk to taking her kinswoman's life; and if a loyal subject relieved her of her embarrassment in reliance upon the Act by killing her himself, it might disarm the resentment of France and Scotland, and give James and Henry an excuse for refusing to quarrel with her.¹ Sir Amyas Paulet was a member of the association, as well as Sir Drew Drury, who had remained at Fotheringay to share his charge with him. Those two Elizabeth said might have made the warrant unnecessary, and she desired Davison to speak to Walsingham about it, and to write to feel Paulet's and Drury's disposition.

Davison said it would be lost labour. He was certain that they would refuse; the statute indeed would not protect them unless they acted under personal directions from herself.

¹ Some hint of this kind had probably been given to her by the Master of Gray. After the execution, when James affected resentment, Powrie Ogilvie, a correspondent of Walsingham's at the Scotch Court, wrote thus to Archibald Douglas:—

'If the Queen's ambassador be refused audience as yet, if the Queen persist in making excuses, and in seeking the King by all means, all will frame as they will have it. For the King would be but insisted on in the matter, that his honour may be saved in one point, for there is no persuasion can induce him to embrace foreign amity, breaking with England, notwithstanding the most part of the nobility have dealt to the contrary.'—P. O. to A. Douglas, March 2, 1587: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

Elizabeth however insisted, telling him the words which he was to use, and he promised to make the experiment.

He left her presence, feeling very uncomfortable, came up to London, and reported what had passed to Walsingham; and then he went on to the Court of Chancery, where the warrant was sealed without being read, the Chancellor having an impression that he was passing some unimportant commission for Ireland.¹ Walsingham meanwhile composed the letter to Paulet and Drury. The Queen, he said, noted in them a lack of that care and zeal for her service which she looked for, that they had not of themselves found means to shorten the Queen of Scots' life. They seemed to care neither for her, nor their country, nor their oath. They were casting the burden upon her, knowing her unwillingness to shed blood, and if regard for her subjects did not move her more than her own peril she would never consent.²

On Davison's return from the Chancellor's, the letter was signed by the two secretaries, made up and sent off immediately. They were both uneasy. Thursday, Feb. 2—12. The next morning a messenger brought Davison a note from the Queen telling him, if he had not been already with the Chancellor, to forbear till she had

¹ 'M. Davison avoit fait sceller la commission de l'exécution de mort à M. le Chancelier soubz prétexte d'une commission pour Irlande, de sorte que ledict Chancelier l'avoit scellée sans l'avoir leue.'—Chasteau-

neuf au Roy, Mars, 1587: TEULET, vol. iv.

² Walsingham and Davison to Sir Amyas Paulet. Printed in Nicholas's Life of Davison.

spoken with him again. He hastened to her presence, and said that the warrant was already sealed. She seemed displeased, and he pleaded that he had but obeyed her own commands, and inquired if she had altered her mind.

She said that she had not, but she again complained of the burden being thrown upon herself.

He told her that 'the honourable and just way was the safest and best, if she meant it to be done at all.'

She walked up and down the room impatiently, and suddenly left him. He saw exactly what was passing in her thoughts. She had reluctantly perceived that the public interest required the execution, and she wished it done and wished to escape the blame. She desired to be able to say that it had not been done by her order, and she was not likely to be scrupulous in the means which she might use to convince the world of her innocence.

Feeling himself on slippery ground, Davison carried his perplexities to Hatton. The Queen, he said, had given him a positive order to send the warrant to the Commissioners, but he gathered from her manner that she meant to disavow it. He knew not whether to send it or not send it, and in either case he dared not act alone. Hatton hesitated to advise, but accompanied the secretary to Burghley, who was confined to his bed with the gout, and Burghley, perceiving the unfairness of leaving Davison with so tremendous a responsibility, dared the Queen's displeasure, and in spite of her injunctions of secrecy, invited such of the council as were in London to come to his room the following ^{Friday,} day. Leicester, Howard, Hunsdon, Cobham, ^{Feb. 3—13.} Sir Francis Knowles, and Lord Derby attended. Walsingham came, and Hatton, and Davison himself. On the will and resolution of these ten hung the life or death of Mary Stuart. Burghley and Walsingham, after the part which they had taken in the prosecution, might be said to have an interest in her execution; should she ever come to the throne it was likely to go hard with them. But Derby and Cobham and Howard had nothing to fear, either privately for themselves, for they had been her friends, or on grounds of religion, for they were semi-Catholics. They at least brought to the meeting minds unbiassed by any conceivable consideration save that of public necessity.

Burghley laid before them the exact condition of the case. The Queen had signed the warrant, and had done all that was on her part essential. He did not conceal her desire that others should divide the burden with her, that she should be allowed to profess, for such a desire could mean no less, that the act had not been entirely her own. He said that for his own part he believed the execution to be absolutely necessary. He could not act alone, but if the council would support him he was prepared to venture the risk, and he perhaps implied that if it was not done then it would never be done at all.

The situation was perfectly intelligible. Elizabeth's conduct was not noble, but it was natural and pardonable. The welfare of the country required an act of severity which she would herself have gladly dispensed with. The world, if she commanded it herself, would reproach her with personal vindictiveness, and she shrunk from encountering a charge which she knew to be unjust.

Every minister present agreed in the momentous resolution. The terms of it implied that the Queen should be troubled no further. She had herself used those very words to Davison. Lord Kent and Lord Shrewsbury were the Commissioners named to see the warrant executed. Shrewsbury was staying in the neighbourhood of Fotheringay. Kent was at his house at Wrest, in Bedfordshire, not many miles distant. The necessary letters were written to them, and with these and the warrant itself Secretary Beale left London early on Saturday morning.¹ Elizabeth could hardly have failed to guess what had been done, but she chose to know nothing, and asked no questions. A few hours after Beale had gone she said to Davison that she had dreamt the night before that the Queen of Scots was executed, and that she was so angry on hearing of it that if she had had a sword she would have run him through the body. She laughed as she was speaking; Davison laughed also, and answered it was well he was not in her way while that humour lasted. He again asked her if she had changed her mind. 'No, by God,' she replied, 'but she wished it could be done in some way that would not throw the blame on her.'

Feb. 4—14.

¹ All these details are taken from | appendix to his Life by Sir H. Davison's narratives, printed in the | Nicolas.

Sunday morning came, and with it Pau- Sunday, let's answer to Walsingham's letter. He too Feb. 5—15.
understood what Elizabeth wanted, but he was too shrewd to fall into the snare. As the Act of Parliament had interpreted the association bond, the Queen's command was required, and it was precisely this which she had not given.

‘It was an unhappy day for him,’ he wrote, ‘when he was required by his Sovereign to do an act which God and the law forbade. His goods and life were at her Majesty's disposal, but he would not make shipwreck of his conscience, or leave so great a blot to his posterity as shed blood without law or warrant.’

She was very bitter. She said he was a precise fellow, who professed zeal for her safety, but when the time came would do nothing. Davison vainly endeavoured to soothe her. She stamped angrily about the room, and two days later, supposing perhaps that Davison had been too ‘precise’ also, she said to him that it was more than time the matter was despatched, ‘swearing a great oath, it was shame for them all that it was not already done.’¹

Meanwhile as the weeks had passed on, Mary Stuart's confidence had returned. She had nerved herself for the worst and had dared it. Believre had written, entreating her to make her peace with the Queen before it was too late; her fate was still in her own hands.
But she feared that she might be betrayed. A confession would disqualify her for the martyr's attitude which, if she was to die, she meant to assume ; and though she interpreted a sound of hammers in the hall into the erection of a scaffold, she had remained defiant. Day had followed day, and she had heard no more. She understood Elizabeth as well as Elizabeth understood her. Her almoner had been permitted to resume his duties, and the unwelcome offer of an English minister had not been again obtruded upon her. She had written Elizabeth one of her most pathetic letters,¹ protesting and swearing her innocence, attributing the accusations against her to a conspiracy of the Puritans, hinting in her old way that she had secrets of the gravest moment to impart to her if she could but communicate with her in private, and addressing her in a tone in which affection and tender reproach were melted into resignation.

¹ Davison's narrative.—Life of Davison by Sir H. Nicholas: Appendix.

No answer had been sent, but she had counted justly on the effect it would produce. 'There has been a letter,' said Leicester, 'which hath wrought tears.'²

The blow when it came at last therefore came sud-

¹ Mary Stuart to Elizabeth, December 19—29.

² A letter, unsigned and unaddressed, but evidently written in January, and intercepted and deciphered by the English Government, contains these words :—

'Il est arrivé à Londres 8 des hommes de Sir Amyas Paulet pour querir Curle et deux de ses hommes pour luy aider à faire ses compts, lesquelz je pense qu'ils en iront dans deux ou trois jours. J'ai parlé avec aucuns d'eulx, et disent que la Royne est joyeuse et en bonne santé et non estonnée. Ils disent que son ordinaire est délivrée à ses cuisiniers, et nul aultre personne ne le touche, car le commandement de sa Ma^{te} est qu'elle soit bien et honorablement traitée sans aulcune parade.'—MSS. Scotland.

denly. Beale rode hard—for unless, which is unlikely, he trusted the letter to Kent to a second hand he called at Wrest on his way down—and he arrived at Fotheringay on Sunday evening. The purpose of his coming was not made known in the castle. Early on Monday he went in search of Lord Shrewsbury, ^{Monday,} while a message was despatched to the Sheriff ^{Feb. 6—16.} of Northamptonshire to be in attendance on Wednesday morning. On Monday evening the Earl of Kent came. Shrewsbury appeared on Tuesday before noon, ^{Tuesday,} and when the early castle dinner was over, ^{Feb. 7—17.} they sent a servant to the Queen of Scots with a request to be admitted to her presence.

Shrewsbury had not seen her since she had passed from under his charge. He had not been on the Commission which tried her; illness had prevented him from attending the last Parliament, and he had taken no public part in the prosecution; and although he had signified privately as his personal opinion that her death was necessary, it could not have been without emotion that he was once more brought into a brief relation with her in so terrible a form. Kent was an austere Puritan, to whom she was merely a wicked woman overtaken at last by the punishment which she had too long deserved and escaped.

Briefly, solemnly, and sternly they delivered their awful message. They informed her that they had received a commission under the great seal to see her executed, and she was told that she must prepare to suffer on the following morning.

She was dreadfully agitated.¹ For a moment she refused to believe them. Then, as the truth forced itself upon her, tossing her head in disdain and struggling to control herself, she called her physician and began to speak to him of money that was owed to her in France. At last it seems that she broke down altogether, and they left her with a fear either that she would destroy herself in the night, or that she would refuse to come to the scaffold, and that it might be necessary to drag her there by violence.

The end had come. She had long professed to expect it, but the clearest expectation is not certainty. The scene for which she had affected to prepare she was to encounter in its dread reality, and all her busy schemes, her dreams of vengeance, her visions of a revolution, with herself ascending out of the convulsion and seating herself on her rival's throne—all were gone. She had played deep, and the dice had gone against her.

Yet in death, if she encountered it bravely, victory was still possible. Could she but sustain to the last the character of a calumniated suppliant accepting heroically for God's sake and her creed's the concluding stroke of a long series of wrongs, she might stir a tempest of indignation which, if it could not save herself, might at least overwhelm her enemy. Persisting, as she persisted to the last, in denying all knowledge of Babington, it would be affectation to credit her with a genuine feeling of religion; but the imperfection of her motive exalts the greatness of her fortitude. To an impassioned believer death is comparatively easy.

¹ 'La Reyne d'Escosse fut fascinée et déplaisante de ces nouvelles.' —Vraye Rapport de l'exécution faite sur la personne de la Reyne d'Escosse: TEULET, vol. iv. As this report differs in many important respects from that of Camden, and gives details unmentioned elsewhere, it is as well to say that it is evidently written by an eyewitness, one of the Queen of Scots' own attendants, probably her surgeon.

Her chaplain was lodged in a separate part of the castle. The Commissioners, who were as anxious that her execution should wear its real character as she was herself determined to convert it into a martyrdom, refused, perhaps unwisely, to allow him access to her, and offered her again the assistance of an Anglican Dean. They gave her an advantage over them which she did not fail to use. She would not let the Dean come near her. She sent a note to the chaplain telling him that she had meant to receive the sacrament, but as it might not be she must content herself with a general confession. She bade him watch through the night and pray for her. In the morning when she was brought out she might perhaps see him, and receive his blessing on her knees.¹ She supped cheerfully, giving her last meal with her attendants a character of sacred parting; afterwards she drew aside her apothecary M. Gorion, and asked him if she might depend upon his fidelity. When he satisfied her that she might trust him, she said she had a letter and two diamonds which she wished to send to Mendoza. He undertook to melt some drug and conceal them in it where they would never be looked for, and promised to deliver them faithfully. One of the jewels was for Mendoza himself; the other and the largest was for Philip. It was to be a sign that she was dying for the truth, and was meant also to bespeak his care for her friends and servants. Every one of them so far as she was able, without forgetting a name, she commended to his liberality. Arundel, Paget, Morgan, the Archbishop of Glasgow, Westmoreland, Throgmorton, the Bishop of Ross, her two secretaries, the ladies who had shared the trials of her imprisonment, she remembered them all, and specified the sums which she desired Philip to bestow on them. And as Mary Stuart then and throughout her life never lacked gratitude to those who had been true to her, so then as always she remembered her enemies. There was no cant about her, no unreal talk of forgiveness of injuries. She bade Gorion tell Philip it was her last prayer that he should persevere, notwithstanding her death, in the invasion of England. It was God's quarrel, she said, and worthy of his greatness; and as soon as he had conquered it, she desired him not to forget how she had been treated by Cecil, and Leicester, and Walsingham; by Lord Huntingdon, who had ill-used her fifteen years before at Tutbury; by Sir Amyas Paulet, and Secretary Wade.¹

¹ Mary Stuart to du Preau, February 7—17: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

Her last night was a busy one. As she said herself, there was much to be done and the time was short. A few lines to the King of France were dated two hours after midnight. They were to insist for the last time that she was innocent of the conspiracy, that she was dying for religion, and for having asserted her right to the crown; and to beg that out of the sum which he owed her, her servants' wages might be paid, and masses provided for her soul.¹ After this she slept for three or four hours, and then rose and with the most elaborate care prepared to encounter the end.

¹ 'Teniendo su Mag^d el día que fuere Señor de Inglaterra memoria del tratamiento que le habian hecho el Tesorero Cecil, Conde de Leicester, Secretario Walsingham, Amyas Paulet et Wade.'—Relacion de lo que Gorion, boticario de la Reyna de Escocia, tenia orden de decir: TEULET, vol. v.

At eight in the morning the Provost-^{Wednesday,} marshal knocked at the outer door which com-^{Feb. 8-18.}
municated with her suite of apartments. It was locked and no one answered, and he went back in some trepidation lest the fears might prove true which had been entertained the preceding evening. On his returning with the sheriff however a few minutes later, the door was open, and they were confronted with the tall majestic figure of Mary Stuart standing before them in splendour. The plain grey dress had been exchanged for a robe of black satin; her jacket was of black satin also, looped and slashed and trimmed with velvet. Her false hair was arranged studiously with a coif, and over her head and falling down over her back was a white veil of delicate lawn. A crucifix of gold hung from her neck. In her hand she held a crucifix of ivory, and a number of jewelled paternosters was attached to her girdle. Led by two of Paulet's gentlemen, the Sheriff walking before her, she passed to the chamber of presence in which she had been tried, where Shrewsbury, Kent, Paulet, Drury, and others were waiting to receive her. Andrew Melville, Sir Robert's brother, who had been master of her household, was kneeling in tears. 'Melville,' she said, 'you should rather rejoice than weep that the end of my troubles is come. Tell my friends I die a true Catholic. Commend me to my son. Tell him I have done nothing to prejudice his kingdom of Scotland, and so, good Melville, farewell.' She kissed him, and turning asked for her chaplain du Preau. He was not present. There had been a fear of some religious melodrama which it was thought well to avoid. Her ladies, who had attempted to follow her, had been kept back also. She could not afford to leave the account of her death to be reported by enemies and Puritans, and she required assistance for the scene which she meditated. Missing them she asked the reason of their absence, and said she wished them to see her die. Kent said he feared they might scream or faint, or attempt perhaps to dip their handkerchiefs in her blood. She undertook that they should be quiet and obedient. 'The Queen,' she said, 'would never deny her so slight a request ;' and when Kent still hesitated, she added with tears, 'You know I am cousin to your Queen, of the blood of Henry the Seventh, a married Queen of France, and anointed Queen of Scotland.'

¹ Mary Stuart to the King of France, February 7-8: LABANOFF, vol. vi.

It was impossible to refuse. She was allowed to take six of her own people with her, and select them herself. She chose her physician Burgoyne, Andrew Melville, the apothecary Gorion, and her surgeon, with two ladies, Elizabeth Kennedy and Curle's young wife Barbara Mowbray, whose child she had baptized.

'Allons donc,' she then said—'Let us go,' and passing out attended by the Earls, and leaning on the arm of an officer of the guard, she descended the great staircase to the hall. The news had spread far through the country. Thousands of people were collected outside the walls. About three hundred knights and gentlemen of the county had been admitted to witness the execution. The tables and forms had been removed, and a great wood fire was blazing in the chimney. At the upper end of the hall, above the fire-place, but near it, stood the scaffold, twelve feet square and two feet and a half high. It was covered with black cloth; a low rail ran round it covered with black cloth also, and the Sheriff's guard of halberdiers were ranged on the floor below on the four sides to keep off the crowd. On the scaffold was the block, black like the rest; a square black cushion was placed behind it, and behind the cushion a black chair; on the right were two other chairs for the Earls. The axe leant against the rail, and two masked figures stood like mutes on either side at the back. The Queen of Scots as she swept in seemed as if coming to take a part in some solemn pageant. Not a muscle of her face could be seen to quiver; she ascended the scaffold with absolute composure, looked round her smiling, and sat down. Shrewsbury and Kent followed and took their places, the Sheriff stood at her left hand, and Beale then mounted a platform and read the warrant aloud.

In all the assembly Mary Stuart appeared the person least interested in the words which were consigning her to death.

‘Madam,’ said Lord Shrewsbury to her, when the reading was ended, ‘you hear what we are commanded to do.’

‘You will do your duty,’ she answered, and rose as if to kneel and pray.

The Dean of Peterborough, Dr Fletcher, approached the rail. ‘Madam,’ he began, with a low obeisance, ‘the Queen’s most excellent Majesty ;’ ‘Madam, the Queen’s most excellent Majesty’—thrice he commenced his sentence, wanting words to pursue it. When he repeated the words a fourth time, she cut him short.

‘Mr Dean,’ she said, ‘I am a Catholic, and must die a Catholic. It is useless to attempt to move me, and your prayers will avail me but little.’

‘Change your opinion, Madam,’ he cried, his tongue being loosed at last ; ‘repent of your sins, settle your faith in Christ, by him to be saved.’

‘Trouble not yourself further, Mr Dean,’ she answered ; ‘I am settled in my own faith, for which I mean to shed my blood.’

‘I am sorry, Madam,’ said Shrewsbury, ‘to see you so addicted to Popery.’

‘That image of Christ you hold there,’ said Kent, ‘will not profit you if he be not engraved in your heart.’

She did not reply, and turning her back on Fletcher knelt for her own devotions.

He had been evidently instructed to impair the Catholic complexion of the scene, and the Queen of Scots was determined that he should not succeed. When she knelt he commenced an extempore prayer in which the assembly joined. As his voice sounded out in the hall she raised her own, reciting with powerful deep-chested tones the penitential Psalms in Latin, introducing English sentences at intervals, that the audience might know what she was saying, and praying with especial distinctness for her holy father the Pope.

From time to time, with conspicuous vehemence, she struck the crucifix against her bosom, and then, as the Dean gave up the struggle, leaving her Latin, she prayed in English wholly, still clear and loud. She prayed for the Church which she had been ready to betray, for her son, whom she had disinherited, for the Queen whom she had endeavoured to murder. She prayed God to avert his wrath from England, that England which she had sent a last message to Philip to beseech him to invade. She forgave her enemies, whom she had invited Philip not to forget, and then, praying to the saints to intercede for her with Christ, and kissing the crucifix and crossing her own breast, 'Even as thy arms, oh Jesus,' she cried, 'were spread upon the cross, so receive me into thy mercy and forgive my sins.'

With these words she rose; the black mutes stepped forward, and in the usual form begged her forgiveness.

'I forgive you,' she said, 'for now I hope you shall end all my troubles.' They offered their help in arranging her dress. 'Truly, my Lords,' she said with a smile to the Earls, 'I never had such grooms waiting on me before.' Her ladies were allowed to come up upon the scaffold to assist her; for the work to be done was considerable, and had been prepared with no common thought.

She laid her crucifix on her chair. The chief executioner took it as a perquisite, but was ordered instantly to lay it down. The lawn veil was lifted carefully off, not to disturb the hair, and was hung upon the rail. The black robe was next removed. Below it was a petticoat of crimson velvet. The black jacket followed, and under the jacket was a body of crimson satin. One of her ladies handed her a pair of crimson sleeves, with which she hastily covered her arms; and thus she stood on the black scaffold with the black figures all around her, blood-red from head to foot.¹

Her reasons for adopting so extraordinary a costume must be left to conjecture. It is only certain that it must have been carefully studied, and that the pictorial effect must have been appalling.

The women, whose firmness had hitherto borne the trial, began now to give way, spasmodic sobs bursting from them which they could not check. 'Ne criez vous,' she said, 'j'ay promis pour vous.' Struggling bravely, they crossed their breasts again and again, she crossing them in turn and bidding them pray for her.

¹ 'Son cotillon estoit de velours rouge et le corps estoit de satin rouge; et estant despouillée jusques à ce cotillon, l'une de ses demoiselles luy ayant apporté une paire de manches de satin rouge laquelle elle mist en ses bras: et ainsy fut exécutée tout en rouge.'—Vray Rapport de l'exécution faite sur la personne de la Roïne d'Escosse: TEULET, vol. iv.

Then she knelt on the cushion. Barbara Mowbray bound her eyes with a handkerchief.¹ 'Adieu,' she said, smiling for the last time and waving her hand to them, 'Adieu, au revoir.' They stepped back from off the scaffold and left her alone. On her knees she repeated the Psalm, In te, Domine, confido, 'In Thee, O Lord, have I put my trust.' Her shoulders being exposed, two scars became visible, one on either side, and the Earls being now a little behind her, Kent pointed to them with his white wand and looked inquiringly at his companion. Shrewsbury whispered that they were the remains of two abscesses from which she had suffered while living with him at Sheffield.

When the psalm was finished she felt for the block, and laying down her head muttered: 'In manus, Domine tuas, commendo animam meam.' The hard wood seemed to hurt her, for she placed her hands under her neck. The executioners gently removed them, lest they should deaden the blow, and then one of them holding her slightly, the other raised the axe and struck. The scene had been too trying even for the practised headsman of the Tower. His arm wandered. The blow fell on the knot of the handkerchief, and scarcely broke the skin. She neither spoke nor moved. He struck again, this time effectively. The head hung by a shred of skin, which he divided without withdrawing the axe; and at once a metamorphosis was witnessed, strange as was ever wrought by wand of fabled enchanter. The coif fell off and the false plaits. The laboured illusion vanished. The lady who had knelt before the block was in the maturity of grace and loveliness. The executioner, when he raised the head, as usual, to show it to the crowd, exposed the withered features of a grizzled, wrinkled old woman.

¹ One account, printed by Ellis, original letter, 2nd series, vol. ii., says with a Corpus Christi cloth. Another says 'with a handkerchief of cambric, all wrought over with gold needlework.'—True report of the death of that rare and Princely Martyr, executed for conscience at Fotheringay, February 8, 1587: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

‘So perish all enemies of the Queen,’ said the Dean of Peterborough. A loud Amen rose over the hall. ‘Such end,’ said the Earl of Kent, rising and standing over the body, ‘to the Queen’s and the Gospel’s enemies.’

Orders had been given that everything which she had worn should be immediately destroyed, that no relics should be carried off to work imaginary miracles. Sentinels stood at the doors who allowed no one to pass out without permission; and after the first pause, the Earls still keeping their places, the body was stripped. It then appeared that a favourite lapdog had followed its mistress unperceived, and was concealed under her clothes; when discovered it gave a short cry, and seated itself between the head and the neck, from which the blood was still flowing. It was carried away and carefully washed, and then beads, Paternoster, handkerchief—each particle of dress which the blood had touched, with the cloth on the block and on the scaffold, was burnt in the hall fire in the presence of the crowd. The scaffold itself was next removed: a brief account of the execution was drawn up, with which Henry Talbot, Lord Shrewsbury’s son, was sent to London, and then every one was dismissed. Silence settled down on Fotheringay, and the last scene of the life of Mary Stuart, in which tragedy and melodrama were so strangely intermingled, was over.

A spectator, who was one of her warmest admirers, describes her bearing as infinitely transcending the power of the most accomplished actor to represent.¹ The association of the stage was perhaps unconsciously suggested by what was in fact, notwithstanding the tremendous reality with which it closed, the most brilliant acting throughout. The plain grey dress would have sufficed, had she cared only to go through with simplicity the part which was assigned her. She intended to produce a dramatic sensation, and she succeeded. The self-possession was faultless, the courage splendid. Never did any human creature meet death more bravely; yet, in the midst of the admiration and pity which cannot be refused her, it is not to be forgotten that she was leaving the world with a lie upon her lips. She was a bad woman, disguised in the livery of a martyr, and, if in any sense at all she was suffering for her religion, it was because she had shown herself capable of those detestable crimes which in the sixteenth century appeared to be the proper fruits of it.

To assume and to carry through the character of a victim of religious intolerance, to exhibit herself as an example of saintliness, suffering for devotion to the truth, would be to win the victory over Elizabeth, even in defeat and death to fasten upon her the reputation of a persecutor, which she had most endeavoured to avoid, to stamp her name with infamy, and possibly drag her down to destruction.

¹ 'Si le plus parfait tragique qui fust jamais venoit à présent avec un désir et soing indicible de représenter sa contenance, parolles et gestes et façon de faire sur un théâtre, il pourroit mériter quelques louanges, mais on le trouveroit court.' —Vray Rapport, &c. : TEULET, vol. iv.

Nor can it be said that she failed. She could not indeed stay the progress of the Reformation, make England a province of Spain, or arrest the dissolution of an exploded creed; but she became a fitting tutelary saint for the sentimental Romanism of the modern world. She has had her revenge, if not on Elizabeth living, yet on her memory in the annals of her country, and English history will continue, probably to the end of time, to represent the treatment of Mary Stuart, which, if it erred at all, erred from the beginning on the side of leniency and weakness, as the one indelible stain on the reputation of the great Queen.

‘Who now doubts,’ writes an eloquent modern writer, ‘that it would have been wiser in Elizabeth to spare her life?’ Rather, the political wisdom of a critical and difficult act has never in the world’s history been more signally justified. It cut away the only interest on which the Scotch and English Catholics could possibly have combined. It determined Philip upon the undisguised pursuit of the English throne, and it enlisted against him and his projects the passionate patriotism of the English nobility, who refused to be tempted, even by their creed, to betray the independence of their country. At once and for ever it destroyed the hope that the Spanish Armada would find a party to welcome it. The entire Catholic organization, as directed against England, was smitten with paralysis; and the Queen found herself, when the invader arrived at last, supported by the loyal enthusiasm of an undivided nation.

CHAPTER LXX.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR PEACE WITH SPAIN.

IN taking upon themselves to direct the execution of the Queen of Scots, without obtaining or seeking a more immediate sanction from their mistress, the council had not disguised from themselves the probability that she might affect to be surprised and displeased. They had consciously desired to relieve her of part of the burden. They could bear their share of it only through some public disclaimer from herself, some formal profession that she had not intended the execution to take place. Thus much was in the nature of things inevitable. To make use of others in critical operations, and then disavow them, was her systematic habit, mean and paltry if regarded without consideration of surrounding circumstances, defensible and even excusable in an age of universal insincerity, when the duty cast upon her was the protection of England against a gigantic Catholic conspiracy, which, unwilling to assail her on the confessed ground of religion, was watching its opportunity to fasten a quarrel upon her in appearance political.

The non-responsibility of the Sovereign is now a recognized doctrine of the constitution. The alternate and opposite policies of the parties which divide the Empire are recommended from the throne without exposing the Prince to the reproach of inconsistency. The principle is inherent in the conditions of limited monarchy; it was latent before it was avowed; and Elizabeth, anticipating awkwardly the authorized theory of a later age, permitted measures to be taken which the safety of the State rendered necessary, which at the same time she declared loudly, and often without hypocrisy, not to be her own. Those who profited by such measures, and those who were injured by them, alike found their convenience in letting pass the transparent disguise. The sympathizers with the foreign Protestants sent them help which otherwise would have been withheld, and Catholic princes, whom the Pope was urging into war against their will, were able to save their honour by attributing the acts from which they suffered to unauthorized private persons. Something of this kind Lord Burghley undoubtedly looked for on the present occasion. The manner however in which Elizabeth set about exonerating herself was original, and went beyond what he had looked for.

Young Talbot, galloping through the night, arrived bespattered with mud at Greenwich on the morning which followed the execution. The Queen was mounting her horse and did not see him. He carried his despatch to Cecil, and the Lord Treasurer, with some natural nervousness, decided to delay the communication for a day, and to leave his mistress to hear the first news from some other quarter. An event so momentous could not be kept secret from the world; by noon it was known over the palace, by three o'clock the bells were ringing in London. The Queen learnt what had happened on returning from her ride. A friend of Davison's told him that her composure was undisturbed.¹ According to her own account, 'she fell into such deep grief of mind, accompanied with unfeigned weeping, as the like had never been seen in her for any accident in her life.'²

Both versions of her behaviour may be true. If the news reached her first in public she may have restrained herself; but she must have been less than human if she could have heard without emotion that Mary Stuart's career had ended at last so terribly. As however it is said of great actors, that for success in their art they must become the thing which they represent, so Elizabeth, having retained, perhaps in her conversations with Davison, some element of real irresolution, having probably enough determined to refuse, if the council insisted on receiving a direct order for the execution, now when the deed was done and irrevocable, persuaded herself, as a preliminary to persuading others, that she was innocent of intending it to be done. Among the many purposes which she had alternately entertained, dismissed, and entertained again, she selected the one to which she desired the world to give credence, as that to which she was herself satisfied that she would have eventually adhered.

¹ Davison's second statement: Life of Davison: Appendix B.

² Answer to be communicated to the King of Scots, April, 1588: MSS.

Early on Friday she sent for Hatton, and with professions of horror and indignation declared that she had been betrayed by Davison. Her first expressions passed as a matter of course. Davison himself said, 'he did not much marvel, considering what he had before observed of her desire to cast it from herself.' Neither he nor the rest of the council had apparently calculated that, in order to persuade Europe that the act had not been hers, she might punish those who had presumed to exceed her commands.

On Saturday she summoned the council. She 'rebuked them all exceedingly.' She reserved her deepest displeasure for Burghley, who confessed to have taken the lead in the resolution; and for Davison, whom she accused of violating her positive commands. Burghley she did not venture to touch, but Davison, whose inferior rank pointed him out as a safe victim, she ordered to the Tower.

The Tower implied an impending charge of high treason. No privy councillor had been committed to that terrible place during the whole Tudor dynasty under any lighter accusation. The ministers, every one of them, fell on their knees before her and implored her to pause; Burghley especially, confronting her anger with the firmness of his protest.

But she commanded Burghley out of her presence, the storm rising every moment louder and more shrill.

Bad news had come from Scotland. Though the Scots would have tried and executed Mary Stuart themselves, their pride was touched at the thought of her being put to death by the English. The party of Huntly and Claude Hamilton had grown with her danger. Gray and Maitland were sore at being disappointed of their expected pensions, and the King, who had been playing with both sides, was ready to go with the strongest. Lord Claude threatened if the Queen was executed to burn Newcastle, and there was every appearance that he would keep his word.¹ 'I see matters like to go very hard,' wrote an agent of Walsingham's, on the 9th of February, 'both with her Majesty and all others, if the execution go forward: I pray God it come to better end than appears for the present.'²

Archibald Douglas, now James's ambassador, who had been himself in favour of the execution, admitted that the danger was great, that war was likely, and that the Queen would hardly escape it 'without some entertainment.' He recommended Elizabeth however to defend what had been done on public grounds—'so it would be more able to be justified, and have greater appearance of princely dealing.' Subterfuge and denials, he thought, would 'bring her reputation into doubtful terms ;'³ she could not throw the blame on the council in such a matter without punishing them.⁴ But

¹ Powrie Ogilvie to Leicester, February, 1587: MSS. Scotland.

² James Hudson to Walsingham, February 9: MSS. Ibid.

³ Archibald Douglas to Burghley, April 9: MSS. Ibid.

⁴ Douglas to Walsingham, March 1: MSS. Ibid.

a difficulty of this kind was not likely to stop Elizabeth. She sent her cousin Sir Robert Carey to Edinburgh, with a fresh declaration that the King's title was unimpaired, with a promise of an increased pension, and an abject and ignominious letter.¹ Carey was met at Berwick by a prohibition to enter Scotland. Mary Stuart had but few friends there; but the affront of her death had convulsed the country, and had called out an emotion, short-lived, but for the moment so violent, that the faintest encouragement from Philip would have kindled it into flame.

The King himself intimated coldly that if the Queen was innocent she must prove it by March. chastising the guilty, and Douglas, who knew the pressure which was being laid upon him, sent some one to tell him that however he might feel himself injured, his hopes of the English succession lay in maintaining his friendship with Elizabeth; France would do nothing for him; France would never willingly see Scotland and England united; the King of Spain intended the succession for himself; 'it would

¹ 'My dearest brother, Would God that thou knewest, yet fittest not, with what incomparable grief my mind is perplexed for this lamentable event which is happened contrary to my meaning, which for that my pen trembleth to mention you shall fully understand by this my kinsman. I pray you that as God, and many others, can witness my innocency in this matter, so you will also believe that, if I had commanded it, I would never deny it. I am not so faint-hearted, that for terror I should fear to do the thing which is just, nor so base or unnobly minded. . . . Persuade yourself for truth, that as I know this is happened deservedly, so if I had intended it, I would not have laid it upon others. No more will I impute to myself that which I never thought.'—Elizabeth to the King of Scots: Printed by Camden.

be madness for him, things thus standing, to hazard the loss of that he was certain of, and depend upon uncertainties ; ' he had saved his honour by interceding for his mother ; she was dead, and he could not bring her back to life.¹

James individually was not implacable. As he had been willing beforehand to sell his consent to the execution, so he was ready afterwards to make a bargain for the suppression of his resentment. He hinted that if the Queen would persist in her excuses to save his credit, and would show substantially that she wished to please him, he would still prefer no foreign amity to hers.² When he explained himself in detail, it was found that he was hankering still after the Lennox lands ; and these lands, for the old reason, Elizabeth was determined not to part with. Douglas advised her to be free with money ; but to this too she was unable, when it came to the point, to bring herself. ' Her Majesty,' wrote Walsingham, ' neglects altogether the opportunities offered for Scotland, with which Mr Douglas is greatly discouraged.'³ It would have been difficult for James, under any circumstances, to resist the pressure which the voice of Scotland was laying upon him. He had no motive for exposing himself to obloquy and danger when he found himself amused with idle words.

¹ Secret advertisement for Scotland, March, 1587 : MSS. Scotland.

² Powrie Ogilvie to Archibald

Douglas, March 2 : MSS. Ibid.

³ Walsingham to Leicester, April 3—13 : WRIGHT, vol. ii.

To France the Queen had sent the same defence of herself which she had offered to Scotland, and the effect was exactly the same. The Catholic League was naturally furious. The French nation was indignant, 'that a hangman should have touched the head of a woman who had once been their Queen.' The King, still anxious to avoid a quarrel, was reminded by every one, that Mary Stuart was his sister-in-law, and that 'if he passed over the shedding of her blood by a bourreau, he would be abandoned of God.'¹ The Queen's excuses were laughed to scorn. 'Little and great, old and young, and of all religions, sung the same song ;' never was seen in Paris such unanimity of emotion.² A preacher spoke of the execution in a sermon, in the church of St Eustache. He roused such a tempest of passion that not another word that he uttered could be heard ; the orator and his audience breaking down together, and melting into a community of tears. Secretary Brulart said that he would never sit at council again, if the insult to France was unavenged, and Belière, well-disposed to England as he was, inquired scornfully if the Queen supposed princes' heads to be tied on their shoulders by shoe-ribands.³ Sir Edward Stafford anticipated an immediate declaration of war. So frightened was he at the exhibition of feeling, that he despaired of Elizabeth's surviving the storm ; and, though reserving his allegiance to her while she lived, yet, through Mendoza, he began to pay his court to Philip as his approaching sovereign.¹

¹ Wade to Walsingham, March 5—15: MSS. Ibid.
²³—April 2: MSS. France. ³ Mendoza to Philip, February
² Stafford to Burghley, March 24—March 6: TEULET, vol. v.

Matters were not improved by the position of the French ambassador in England. Chasteauneuf's secretary was in the Tower, he was himself charged with an imaginary crime, and his treatment was a separate cause of displeasure. The Queen, by Walsingham's advice, sent for him, and made him some kind of lame apology, while she proceeded to prove to the world her innocence of the Fotheringay tragedy. 'Her Majesty,' said Walsingham, 'doth wholly bend herself to devise further means to disgrace her poor council that subscribed, and in respect thereof she neglects all other causes.'² An unsigned letter to Leicester implies that she had been hardly prevented by Lord Warwick from dismissing all her cabinet, and adopting some dangerous change of policy.³ Burghley continued in the deepest disgrace, forbidden her presence for two months, and expecting never to return to it;⁴ and when he was released at last, and resumed his place in the council, she allowed herself to address the noblest of all her subjects in language which would have been indecent

¹ Mendoza to Philip, February 18—28: TEULET, vol. v.

² Walsingham to Leicester, April 3—13: WRIGHT, vol. ii.

³ 'Truly, my Lord, your brother hath merited in this eternal memory and obligation, being the only means from God to qualify the Queen's bitter humour, and to stay the ruinous course provoked at home and abroad, which likewise concerned her Majesty's authority and credit near, and the alienation of the greatest members of the Court and the realm.' — — to Leicester, March 29—April 8: MSS. Domestic.

⁴ Burghley to Walsingham, April 12—22: MSS. Ibid.

towards the worst felon in Newgate.¹ So eager was she that her story should be believed, that nothing so much pleased her as an indication that credit was attached to it; ² and, as Mary Stuart had played her part with so much effect at Fotheringay, so Elizabeth omitted nothing to give completeness to hers. Indignation was not sufficient while it was confined to words and manner. Some victim was necessary, whose punishment should be evidence of others' guilt and her own earnestness. She sent for the judges, and inquired 'how far the law would touch Davison:' meaning that he should be charged with treason. The judges answered that since her Majesty had signed the warrant, his offence did not reach beyond misconception or contempt. He might be punished with fine and imprisonment, but nothing further.³ She then meditated giving him up to the Scots; but it was felt that 'cruelty would follow,' and that to put him to death 'would be generally abhorred.'⁴

He might possibly have escaped altogether if he

¹ 'Not many days passed, her Majesty entered into marvellous cruel speeches with the Lord Treasurer, calling him traitor, false dissembler, and wicked wretch, commanding him to avoid her presence, and all about the death of the Scottish Queen.' — to Walsingham, June 1—11: MSS. Domestic.

² 'The part of your letter where you say the King of Scots excuses her the blame of the late execution, and lays the same upon her council, did wonderfully content her Majesty, who desires nothing more than to have it generally conceived that she had least part in the action.' — Walsingham to Stafford, April 11—21: MSS. France.

³ Walsingham to Stafford, March 9—19: MSS. Ibid.

⁴ Note of a conversation with Archibald Douglas, April, 1587: MSS. Scotland.

would have accepted the blame which she was casting upon him, but, either stung by her injustice or afraid to put himself in her power, he clung to his own story; and when he was examined in the Tower, he persisted in describing literally everything which the Queen had said to him. He 'appealed to God and her Majesty's conscience for the knowledge of the truth, and by no means could be brought to confess either fault or crime that he was charged with.'¹

Defied thus, she was compelled to prosecute him, or abandon altogether her own defence. She appointed a Commission to try him, consisting of the two Archbishops, the Chief Justices, the Chief Baron, the Master of the Rolls, Sir Walter Mildmay, Sir James Crofts, and five Peers, Lord Lumley, the Earls of Cumberland, Worcester, and Lincoln, and Lord Gray. Of these Lumley and Worcester had been in every Catholic conspiracy since the beginning of the reign; Cumberland was in Ballard's list, and Crofts, a pensioner of Philip. With a court so composed he was condemned before he was tried.

He was charged with having broken the Queen's injunctions in showing the warrant to Burghley, and when Burghley asked him if she meant it to be executed, with having replied that she did. Before a public tribunal he was more reserved than in his private declaration. The Attorney-General reminded him of an expression of the Queen's, that she had desired some other course to be pursued. He might have taken a terrible revenge upon her if he had explained the meaning of these words. But what he told to the privy council he concealed from the world. Before the court he said that he had received no positive directions; he had acted as he conceived for the best in the interests of his mistress and the realm.

¹ Randolph to Walsingham, March 11—21: MSS. MARY QUEEN OF SCOTS.

The Commissioners, in ignorance of half the facts, gave their judgment one by one. Davison was acquitted, by universal consent, of evil intention, but censured for neglect and precipitancy. Sir Walter Mildmay, speaking first, assessed his fine at ten thousand marks, with imprisonment at the Queen's pleasure. The Chief Baron drew a distinction between justness and justice. The thing done, he said, was good, the manner evil. The speeches of the two Archbishops, Lord Lumley, and Lord Gray, were more particular and noticeable.

Sandys, the Archbishop of York, once a fiery Puritan, who had drawn his dagger in the Senate-house at Cambridge, but now tamed into sycophancy, and grateful for his rescue from the innkeeper at Doncaster, 'fondly and affectedly commanded the rare affection he bore to Mr Davison;' 'he extolled his honesty, wisdom, and religion, above measure;' 'there was,' he said, 'a superabundant virtue of religion in him;' 'yet he concluded that neither honest nor wise man in the world would have done as he did.'

Lumley, who had deserved half-a-dozen times to lose his own head, yet knew that in the Queen's present humour he might show his colours with safety. He described the ministers, who had signed the commission for the execution, as a nest of conspirators. In the face of the verdict, which he had himself given upon her trial, he spoke of the Scotch Queen 'as one of the greatest Princes in Europe, who had been unduly and presumptuously proceeded against.' He objected to the fine as altogether disproportioned to the offence, and he said, 'that if Davison had been his own brother and heir, he could not devise too sharp a condemnation against him.'

Whitgift, unencumbered with theory—for the saintliness of Mary Stuart was not yet an article of the High Churchmen's creed—rather replied to Lumley than addressed himself to the case before the court. He told the story of the Queen of Scots, as Knox might have told it, 'making a sound report of her wickedness : ' her life, he said, had ever been unquiet and troublesome to the whole world ; her execution he considered due and just, well prosecuted and affected, happy for the realm, safe for her Majesty, and grievous to none that were any way dutifully disposed ; he wished Mr Davison accordingly to be favoured and respected. Yet, inconsistent with his argument, he acquiesced in Mildmay's sentence.

Gray's speech was the most remarkable.

'The Lord Gray did highly excuse Mr Davison, distinguishing between the foulness of the crime of high treason in the Scotch Queen, and the sincere zeal of him to prevent further mischief that might ensue by longer protraction to religion and the realm. Mr

Davison was one of the association, whereby his act was the more justifiable, and if the Queen had miscarried, while he had the warrant lying by him unprofitable, as might easily have been, how, he asked, could Mr Davison have answered it? He protested, that in revenge for his Sovereign, he would have been the first to have rent his heart out of his body. The injunction of secrecy was not so strictly to be interpreted. The Lord Admiral had been made privy to the writ, and Mr Walsingham, and also the Chancellor. Her Majesty's speech that 'it needed no such haste,' did not imply an express command to stay, nor did her conference of a new course to be taken, prejudicate the deliberations aforehand. He therefore deemed the gentleman rather worthy of favourable consideration than of correction at all.'

Lord Gray however, like Whitgift, 'knit up his speech that he would not dissent from the fine and pains.'¹ To acquit Davison altogether would be to condemn the Queen. Both Gray, and perhaps the Archbishop, hoped that, if she was left to her own conscience, the penalties would not be exacted.

They did not know their mistress if they thought so. She considered a vicarious sacrifice necessary for her own purification. She had convinced herself of her innocence by the violence of her assertion of it. The

¹ Two accounts of Davison's trial are printed in an Appendix to Sir H. Nicolas's Life. A third, from which my quotations are chiefly taken, is in a letter from an eyewitness to Leicester, March 29, 1587; MSS. Domestic.

fine was exacted to the last penny. Davison was dismissed from the public service; his family was ruined, and he himself remained a prisoner at his mistress's pleasure.

She gained nothing by the prosecution. No one any the more believed her, and her proceedings created only amused contempt. She had a better protection in the more serious causes which prevented the anger of France and Scotland from taking shape in more than words. The deadly enmity between Henry III. and the House of Guise at once reconciled the King privately to his sister-in-law's fate, and made Elizabeth's alliance a political necessity to his Government. The pretensions of Philip to the crown of England compelled Brulart and Villeroy to digest their spleen and limit their revenge to sarcasm.¹ The war party in Scotland were paralyzed by the same cause, and, caring more for the English succession than the restoration of the faith, and seeing that a quarrel with England, whatever might be the other results of it, would bring them no nearer to the great object of their ambition, they too submitted to endure what was now past remedy.

¹ 'I am very sorry to hear that her Majesty continues so offended with your Lordship. She does herself and her service great harm. I assure you it is nuts to them here to hear it; and yet for that respect she doth it, it rather doth harm than good, and particularly her evil countenance to you that makes the thing less believed than anything else; for all that she can do cannot persuade them here that your Lordship could even be brought to do anything against her express will. Those that loved the Queen of Scots best, will not be persuaded that you have advanced her days a minute more than the Queen willed, nor bear you any speech of evil will for it.'—Stafford to Burghley, April 4—14: MSS. France.

One satisfaction only they could not be deprived of. They held Elizabeth fast in the dilemma in which she had placed herself, and they punished her with an ingenuity of torture. Believing, after the refusal to admit Carey into Scotland, that James was on the point of allying himself with Philip against her, she sent down his father Lord Hunsdon to reiterate the declarations of her letter. Parodying what Elizabeth had said in past times to his mother, James replied that he would willingly believe her, but he must first 'have a trial of her innocency;' 'he would not condemn her unheard, but he could do no less than suspend his judgment from cleansing or condemning till further trial: for proofs that she had yet given of her innocency he remitted to her own judgment, whether she had yet satisfied the world to her honour in that matter or not;¹ if Davison was really guilty, a secondary punishment was inadequate to his offence.'

The Jesuits on the Tower rack scarcely suffered more acutely than Elizabeth at receiving April.
such language from James. She dictated answer after answer. She entreated, she threatened, she expostulated. Nothing satisfied her. She had disclaimed having given the order for the execution. The Scots argued irresistibly that if it had not been done by her order, then it had been done by private persons, and for private persons to put a Queen to death, was the most horrible kind of treason.

¹ Answer of the King of Scots to Lord Hunsdon, March 11—21, 1588: MSS. Scotland.

She was so worried, so irritated, so galled, that at first she was half driven into yielding. She bade Hunsdon say that although the King of Scots would be unwise to demand it, 'yet, if her sincerity might be the more manifested by sending her Secretary to him, she would not stick to do so.'

On second thoughts she slightly shifted her note. 'As to sending her Secretary,' she said, 'she could be content to yield so far therein as might be by any form of justice, and with discharge of her conscience, required at her hand;' but then again, her pride boiling over, she added, 'that she found by the King's articles a disposition to suspend his intelligence until he might be better satisfied of her innocency; wherein he used words of trial and cleansing, as though it were decision of a cause litigious before him as a judge: whereupon she might gather some absurd senses unmeet to be applied to her, being a Queen and a Prince Sovereign answerable to none for her actions, otherwise than as she was disposed of her own free will; but to Almighty God alone.'²

These were the very words which had been used by Mary Stuart at the time of the York inquiry; and Elizabeth had herself disallowed them.

Desperate at last, though still clinging to her position, she replied resolutely, that the King must be satisfied with her word. She would not send her Secretary to him, nor would she say an untruth in a matter where, if she had consented, she might avow and defend her conduct by the laws of God and man.¹

¹ Memorial for the Lord Hunsdon, April 3, 1588: MSS. Scotland.

² Second answer for Lord Hunsdon, April: MSS. Ibid.

The Queen of Scots had played her closing part to the admiration of mankind. Elizabeth had done her best to make a good cause into a bad one. She had flung a doubt over the justice of an execution, which, if she had acted openly and honourably, would never have existed. She had crushed an innocent Secretary whose fault had been too faithful service, and on herself she had brought ridicule and discredit.

The effect of Mary Stuart's death on English parties, and on the policy of the Catholic Powers, is more important and more interesting.

The perusal of the intercepted correspondence had after all thrown no decided light on the intentions of Philip. It had shown the Jesuits and the refugees endeavouring privately to organize a crusade. It had shown the King of Spain to be ready to strike a sudden blow if Elizabeth could first be killed—but still afraid of France—shrinking from open war—and resolute at all events not to undertake a costly enterprise without an assurance of a Catholic successor to follow the Queen of Scots. The Pope had invited Philip to execute the decrees of the Church; he had consented, provided the Pope would pay half the expenses, and would leave to him the political results of the conquest. A formal invasion of England on a great scale required elaborate preparations; and although for two years he had been collecting ships and stores, he did not mean to commit himself till he saw his way clearly on both these points. The Pope was tenacious of money; as an Italian Prince he was jealous of Spanish power and reluctant to increase it; he had professed himself generally willing to agree to whatever Philip wished, but in detail he had made difficulties about everything; he was unwilling to abandon James without further efforts for his conversion; and the subsidy which he had himself proposed fell immeasurably short of Philip's expectations.

¹ MS. endorsed, 'the last answer,' April 6 : MSS. Scotland.

Thus, 'the enterprise,' as it was called, was still hanging in suspense. The interference of Elizabeth in the Low Countries, and the sack of Carthagena and St Domingo, were considered at Rome to be provocations of such magnitude, that it was supposed Philip would now, whether he liked it or not, be forced into war on his own account. Olivarez represented, and Philip reiterated, that these were matters easily compounded. England offered peace, and, except for the Church's quarrel, the Spaniards desired peace themselves. The Pope was politely incredulous. 'Revenge,' Olivarez said, 'was to such a mind as that of Sextus, the first law of existence,' and he could not believe Philip serious.¹

¹ Olivarez writes: 'Se reduxéron, como V. Mag^d verá á confesa lo, aunque no á creerlo en ninguna manera, por la veneracion en que acá es venida la vengança.'—Olivarez al Rey, 9 Setiembre, 1586. Philip answers that it is no way incumbent on him to undertake the enterprise, 'pues aunque como deceis tengan

allá por tan llana y assentada la ley de vengança, tambien son tan discurridores en las conveniencias de estado que no pueden dexar de conocer que con hacermes Señor de la Mer y armar de manera que se limpien y aseguren las flotas de las Indias puedo yo excusar el meterme en empresa tan dificultosa quedando

While he admitted that it was reasonable that he should contribute something with the prospect of recovering the English revenues, he pleaded poverty. He still limited his offers to seven hundred thousand crowns, and even this small sum only to be paid by instalments; half a million on the landing of a Spanish army in England, or the arrival of the Armada there, and the rest six months after; or, the half million at once, if Philip would promise that it should be repaid if no Armada sailed.

Sextus was believed to have more money in his treasury than any prince in Europe. Philip entirely declined to be satisfied. He ought, he said, to have a million and a half; and a million was the least which he would accept. He did not like the condition of repayment, or the stipulation for the arrival of the fleet. It was possible that the work might be done by Parma alone, and that no fleet might be needed, and Sextus, he knew well, would hold him to the letter of his bargain.¹ The Pope, he said, must make up the full million and let him have it unconditionally; he would then complete his preparations, and go to work as soon as seguro y guardado para no poder ser ofendido; que es verdad, y que si deseo emprenderle con ayuda competente ni es por otra fuerza ni fin mas de la que me hace la lastima de ver la persecucion que alli padece la Iglesia,' &c.—El Rey al Conde de Olivarez, 18 Noviembre: MSS. Si-manecas.

despatch to Olivarez, of the 18th of November, 1586, opposite the words, 'que sea la primera paga de 500,000 Δ^{as} luego que aya desembarcado el exercito en Inglaterra ó llegado la Armada allí,'—Philip writes: 'Mirad si será bien quitar esto de la Armada y poner palabras que obligasen al Papa, aunque no hubiese Armada en el efecto.'

¹ On the margin of a draft of a possible ; but he particularly desired that the expedition should not be talked of, as success depended upon secrecy.

Olivarez had an audience to communicate his master's resolution, and so far as money was concerned, the bargain was at last concluded on the 13th of December. The conditions to which Philip objected were allowed to stand. Olivarez demanded in return, that if the money was not paid at once, the Pope should execute an instrument which would be binding on his successor. The sum was fixed at the figure which Philip required. The coming of the fleet to England was to be the period for the first instalment. The second the Pope empowered the King to raise on Church property in Spain, if he died himself before the payment was completed.

The succession was so delicate a matter that for some time nothing had been said about it. Mary Stuart had declared for Philip, and the necessity for ulterior arrangements, so long as she was alive, was less immediately urgent. The news of the detection of the Babington conspiracy were followed by accounts of her complicity, her trial, and condemnation. Philip assumed, as a matter of course, that she would now be executed ; and he was again in a hurry to have the question settled. Olivarez was directed therefore to lay Philip's claims before the Pope in form, and to require from him a public declaration that the King of Scots was disqualified as a heretic ; that the King of Spain was next in blood, through the House of Lancaster ; and that on him therefore the crown would devolve. The Queen of Scots desired it, Philip said, nor was it possible for him to go to war in the interest of a boy like James. He did not mean to annex England to Spain, but to make a present of it to one of his daughters.¹

Olivarez, better aware than the King of the opposition which he would meet with, felt his way tentatively with the Cardinals, and discovered, as he expected, that a powerful opposition was already organized, and that the Pope wished most strongly to allow James a longer time for repentance.

The reader may remember a Bishop of Dunblane,² who was sent by Mary Stuart to Paris to apologize for her marriage with Bothwell. The Bishop had so little liked his employment, that he had not cared to return to Scotland; a See was given him in France, but he resigned it, retired into a monastery, and for nearly twenty years had been a Carthusian monk. Rising, as it were, from the grave, the ashes of his patriotism kindling once more into flame, the old man had thrown himself at the Pope's feet, praying to be allowed to go back to his country, and use his eloquence for the King's conversion. The Jesuits had lent their help to Olivarez. The Pope inclined to the Bishop, who was encouraged to try what he could do.³ March.
His Holiness was so suspicious, so unwilling, notwithstanding his promises,⁴ to part with money, that he was

¹ The King of Spain to Olivarez, February 11: MSS. Simancas.

² William Chisholm.

³ Olivarez to Philip, January 7, 1587: MSS. Simancas.

⁴ Olivarez says that hardly any catching on all sides at excuses and points of objection. As to the succession, Allen and Parsons, who had been working at Rome for a year to make a party in Philip's favour, advised that nothing should be said about it till England was conquered and in the occupation of a Spanish army. To insist upon a resolution beforehand as an antecedent condition, would, they considered, not only create difficulties at Rome, but would alienate Scotland, divide the English Catholics, exasperate France, perhaps make enemies of the House of Guise, and give a character of self-interest to an enterprise which, if undertaken in the cause of the Church, would have the prayers of the Catholic world. The work once done, Spain would have acquired by conquest the right to dispose of the crown. The claim of descent could then be put forward with effect, and, when Philip was once in possession, the world might say what it pleased.¹

A letter from Allen himself to Philip accompanied a statement of these considerations, enforcing them with still greater emphasis :—

‘We are of opinion,’ Allen wrote, ‘that it will be well to say nothing for the present, either to the Pope or any one, about your Majesty’s succession. It cannot one in Rome believed that Philip would get his million, or in fact get anything. ‘Aseguro á V. Mag^d,’ he writes, ‘que son muy pocas personas las que en Roma creen quese le ayade sacar nada para esta empresa, y que publicandose que ayuda á V. Mag^d con un millon ha de parecer un mostruo de natura.’—Olivarez al Rey, 2 Marcio : MSS. Simancas.

¹ ‘Consideraciones porque con venga mas hacerse antes la empresa de Inglaterra que tratarse de la succession.’ 18 de Marcio, 1587 : MSS.

Ibid.

do good ; it may do harm through the sinister interpretations of enemies and even friends. There are two most just causes for this war, approved by all law, human and divine, which must be set out in the published letter of the Holy See. When a war is just, whatever is acquired in it is lawfully acquired, and belongs to the conqueror by as clear a right as that of blood ; and, where conquest and blood coincide, the claim becomes then irresistible. As soon therefore as God shall have given your Majesty victory, you can then allege in Parliament your descent from the House of Lancaster, and the Archbishop of Canterbury, who is Legatus natus, who gives his vote first, whom all the bishops and Catholic peers will follow, can easily bring to pass what you desire. Security will have to be taken that there be no second relapse, as before, into heresy. The Queen of Scots, we doubt not, will do her part, and will not prefer her heretic son to your Majesty. The Pope will then acquiesce, and all will go as your Majesty desires. Gird yourself therefore, great King, to the work which Christ has reserved for you. Delay no longer. Listen to the groans of the priests, who are crying to you out of their dungeons. Listen to the voice of the Church, which calls you through the tears of the faithful. While you linger, souls are perishing, friends are murdered, and the enemy grows strong. Be not angry with me if I am urgent with you in a cause which is dearer to me than life. This is the accepted time. Be not frightened with the rumours of danger and difficulty. With the sword of the Lord and of Gideon, with which you have crushed the Turk and triumphed over your rebels, you will chastise the English heretics, and this woman who is hateful to God and man, and you will restore our noble nation to its ancient glory and liberty.’¹

The Archbishop of Canterbury, who was to give the crown to Philip, was intended to be Allen himself. Already his usefulness had been recognized, and his long devotion to the cause; as a preparation to his further distinction, and to place him at once at the head of the English Catholics, Philip had recommended him for the Cardinalate,² and when the Pope, who did not like him, hesitated, the Spanish ambassador had pressed his claims.

In Allen every essential qualification was combined. His pupils had been the instruments in the late and widely-spread conversions, and so many of them had perished in the cause, that the purple of his hat would be dyed in the blood of martyrs of his own training.³ Parsons wished him to be named at the same time for the Archbishopric, but this it was thought imprudent to insist upon. The Pope was catching at every twig, and would make it an excuse for delaying his promotion to the college.⁴ Rumours of negotiations for peace had

¹ Allen to Philip, March 19 : MSS. Simancas. Abridged.

² Olivarez to Philip, September 9, 1586 : MSS. Simancas.

³ ‘Los medios de todas las negociaciones han sido y son sus discipulos, entre los cuales han recibido tantos el martirio que se podra decir que la purpura de su capelo sea tinta en la sangre de los martires que ha instituido.’—Memorial que se dió á su S^a, 14 de Março, 1587 : MSS. Ibid.

⁴ ‘Porque el Papa es hombre que se ase de cualquiera rama.’

reached the Vatican. Sextus feared that Philip was overreaching him, and could not keep his agitation to himself. He had been entreated to be secret. He chattered his anxieties right and left to every one. He had made the expedition the public talk of Rome, and Olivarez could only comfort himself by the reflection that he was so notorious a liar that nobody believed a word that he said.¹

So matters stood at Rome when the news March 14—28. arrived of Mary Stuart's execution. In so slight esteem was the lady held at the Vatican, that Olivarez says the Pope doubted whether he would allow the celebration of the ordinary obsequies; but political intrigue became ten times hotter than before, for it did seem necessary that some definite arrangement should now be made for the English crown. Allen, in a second letter to Philip, described her death as a martyrdom. The tyrant, he said, had filled the measure of her iniquity. Her subjects, Catholic and Protestant, were weary of her. She was tottering on the throne which she had so long disgraced, and every honest Englishman was craving for the day when the Castilian banner would be seen floating on the Tower.² To the Pope he represented that England was in mutiny, the people starving, the fleet, which was so much dreaded, eaten with dry-rot, not four ships being fit for sea, and the character of the infallible head of the Church was underlined by Philip.

¹ 'Y con el poco credito que tiene de hombre de palabra les parece que todo es ayre.'—Olivarez al Rey, 16 de Março: MSS. Simancas. This singular commentary on the

² Allen to Philip, March 21—31: MSS. Simancas.

whole country on fire with the brilliant example which Sir William Stanley had given at Deventer. Philip however, since it was known that the Queen of Scots had made a disposition in his favour, insisted on the recognition of his rights before he would move, and the Pope, suspicious, covetous, Italian to the heart, and hating Philip's politics as much as he admired his orthodoxy, remained with the majority of the college under the influence of the Bishop of Dunblane. Olivarez, unable to approach the subject openly, tried his persuasive powers with Cardinal Carrafa.

After the usual compliments to Carrafa's exceptional honesty in the midst of a wicked world, the ambassador complained of the influence which carnal-minded men were exercising over his Holiness. The sincere conversion of a king, he said, was a thing, no doubt, much to be desired, since subjects so often followed kings' examples. An insincere conversion, on the other hand, was the greatest of calamities, as his master had found to his cost, when he had relied on the pretended reconciliation of the present Queen of England, and had placed her on the throne to do such infinite mischief. There was no reason, not the slightest, for supposing the King of Scots would become really a Catholic. The union of the Crowns of England and Scotland would be a misfortune to the rest of Europe; nor had the King of Spain ever thought of undertaking the expedition except on the understanding that the King of Scots was to be set aside. His mother had expressed her wishes about it with the utmost distinctness, and if the Pope made difficulties he could not be sincerely anxious for the Church's welfare.

Carrafa asked a few questions about Philip's pedigree, and appeared satisfied. He seemed to think however, as Parsons had said before, that it would be imprudent to irritate Scotland, when its assistance might be of so much moment. The Hamiltons and the Gordons were at the head of a large party, which they were ready to place at the service of the invading army. Lord Claude was willing, if necessary, to confine James and take possession of the government. The English refugees too were similarly divided. They were agreed, as a spy of Walsingham's informed him, in desiring the invasion of the country by the Spaniards, but they differed in everything else. 'The Spanish faction wished the Spaniards to be conquerors, and to live under their subjection. The Scotch faction desired to be restored to their country by the Spaniards' help, but in such manner, themselves remaining masters, as they might chase them out of the land.' 'Some of these, by the Scotch Queen's death, had fallen off to the Spaniards,' but 'most of them, if they could, would seek each other's blood, and forget no matter that might disgrace each other.' ¹ On the whole therefore Olivarez himself remained undecided, said nothing to the Pope, and again left it to Philip's judgment whether, with so important a point unsettled, he would go through with the expedition or not.¹

¹ Divisions or factions of Eng- | service, resident in Rome or France, lishmen in the King of Spain's | 1587: MSS. Domestic.

Both sides thus hung back. Allen's promotion was put off. The Pope grew daily more irritable, swearing and cursing at his servants, and flinging about his dinner plates;² while Philip sat debating slowly, as usual, whether the venture should be made, but gathering up his strength in case he should decide to act, and filling Cadiz and Lisbon with galleons and transports.

Meanwhile the affairs of England in the Low Countries were sinking into wreck and confusion. Leicester, with the conspicuous incapacity which universally distinguished him, had at his departure distributed the army into garrisons, and had left each commander to his own discretion. He had quarrelled with Norris, the only supremely able officer that he had. Sir William Stanley, who went over intending treason, had soon given cause of suspicion there; the States had warned Leicester that neither he nor Rowland York were to be trusted; and Leicester, disdaining advice, and resenting interference, gave them both independent commands at Deventer and the Zutphen forts. He forbade the States to remove them in his absence. He forbade Norris, though their superior officer, to interfere with them; and having thus thrust opportunity into their hands, both town and forts were betrayed on

¹ Olivarez to Philip, March 27 : MSS. Simancas.

² ' Á los 26 deste estuvé su Santidad colericísimo en la mesa, tratando mal de palabras á los que le sirvian, y menando con gran furia los platos que aunque es cosa que algunas veces lo suele hacer esta fué mas que ordinariamente.'—Olivarez al Rey, 30 Junio : MSS. Ibid.

the 19th—29th of January to the Spaniards, and the two traitors with their Irish companions and as many English as they could tempt to accompany them passed into the service of the Prince of Parma. Allen published a defence of their conduct, on the ground that Deventer belonged to the King of Spain, and that to place the lawful owner in possession of his property was a Christian and honourable act. Their crime was but an imitation of the gigantic treachery which had been at least contemplated by Elizabeth, and the suspicions of the States which had been so hardly allayed were roused to madness. The long idleness of the English army, the negotiations for peace, detected, avowed, denied, yet still continued, the otherwise entirely unintelligible conduct of the English Queen, seemed at once to receive their explanation, and the people, in the desperation of fury, threatened to rise en masse and cut their false allies in pieces.¹ Authority there was none. No one knew who was to command or who to obey. The only anxiety of the States was to recover the cautionary towns, that they might be their own once more to defend or surrender.² Commissioners went to London to beg Leicester to return and help them to reconquer Deventer. Elizabeth received them as if they had been themselves to blame, with one of her outbursts of bad language. Leicester could not go without her consent.

¹ Wilks to Leicester, January 23—February 4; Wilks to Walsingham and Burghley, January 24—February 3; Norris to Burghley, January 21—31; Wilks to the Queen, February 16—26: MSS. Holland.

² Sir Wm. Russell to Walsingham, February 23—March 4. MSS. Ibid.

The commissioners returned helpless and hopeless, and everything seemed plunging down into irretrievable ruin. The eight thousand English troops had dwindled to three. The pay was six months in arrear. The cavalry had utterly disappeared; and had not Parma been sparing his troops, under Philip's orders, for the meditated invasion, he might have swept the whole of them into the sea.

In the intervals of the passion however which had been created by the Queen of Scots' execution, Elizabeth occasionally saw that she might tempt the States too far. Her own mind was still fastened upon the peace, but the States might anticipate her; or Sir William Stanley's example might be followed by other officers; while the reports of the preparations at Lisbon and Cadiz were so frequent and so positive that she could not wholly shut her ears to them. At length therefore Lord Buckhurst was allowed to go in Leicester's place to Holland to satisfy the States that she had no real ill-meaning towards them. To give his words credibility, and as a reply to Philip's armament, a squadron of ships was fitted out at Plymouth to carry Drake to the coast of Spain; and in a courageous moment the Queen was tempted to give him large discretion in the employment of them.

The expedition to the Low Countries had been as unprofitable as it had been costly. It had been undertaken only to secure the sea towns, and use them in making peace. With incompetence at its head, treachery in its organization, and a dishonest purpose paralyzing its movements, it had thrown a reproach on the military ability of England, which success on a more congenial element was required to compensate. A fleet at sea was beyond the reach of Queen's messengers, and Drake's ability was as conspicuous as Leicester's imbecility. The difficulty only was to get clear of Plymouth before the Queen had changed her mind.

The squadron consisted of thirty vessels large and small. Six only belonged to the Crown—the Bonaventura, of 600 tons, carrying Drake's flag; the Lion, of 500, with Vice-Admiral Burroughs, Controller of the Navy, who was sent like Doughty to hang on Drake's arm, and thwart him with timid counsels; the Rainbow, of 500 tons, the Dreadnought, of 400, and two pinnaces. The rest were adventurers equipped by merchants of London.

They cleared out of the Sound on the 2nd—12th of April, and only just in time, for a smooth communication from Parma through Andrea de Looe had blown round the vane of Elizabeth's humour. A courier came galloping into Plymouth with instructions that the King of Spain wished for peace; the quarrel was not to be exasperated; and Drake was therefore forbidden 'to enter into any of his ports or havens, or offer violence to any of his towns or shipping.'¹ Sir Francis had slipped off prematurely, expecting how it would be. He thought it likely that the message would be sent after him, and determined to do something noticeable before he was overtaken. He was caught in a gale at the mouth of the Channel, but he held on in spite of it. On the 16th he was off Gibraltar, where he ascertained that Cadiz was crowded with transports and store-ships. The mouth of the harbour was narrow. There were batteries on both sides, and a number of galleys which had a dangerous reputation were said to be in the harbour. He called a council of war and proposed to run in. Admiral Burroughs was loud in opposition. He refused to be responsible for the danger to her Majesty's fleet, with the other formulas generally used in such cases by incompetent officers. Drake's humour however infected the rest of the captains, and on the morning of the 19th, with a flood tide and a fair wind, the ships stood in between the batteries. A single shot hit the Lion, and Burroughs, seeing nothing before him but destruction, dropped his anchors, warped his vessel out of range, and drifted to sea with the ebb. The rest flew on unhurt. They fell first on the only ship of war in the roads, a large galleon. This they instantly sunk. The galleys came out, but fled at the first broadside, and Drake brought up out of shot from the shore, with absolute command of the harbour and of everything that was floating in it. The crews of the store-ships fled to land, leaving their cargoes at his mercy. There were many scores of them—large roomy vessels, some of 1200 and even 1500 tons—loaded with wine, corn, biscuits, dried fruits, the garnered wealth of Andalusia, which was going to Lisbon for the use of the Armada.

¹ The Council to Sir F. Drake, April 9—19: MSS. Domestic.

Everything of value which could be conveniently moved was transferred to the English squadron. Then with the tide at flood they were set on fire, their cables were cut, and they were left to drift under the town an entangled mass of blazing ruin.

The Spaniards, smarting under the blow, yet could not withhold their admiration. To the caballero, who was bred to war as the occupation of a gentleman, who had fed his fancy on the romances which were the abomination of Don Quixote's housekeeper, a daring action by whomsoever done was an exquisite delight. 'So praised was Drake for his valour of them, that were it not that he was a Lutheran, they said, there was not the like man in the world.' Philip one day invited a lady of the Court to join him in his barge on the Lake of Segovia.¹ The lady said, 'she dared not trust herself on the water even with his Majesty, lest Sir Francis Drake should have her.'²

As yet however the bold rover had made but a beginning. On the 21st of April (May May.
1) he passed out of Cadiz Bay as he had entered, the galleys following him but teaching the English to despise them by the feebleness of their attacks. He had taken a number of prisoners, and before leaving the coast, he sent to propose an exchange for such English seamen as were either at Cadiz or Seville. The 'general of the galleys' replied courteously, but had no power to consent. The question was referred to the Marquis of S^{ta} Cruz, at Lisbon, who answered that there were no English prisoners in Spain of any kind; and as this was notoriously untrue, it was agreed in the fleet that all the Spaniards whom they might take for the future, 'should be sold to the Moors, and the money reserved for the redeeming such Englishmen as might be in captivity elsewhere.

¹ I suppose Segovia. The reporter merely says a lake not far from Madrid.

² Report from Spain, 1587: MSS. Ireland.

From Cadiz the fleet sailed for Cape St Vincent, picking up on their way fresh convoys of store-vessels, all streaming towards the Tagus, some loaded with oars for the galleys, some with staves for casks, 'enough to make thirty thousand hogsheads;' and far and wide over the sea rose the smoke of burning ships. A division of the Armada being expected round from the Mediterranean, Drake determined to lie near Cape St Vincent, and if possible to fight an action there. He required the use of the Anchorage at Faro, where there was a convenient watering-place, and the batteries being troublesome, he prepared to land and destroy them. Burroughs, whose cowardice at Cadiz had been passed over, again interposed. Drake took no notice of him, sent his boats on shore, stormed the forts, and had roadstead and river at his command. Burroughs, either treacherous or envious, attempted to send complaints to England of Sir Francis's 'wilfulness.' The axe and block at Patagonia had shown what Drake was capable of doing to his second in command. This time milder methods sufficed. The Vice-Admiral was deposed; he was ordered to consider himself a prisoner in his own cabin; and resenting the affront, or afraid that worse might befall him, he slipped away and went home.

The Spanish ships not appearing and time being precious, the position at Faro was not long maintained. The forts so gallantly taken were evacuated, and Drake moved up to the mouth of the Tagus, intending to go in to Lisbon and measure strength with Santa Cruz in his own den. The light low English frigates outsailed the ponderous galleons, flying round them as easily as a steamer round a modern sailing vessel. In fair water he knew that he could escape if he found himself over-matched. The Lisbon estuary was moderately large. The tide could be watched, and the chances were that the Armada could be taken unprepared; the sides of the ships being probably encumbered with lighters and barges, the ships themselves half manned, and unable either to make sail or fire a gun.

That the Spaniards were in enormous force Drake well knew. 'The like preparations were never heard of; there was bread and wine enough to feed forty thousand men for a year: ' but the thicker they were crowded the less easy they would find it to move, and the more rapidly the flames would do their work among them.¹

Along with Drake's genius there was in him the Puritan conviction that he was fight- June.

¹ Drake to Walsingham, April 27, May 17, and June 2; Fenner to Walsingham, May 17: MSS. Domestic. Drake's words imply that he contemplated landing at Lisbon, perhaps in the hope of causing a rising of the Portuguese.

ing on God's side, which created success by the very confidence with which success was anticipated. Powerful as they were, 'the Spaniards,' he said, 'were still but sons of mortal men, for the most part enemies to the truth, upholders of Dagon's image, which had already fallen before the Ark;' so long as their ships would float, and they had food to eat, he and his men were ready to stay on the coast, and he was especially anxious that the Queen should allow him to do so; 'the continuing to the end yielded the true glory; if Hannibal had followed his victories he would never have been taken by Scipio;' and when men thoroughly believed that what they were doing was in defence of their religion and country, a merciful God for Christ's sake would give them victory, nor would Satan and his ministers prevail against them.'

In this spirit Drake was going into Lisbon, when he was overtaken by orders less positive than those which he had escaped at Plymouth, but forbidding him to strike directly as he intended at Philip's heart. He lay under Cintra, burning steadily everything that he could catch. He sent in a challenge to Santa Cruz to come out and fight him; and having thus, with but four small ships of war and a handful of London privateers, defied at their own doors the united navies of Spain and Portugal, he sailed for Coruña. There too he made a complete clearance of the harbour. In two months' work, half the stores which had been accumulated for the Armada had either been destroyed by himself, or set on fire by the Spaniards to prevent them from falling into his hands. He calculated, though as it proved wrongly, that another season at least would be consumed in repairing the loss, and that England, for that summer and autumn, could rest secure of invasion.

The public service having been thus accomplished, it remained to think of the adventurers. Burnt store-vessels yielded small prize money, and the wages of the men who had served their country on the chance of what they could make of it, had in reason to be considered also. The neighbourhood of the Azores was the best cruising ground for ships with cargoes of value. They stood across to St Michael's, and then immediately, so lucky was the star of Drake, they came across a carack from the East Indies so splendidly freighted, that every common sailor in the fleet counted his fortune made. They wanted no more. With 'the great San Philip' in their company they returned happily home in the middle of the summer from an expedition to which the naval annals of England as yet offered nothing that could be compared. The material injury to the enemy had been enormous. The destruction of his prestige, the confidence felt thenceforward by the English seamen, the inspiriting of the despairing Hollanders, and of the almost equally disheartened ministers of Elizabeth—these happy effects were worth at the moment to Protestant England, more than a general engagement fought and won.
July.

The encouragement was more than needed. All that English energy could do sufficed barely to keep the balance against the wild courses of the Queen. She was urged, both by Burghley and Walsingham, to send back Drake at once to the Azores with an increased force, to intercept the Indian treasure-fleet.¹ In her artificial indignation about the Queen of Scots, she had fallen back viciously on her determination to make peace. Controller Crofts had possession of her ear, persuading her that Drake had robbed her of her share of plunder, and filling her mind with dreams of an arrangement with Spain, impossible save at the cost of honour.

The conditions under which peace could be had were notorious and sharply limited. Philip would never concede religious toleration, and the United Provinces would agree to no terms without it. The Queen therefore must either treat for them against their wills, and betray the cause which she had sworn to defend, or she must treat separately for herself, which she had sworn also not to do, and buy reconciliation with Spain by the surrender of the cautionary towns. She would not be allowed to restore them to the Hollanders if she made a separate peace, nor could she be allowed to keep them. It was plain, in the nature of the case, that they were to be handed over to the Prince of Parma.

She may not have admitted to herself that she contemplated such an act of treachery. Her intention was to use the advantage which the possession of the keys of the Sea States gave her, to compel them to submit on religion. Their country would then be their own, unoccupied by Spanish fleets or armies, and her own safety would no longer be threatened. She was warned that if she allowed the States to be crushed, the Scheldt would be open to Philip's galleons, and her turn would inevitably follow. She would not listen. She had let Champagny persuade her that the nobles of the Belgian States would not permit her to be interfered with. She refused even to keep an army in the field, while the treaty was going on. The garrisons in the sea towns were strengthened, lest the States should seize them; for the rest 'nothing that had charges would in any sort be digested.'¹ Lord Buckhurst was ordered to tell the States that they must be contented with some mild toleration, which in fact would be none. They could not continue the war by themselves, and she could no longer help them.² She promised to intercede with Philip 'to relent in some convenient sort,' and to remind him of the pacification of Ghent; but she sent Parma word, through de Looe, that 'she would not insist on the matter of religion further than should be with the King's honour and conscience.'³

¹ Memorial of advices given by A. B. and C. D. . MSS. Domestic, 1587.

She had calculated justly that the States, however distracted by her injustice, would not dare to quarrel with her; but, in expecting equal forbearance from

¹ Walsingham to Wilks, May 2—12: MSS. Holland.

² The Queen to Lord Buckhurst, May 17—27.

³ Buckhurst to Walsingham,

June 18—28. Buckhurst had himself seen the words in de Looe's letter, which had been communicated to the States to show them what Elizabeth was doing.

Parma, she was mistaken altogether. Parma had been lying inactive also, under orders from Philip, and she imagined that, pending the negotiations which she had reopened, she had nothing immediate to fear from him. He had obtained permission to take advantage of her negligence, and retaliate for Cadiz where she had laid herself open.

Among the ports which were garrisoned by the English were Ostend and the Sluys, a harbour at the mouth of the Scheldt nearly opposite Flushing. They were positions of no particular importance to the States, but of the utmost moment to England. The possession of them would give Parma what he most wanted, additional room to prepare his transports if England was to be invaded, and the States had left their defence to those who were most interested in their security. They were held by a handful of starving troops, mutinous for want of pay. The fortifications had fallen out of repair. With the dream of peace before her, the Queen had refused to spend money on them; and when she believed that she was on the verge of a conclusion, she was startled by the news that Parma had put his army in motion, and first threatening Ostend, had moved on and was besieging Sluys, and that the States declined to risk men or ships for its relief.

Her first impulse as usual was to reproach Buckhurst for having disobeyed her orders—so it pleased her to describe his conduct, although he had only obeyed them too literally, and had irritated the States by speaking of peace when he saw that it was unwelcome.¹ Too late she perceived that she must exert herself. She sent Leicester back with thirty thousand pounds and five thousand men, to allay suspicion, and to resume the government; while Sir Roger Williams with a few hundred men threw himself into Sluys, raising the garrison in all to a thousand.

Still clinging however to her own views, the Queen repeated the commands which she June. blamed Buckhurst for having executed. She ordered Leicester 'to dispose the hearts of the people' to listen to an arrangement; Spain had made her 'many honourable offers;' 'nothing was left which might not be accorded between her and the King but only what should concern their safety;' Leicester was to tell them that if they refused 'she would not burden her subjects further, and must grow herself to an accord;'² while de Looe was directed to apply to Parma for a cessation of arms, and to sully the exploits which were throwing lustre on English arms, by an apology 'for the action at Cadiz.'³

¹ The Queen to Buckhurst, June 4—14. The fate of Davison had taught public servants to observe the letter of her commands, but this did not save Buckhurst, and at the end of the official reprimand she added in her own hand:—

'Oh, weigh deeper the matter than with so shallow a judgment to spill the cause, impair my honour, and shame yourself. Use your wit, that once was supposed better than to lose a bargain for the handling.'

² Instructions to the Earl of Leicester, June 20—30: MSS. Holland.

³ Parma was to be told that the Queen had sent an express after Drake, to bid him do no harm to the King of Spain; the messenger had been kept from finding him by contrary winds; and she had heard that contrary to her orders he had attempted something for which she would call him to a sharp account. —Burghley and Crofts to de Looe,

The reply of Parma was to express his willingness to receive commissioners, but to refuse an armistice, and to press closer than ever the siege of Sluys. Repeating the strategy which had crushed Antwerp, he threw a bridge of boats across the mouth of the harbour, and cut off the communication with the sea. His army lay in the meadows round the walls. Had the dykes been cut, they must have retreated or perished; but Leicester quarrelled immediately on his arrival with the States-General, offended his own troops by sending Sir John Norris out of the country, and wasted the opportunity of action in idle disputes. The Queen deliberately misunderstood Parma's answer. She conceived that he had consented to what he had distinctly declined, that the cessation of arms was to be immediate, and that there was no occasion for sending over any more men. It was to no purpose that Burghley showed her de Looe's own words, reporting what Parma had said. 'He was answered peremptorily that so it should be;' and she bade him send injunctions to Leicester to abstain from hostilities. Burghley 'felt himself unfit to be the executor of such sudden directions, where the effect might be so large and dangerous;' but he concluded, with a sigh, that 'lords and ladies commanded and servants must obey.'¹

If this order did not cause the loss of Sluys, it was because its fate was sealed already. The garrison had

June 14—24: MSS. Flanders.

And again:—

'Unwitting, yea unwilling, to her Majesty these actions at Cadiz were committed by him, for the which her Majesty is as yet greatly offended with Sir Francis Drake.'—

MSS. Ibid. July 18—28.

¹ Burghley to Walsingham, July 16—26: MSS. Domestic.

made more than one destructive sally, but they could not drive Parma from his trenches. On the 9th—19th of July, after a severe bombardment, three sharp assaults were made in immediate succession. Two thousand Spaniards fell; but the English, as their numbers thinned, were driven back from defence to defence. Parma captured a fort which commanded one of the gates, and unless relieved from without it became evident that the town must fall. The States-General declined at first to make any effort at all. In answer to appeals from Leicester, they replied, that ‘her Majesty sought but to work her own profit by a private peace, and rather burdened them with her people than did them good.’¹ Ultimately a better spirit prevailed; on second thoughts, they gave him the use of their fleet; and with the help of it he prepared at last to make a great effort by sea and land to raise the siege.
July.

Despairing signals had been seen on the 23rd (August 2); five hundred of the garrison had been killed, many of the rest were wounded, and Parma’s army was still twelve thousand strong. Leicester’s English companies were transported by sea to Ostend; and on the 24th Sir William Pelham, Lord Willoughby, and Sir William Russell, with four thousand foot and four hundred horse, ‘as resolute men as ever came to the field,’ marched along the coast for Sluys. They were to attack Parma’s position from behind, while Leicester, with Count Maurice, and his half-brother the Admiral, were to attempt the bridge from the sea. The land force after passing Blankenburg found that they could advance no further; their way lay along a narrow causeway, broken in several places, occupied at intervals by the Spaniards, and swept by cannon. Communications were exchanged with the fleet. It was a high spring tide. Fire-ships were ready to burst an opening through the bridge of boats, and the Flushing seamen were willing and eager to go in. But Maurice declined the risk unless a land attack could be made simultaneously, and Leicester signalled to the army to go back to Ostend, re-embark, and join him on the water. Two days were thus wasted. When they arrived they found a council of war debating whether to make an effort or not, the Dutch officers hesitating to venture their ships, and Leicester, blatant and ungovernable, taunting Count Maurice with cowardice. No resolution was arrived at, for none unhappily was necessary. Parma, seeing them lying outside, determined to bring matters to a crisis before they interfered with him. He offered terms to the garrison, with the alternative of an immediate assault, which they knew that they could not resist. Their friends seemed unable to help them. They surrendered, and Sluys was lost.

¹ Leicester to Burghley, July 13—23: MSS. Holland.

It was discovered, from an intercepted letter of Parma, that the siege had cost him between five and six thousand of his best troops, with forty-five officers. The skill with which the defence had been conducted had so struck him that he had, as he admitted, tried the virtue of Sir Roger Williams who had been the soul of it, and had made him liberal offers if he would enter Philip's service. He confessed that he had entirely failed. It was characteristic of Leicester that he at once 'conceived great jealousy of Williams,' persecuted him with calumnies, and attempted to drive him out of the service. 'The Prince of Parma,' said Williams proudly, when driven to defend himself, 'had made him great offers of courtesy. He had not asked him to bear arms against his own country, but to serve against the Turk. He had replied that his sword was first to serve her Majesty, and then the King of Navarre; and to the King of Navarre, if disgraced among his own people, he meant to go.'¹

The loss of a place of so much consequence to her aggravated the ill-feeling of the Queen August. towards the States. She had partially reinforced her army. She had restored them Leicester, she said; and they had not lifted a finger to help her in return. Their ingratitude was monstrous, and her disgust at her connection with them was vented upon her own miserable troops. Parma, while still professing to negotiate, was refilling his ranks. German, Spanish, Italian companies were pouring in to him. Nieuport and Dunkirk were already filled with hulks and barges, and now a third important harbour was at his disposition. On the other hand, the remains of the original English army had been now without pay for a year. The garrison at Flushing was 'naked and starving, like to perish for want of clothes to cover them.'¹ 'The Queen being earnestly moved to send money for their relief, answered peremptorily that she would send no more money.'² 'The last companies' that had gone over with Leicester were flocking back to England 'in lamentable case.' These had received no pay at all. Their officers, unable to support soldiers at their own cost, had disarmed, disbanded, and sent them away, without food, money, or passport. Thirty of the ragged wretches presented themselves in mute protest at the palace-gate at Westminster. The council, 'to prevent others from coming to Court to offend her Majesty,' dismissed them with sharp speeches, and threatened them with the stocks; but too aware of the justice of their complaints, Burghley and others 'raised a purse among themselves' to carry them back to their homes.³

¹ Willoughby to Walsingham, | Burghley, July 28; Needham to
 July 23; Needham to Walsingham, | Walsingham, August 12: MSS.
 July 24; Sir Wm. Pelham to | Holland.

While Parma grew daily stronger, Elizabeth was deliberately disarming herself. She would hear of nothing but peace; she could think of nothing but peace. Peace indeed, as Sir William Pelham said, was becoming most necessary, if this was to be her way of making war. 'Better in my opinion,' he said, 'save the reputation of our country by knitting up some conditions which might shadow our weakness, rather than be the scorn of all

¹ Accounts from Flushing, October 25—November 4: MSS. Holland.

² Burghley to Leicester, November 6—16: MSS. Ibid.

³ Burghley to Leicester, November 6—16: MSS. Ibid.

nations.’¹ Peace! but on what terms, and for whom? Elizabeth denied peremptorily that she meant to make a private peace for herself. She called it a wicked and devilish slander. She charged the States with ingratitude for suspecting her of such an intention;² but she said, at the same time, that they had made peace necessary by betraying Sluys, and she required their consent. The States answered that they did not wish for peace. They could defend themselves for ten years longer, even if left alone. They did not ask for further help. They wanted only to have their towns restored to them.³ The Queen had but to take them at their word, and she might have left them, if not generously, yet without dishonour; but her own prospects required that she should keep the towns to make her own bargain with. Crofts, with his treacherous counsels, alone directed her. Burghley told him, and so told him that his words might reach his mistress, ‘how dangerous her proceedings were to run a contrary course in the presence of the enemy.’ ‘I think,’ he wrote to Walsingham, ‘my sharp words will offend; but ^{September.} I am so chafed that I cannot hold my peace. I fear nothing more than that her Majesty by her own coldness and temporizing shall be forced to sing Haud putâram. She will throw it upon some of us; but therein I will have afore God a clear conscience. Yet

¹ Sir William Pelham to Walsingham, August 12: MSS. Holland.

² Elizabeth to the States of Holland and Zealand, September 20, and compare November 7: MSS. Ibid.

³ Knivett to Walsingham, September 25: MSS. Ibid.

the mischief will go forward. I have no hope to have my advice allowed.’¹

Hemmed round by hard conditions, she was unwilling to encounter dishonour; yet she was determined upon an object which was not to be had save at the price of dishonour. She could have peace for herself by surrendering the towns to Philip, or she could restore the towns to the States, and treat on a fair footing for such terms as she could obtain without them. The first course was infamous, the second forfeited her advantage; and she wished therefore to compel the Hollanders to take part in a treaty which they abhorred, and to relinquish the one object for which they had fought so gallantly, while she obtained for herself, at their cost, the security which she coveted.

Floundering in her embarrassments, she made a fresh attempt on Parma’s loyalty. She suggested again that, ‘considering the hard measure that he and his father had received from the King of Spain,’ he should take the Provinces for himself, and become Duke of Burgundy.²

¹ Burghley to Walsingham, September 1—11, September 9—19: MSS. Domestic.

² ‘His Honour wished me to tell you that he would be glad to hear from you, in answer to that he commanded me to write to you, which was about an overture or motion he wished you to make to the Prince there, that her Majesty would wish him to provide for himself in taking possession of those countries, considering the hard measure that both his father and himself had always received at the King of Spain’s hands. Her Majesty could far better endure him as Duke of Burgundy and her neighbour there than a King of Spain, in which kind of treaty he should find her Majesty so well disposed as he could wish.’—Fragment endorsed ‘M. to B. September 18, 1587.’—MSS. Holland.

Finding no encouragement this way, she sent Herbert, the Master of Requests, to the States, with a formal intimation that Spain had long been making overtures to her for an arrangement, that she had delayed her reply, 'hoping to be assured of their good will;' but that she could not as a Christian prince hold back longer. She intended to send Commissioners to treat with the Prince, and she invited them to name Commissioners also, with a promise that their surety should be as well provided for as her own.¹ De Looe, at the same time, was directed to tell the Prince that Commissioners were coming immediately, to ask again for an armistice, and to request also an engagement that, pending the negotiations, the Lisbon fleet should make no attack on England.²

Sir James Crofts, the inventor of the mischief, Lord Derby, Lord Cobham, and a civilian Dr Valentine Dale, were named, and waited only for the answer of the States, to cross to Ostend. A memorandum was addressed to Lord Derby, probably by Cecil, pointing out in what way he could best neutralize the ill effects of the work which he was set to do. 'Infinite danger,' the writer said, 'was to be looked for, not only from the peace itself, but from the bare mention of it.' The Spaniards had received great provocation from England. They were prepared for war, and had every motive to pursue it. It was natural that they should talk of peace, that they might take the Queen at a disadvantage. There was no probability that they were sincere, and the Queen's resolution to make peace was in every way to be deplored. 'Since however her Majesty chose to have it so, as a lady unapt for many respects to prosecute a war against so mighty a monarch as the Spanish King,' the result most to be desired was that she should restore the towns to the States, forgive them their debts, continue in friendship with them, and leave them to fight their own battles. It was vital to the safety of England that they should be able to continue the struggle.¹

¹ The instructions to Herbert, as originally drawn, contained only the simple word 'surety.' Cecil, ever on the watch, adds in his own hand: 'Both in their ancient liberties and freedom of their consciences in matters of religion.'—Memorial to Mr Herbert, October 12—22: MSS. Holland.

² Burghley to de Looe, October 15—25: MSS. Flanders.

November. Lord Derby would have reason to congratulate himself could he bring his negotiations to such a conclusion as this. But it was a thing rather to be wished than looked for. The States could at any time obtain terms for themselves from Philip better than those with which Elizabeth meant them to be contented; and latterly, unwilling as they were to abandon the cause for which they had been fighting, they had been tempted to retaliate her treatment of them on her own head, make their own separate peace, and leave her to the fate which she had deserved.² On both sides the desire seemed only to hurt and wound. Lord Derby's correspondent wished her to remit their debts to her. When they hesitated whether they would send Commissioners, she demanded immediate repayment of all the money which she had ever lent or advanced for them.¹

¹ Memorandum to the Earl of Derby, November 27 — December 7: MSS. Spain. Abridged.

² Leicester to Elizabeth, November 5—15: MSS. Holland.

The States turned sullen. 'The Queen,' they said, 'had helped them, not for love, but for her own necessity; and they might use her as she was using them.'² The Queen, thereupon, for the last time, revoked Leicester, putting a final end to his unlucky sovereignty. The command of the troops was forced upon Lord Willoughby. It was 'an honour,' he said, 'which he feared would only be his disgrace.' 'He had nothing to look to but famine, mutiny, and treason;' and 'he prayed that, if it was possible, the cup might pass from him.'³ But the fear that, if he refused, some catastrophe might overtake the miserable army, overcame his resolution, and he remained as General of the English contingent, being discharged of all connection with the government of the country. St Aldegonde made one more passionate appeal to the Queen. The States, he said, desired peace as much as she, if only they could have a good peace; but peace patched up without security for religion would be ruin to England as well as to them. Lord Willoughby expressed a fear that, unless she moderated her tone, the States might really and truly make their own terms. Nothing would move

¹ Burghley to Leicester, November 6—16: MSS. Holland.

² Leicester to Burghley, November 17—27: MSS. Ibid.

³ Willoughby to Walsingham, November 14—24 and December 8
—18: MSS. Ibid.

1588. her. Herbert was recalled, and on the 1st of Feb. 1—11. February, she sent her ultimatum. Her Commissioners, she said, could wait no longer, and were about to sail for Ostend. She had desired nothing but the good of the States, as they would have seen if they had not been blinded with passion. For the last time she required them to send representatives to act with her own, and she promised to have special care of their interests.¹

Meanwhile confusion of purpose, equal almost to Elizabeth's perverseness, was distracting the counsels of the Catholics, and she had a staunch friend where she had least right to look for one. Among the conditions necessary for a successful invasion, was the co-operation or the neutrality of France, and until the Catholic nobles were strong enough to coerce the House of Valois, or until a Catholic revolution had placed another dynasty on the throne, a European war lay between Philip and his purpose, in addition to his other difficulties. The King, with more adroitness than could have been expected of him, had so far crippled the action of the Holy League. Unable to oppose it, he had placed himself at its head, and assumed the direction of its armies. The Duc de Joyeuse, whom he sent to command in the south, was defeated at Coutras by the King of Navarre. Casimir and the Duke of Saxony had come to the help of the Huguenots in the north-east, with twenty thousand Germans. Elizabeth had interposed her good offices, but Henry had declined both her assistance and her mediation. He took the field himself to oppose them, deliberately giving them opportunities to defeat him. When they would not use them, he fell back upon the Loire, leaving Lorraine and Burgundy open to them to overrun and destroy; and had they comprehended his object, and possessed, as he said himself, either 'valour or discretion,' they might have brought the League upon its knees. Unfortunately they followed him into the heart of France, with Guise behind them, and, shut in between two armies, they were forced to capitulate.¹

¹ The Queen to Herbert, February 1—11: MSS. Holland.

¹ Sir Edward Stafford gives a most curious explanation of this campaign, as it was told him by the King himself. His letter throws singular light on Henry's character, and shows among other things how true a friend Elizabeth was finding in him. It was in cipher, addressed to Elizabeth herself, and carries on the margin many of her peculiar marks where this or that passage struck her.

'May it please your Majesty,' so it runs, 'I spoke yesternight with the King, who sent for me by a man unknown, to a house I think I can guess at again though it were night, and he brought me far out of the right way to it, where I found nobody in the chamber but the King himself. In the house I heard folks, but nobody saw me, nor I saw nobody, for he that brought me tarried not in the chamber. He began with me that he had sent for me upon the trust and confidence he had in me, and in the faithful assurance I had given him both in her Majesty's and my own name, that whatever be delivered to me I would send it direct to your Majesty's own hands, and that you would do what lay in you for the good of France, and keep it to yourself, so that it should never be spoken of nor heard of, that he had dealt thus confidently with your Majesty or any of yours. . . . He said he would assure himself, on my promise, that I and your Majesty would perform it at all points; that he would deal plainly with me and lay his state more open to your Majesty than ever he did to any; that he was well content she should take advice of any her most secret councillors whom it pleased her; that he knew she had them, that he wished with all his heart to have given of his blood that he had the like that would depend upon nobody but his will, his affairs should not pendre à balance as they do; that when the last day he sent me word by Pinart, the answer he did make it was the Queen-mother and his whole council's peremptory advice, standing upon it, it was not fit he should desire your Majesty to meddle between him and his subjects; that thereupon he made the answer, and desired me to send it away as I did, that nothing might be suspected that I hoped of anything else from him: but that he would deal more plainly with your Majesty, beseeching you with all his heart to do it, and without making known to any that any request came from him, because they of the religion, as he said, could keep nothing secret, and that you would persuade the King of Navarre to have a care of his estate, and to accommodate himself to the French King in such sort as the League might have no pretence to ruin France and him both.

The defeat at Coutras was thus counterbalanced. The King still laboured to prevent the League from

'I told him your Majesty could not deal with the King of Navarre for religion; you would do anything else, but persuade him to change you would no more do than you had persuaded him to take it. If the King of Navarre's own judgment should make him do it for the good of his estate, you would not meddle with conscience nor with his soul.

'He said he would deal as plainly with me as if I was his ghostly father. He was a good Catholic, and he wished all France was Catholic, but he was not such a bigot that he would let France and himself be ruined sooner than permit the exercise of the religion, as he had done and would do it again with all his heart, but it was now out of his power. He said he dealt plainly with me. His last hope to have done that was by the Reisters' means, who if they had either valour or discretion, might have made the League upon their knees ask that which they had been in arms for, which was what he expected and looked for, and was the cause why he would take no knowledge of the offers I made him from your Majesty to stay them. He had given them all the means they desired to have done it if they could, and if they would have kept themselves far enough from him, as he kept from them, till they would needs come to seek him. Twice or thrice before they had it in their hands to have overthrown the League and have ended all in a day. If they had ravaged Lorraine, Champagne, and Burgundy, and had left none of their adherents unspoiled, they would as much have prayed for peace as they had sought the contrary; but instead of annoying them they had come to seek him, so that he was obliged to do that he did, being brought so low as they were, to take the honour out of the League's hands.

becoming dominant; yet Guise was now in a position to prevent him from sending help to Elizabeth; Guise

‘Now all hope that way was taken away, for that they had let them learn the way that was never thought of before to ruin as many armies of Reisters as ever should come into France without fighting, and which he cannot impeach them of without making himself a party against them, which cannot be. If they come again they will give a colour to the others to call in other strangers to their defence which he feareth most. To bring them back would be ruin to all. His hope now therefore is that the colour of bearing arms may be taken away, which cannot be except the King of Navarre will yield to him in religion. This and this only would cut the League’s throat.

‘I said, your Majesty would do all you could, but on religion you could not open your mouth to the King of Navarre, and if he would yield, I did not see how he could, for he had no power over Condé nor over the rest of the religion. He said if Navarre and Condé submitted the rest would obey, being the two next heirs, or at any rate Navarre being the next heir, whom were it not for religion he would immediately acknowledge.

‘I said if I were of the King of Navarre’s council, and was required to give him the best advice for the preservation of his estate, I would bid him do what the King desired, but if I were of the King’s own council I would be torn in pieces first. The King of Navarre would at once become the sun, rising clear, and would eclipse the King himself.

‘He was silent for a time. He then said everybody could rule a shrewd wife; but he that had her could tell worst the way to rule her, and that was his case; but he would rather risk what might come from Navarre than to have the League by that colour to strengthen themselves daily, which cannot be remedied else.

‘He said he had opened his mind to me as far as he had never done to any stranger, and to but few in France. He trusted in my word to be secret, and if faith was not kept with him he would never deal confidently with your Majesty nor any of yours again; no living creature did know of my coming save he that brought me, nor he nothing of the matter. If it was ever heard he would disavow having seen me, and never love your Majesty more, but hate you as much as he loves you; but if you will help him to pacify France, and pull it out of the mouths of them that make it a prey to strangers, he being out of danger in France may help his neighbours, which he protests he will do. His enemies are your Majesty’s and you should help him, first because you are in quiet and have means to do it. His mother and the council dissuaded him from asking, as a thing dishonourable to France, that she himself might have furnished a powerful contingent in support of the invasion; and the French Catholics were more than ever anxious to take part in it, that they might have a voice in the future disposition of England. Henry was besieged with entreaties to claim a share of should meddle between him and his subjects. Yet he did desire it, and did thus secretly beseech me to bring it about, but I must be secret. Nothing would more vantage the League than if it were known that he had had conference with me. He had not many to trust to. He had gone with me further than he had ever gone with any or ever meant to do again.

‘He then talked about the Queen of Scots and her death, when I satisfied him your Majesty was not to blame. . . . He told me the Queen-mother and others told him that it stood on his honour to revenge it . . . but he would not do this. If once Navarre and he could be brought to act together, he said, he could settle France, but without this all his State was like to be brought to hazard. His State was not as other men’s, nor French humours as other people’s. If Navarre would help, by changing his religion, he would take another course, and be beholden to his friends that should move him to it, otherwise he must go on as he is doing, and swallow much against his stomach to win time.

‘He spoke of our proposed peace with Spain, which he thought was delusion, and could not suppose your Majesty believed in it. He knew assuredly that Spain meant it not, or at least if he did it was but to serve his present turn till he had done with France. He protested that since this treaty began he had been continually pressed by Spain, and yet was daily, to join an attempt against your Majesty, that he almost alone had held, against all the world, that nothing should be done against your Majesty, and that in truth I know to be true, but if he did not consider him in the end you must follow his own interest and go with the stream. The daily piracies committed by the English on the French made peace more and more difficult. I asked if he would be offended if a new army of Reisters came to his frontier.

‘I think he would not, for these were his words:—Le diable les emporte, qu’ils my ont demeuré dernièrement canailles qu’ils sont. I doubt about Navarre’s disposition, perhaps he desires to change his religion, and would make your Majesty his excuse to the world.’

Paris, February 25—March 3, 1588: MSS. France.

the enterprise, or at least to allow Guise to act in his name; while the French parties at Rome worked upon the Pope with a persistency which tried all the skill of Olivarez.

The secrecy on which Philip insisted had long been disregarded. Everybody knew that an expedition against England was in contemplation. The French ambassador no longer opposed it, but protested against Spain undertaking an enterprise alone, in which it was the privilege and the duty of the Catholic world to participate; while the Pope pleaded his obligation, as the impartial Father of Christendom, to welcome a co-operation for which pious Catholics had so long prayed in vain.

Philip was in great embarrassment. He could not trust Henry. He could but partially trust Guise. Yet, if France was really and truly willing to join with him, he could not make an open objection. He directed Olivarez to speak immediately to the Pope about the succession, not as asserting a right but in the form of consultation. The Queen of Scots' will, he said, his personal claim by blood, and his claim by conquest when the conquest was effected, combined and would combine to make England his legitimate property; but as he would be unable to reside there himself, and the presence of a Catholic Sovereign would be all-important for the restoration of the faith, he desired to know his Holiness's own wishes. He professed the utmost confidence in the judgment of the Holy See, and of the goodwill of his Holiness towards himself in particular. He did not desire to make England a part of his dominions, nor of himself had he been inclined to raise a question on the subject ; but the expedition would cost the Spanish treasury a larger sum than England would ever repay ; the Prince his son would have cause of complaint if he allowed the rights of his family to be passed over ; and the occupation of England by a friendly power was of the greatest importance for the safe holding of Flanders. He invited the Pope therefore to call in the assistance of the Holy Spirit to determine a difficult problem. His own wish, he repeated, was to see the English crown disposed of in the manner most advantageous to the Apostolic See and the interests of the Catholic religion.¹

To this smooth language the Pope replied in the same tone. He gave hopes that he would declare conditionally in Philip's favour, if Philip would bind himself to nominate some other person immediately after,² and he consented at last to give Allen the long-sought honour of the Cardinalate.

Nothing was settled however. Complaints and recriminations passed backwards and forwards between Paris and Rome, and Rome and Madrid ; and Philip, acting on Allen's advice, resolved to strike the blow suddenly and with all his might, while France was entangled in civil war. With England in his possession, he flattered himself that he could dictate terms to Europe

¹ Draft of a proposition to be submitted to the Pope, July, 1587: MSS. Simancas.

² 'Tan poco no desconfio que se puede atraer el Papa á que diese la investidura para V. Mag^a con obligacion de subinvestir luego otro, que seria de consideracion.' — Olivarez al Rey, 30 Julio, 1587: MSS. Ibid.

at his own pleasure. Through all his uncertain diplomacy he had not intermitted for one moment his preparations for war. Unlike Elizabeth, while he had talked of peace and had meant peace, could he have it on the conditions which she was herself privately prepared to allow, he had been busy for four years adding ship to ship and galley to galley.

The crusade against England had been preached from pulpit and platform, and the chivalrous Castilians, whose creed was not yet a cant, and in whom the ardour of the crusade had been kept alive by the wars of the Moors, had come forward with enthusiasm to draw their swords for God and for the Virgin Lady of their devotion. Every noble family in Spain had selected one or more of its sons to represent it. Country hidalgos, of whom Cervantes was only the finest type, whose great-grand-fathers had fought in Grenada and Naples, and whose fathers had brought home scars from Lepanto, had volunteered as if for the war against the Saracens.

The damage done by Drake, enormous as it was, had been repaired swiftly by the enthusiasm of the country, and by the beginning of the winter the most powerful fleet ever seen in Europe was floating ready for sea in the Tagus. Twenty thousand Spanish soldiers, and as many seamen and galley slaves, were collected in and about Lisbon, and at their head was the veteran Don Alvarez de Baçan, Marquis of Santa Cruz, whose boyhood went back into the wars of Charles V., who had destroyed Strozzi and the French privateers at Terceira, and had won Lepanto for Don John.

The army of the Prince of Parma had been simultaneously reinforced. The gaps made in it by the siege of Sluys had been filled. In the November following Farnese had thirty thousand Spaniards, Italians, and Germans, disposed at various points along the coast. He had collected an infinite number of the large flat-bottomed river barges for transports, and had taken them down to Dunkirk and Nieuport. He had a few armed hoys besides, and large boats for landing, and in addition, but unfortunately in the Scheldt at Antwerp, and therefore useless so long as Flushing was in the enemy's hands, 'thirty-one brave ships of war,' carrying each twenty or thirty brass guns.¹ The army was kept together, apparently threatening Ostend, and the Prince reported that he was ready at any moment to transport the entire force to England if the fleet could hold the Channel while he crossed.

Delayed as he had been by Drake, Philip September. had not parted with the hope that he might try the great experiment in the present year. He had arranged his plans in September, and had prepared Parma for the immediate arrival of the fleet. He was then, he said, waiting only for the arrival of a few ships from the Mediterranean to send orders to Santa Cruz to sail. God, it was to be hoped, would take care of the weather; but the Channel being a dangerous place, and there being no harbour on the French or Flemish coast where large ships could ride in safety, the Armada was to proceed immediately to the mouth of the Thames and anchor off Margate. In that position they would hold perfect command of the Straits. No English vessels could show upon the water and Parma could pass in safety and land in Thanet. Santa Cruz would bring with him sixteen thousand Spanish infantry, six thousand of the best of which Parma was to select and take with him, and he and the Marquis must then arrange their future plans. No time was to be lost, for the deeper the winter the more difficult would be the voyage; and the King therefore told him to expect to see Santa Cruz within a few days of the arrival of his letter. He was to hold himself ready to embark at a few hours' notice; every day that the fleet lay exposed would be an additional and unnecessary peril, and the consequences of a disaster might be most serious. He professed unbounded confidence however in Parma's prudence and judgment, and he did not doubt that with God's help all would go well.¹

¹ Advertisement from the Low Countries, January 12—22: MSS. Flanders.

At that particular moment all conditions had been favourable. Henry III. and Guise were on the Loire, occupied with the Reiters. Elizabeth was obstinately refusing to hear of anything but peace, and was dreaming that she might tempt Parma to disavow his allegiance and set himself up as Duke of Burgundy. Her army in Flanders was falling to pieces, and ship-loads of starving wretches were flocking back to England to clamour at the council doors. No danger was anticipated from Spain, at soonest, before the following summer. The few ships which had been held in commission after Drake's return could no longer keep the seas without repair. The rest were lying unrigged in the Medway.¹ Had Santa Cruz sailed before the end of September as Philip intended, not a ship could have been brought out to encounter him. Parma, beyond question, would have crossed the Channel, and the battle of English liberty would have been fought not at sea but on shore.

¹ Philip to the Prince of Parma, September, 4, 1587; MSS. Simancas.

But September passed before the expected squadron came in to the Tagus, and the autumn gales began to blow. The Pope and Cardinals were continually exclaiming at the delay. The impatient Olivarez gave it as his opinion that the main ocean was as safe in winter as in summer; that the danger of the Channel began north of the Thames; and that, to expect harm from the weather was to show want of faith in the Almighty.²

At a council of officers and pilots however, held at Lisbon, by Santa Cruz, it was decided to be too late, and Philip, with extreme reluctance, acquiesced in the necessity of postponement.

¹ 'For the intended invasion the next year from Spain, I am sorry to think that which I hear of every day, that the Queen's ships are in such decay as they are not serviceable till great cost may be done upon them.'—Burghley to Walsingham, September 13: MSS. Domestic. The words 'next year' show how entirely Burghley would have been taken by surprise if the Armada had appeared in the Channel.

² 'Si buen no se puede navegar con seguridad con este tiempo, se veen mucho mayores peligros y inconvenientes en diferir para otro año; y si la Armada de España no tiene de entrar muy adelante en la Canal á tomar tierra, la navegacion del Mar grande no es de temer mucho, demas de lo que se puede esperar de la asistencia de N^{ro} Señor, siendo su causa.'—Olivarez al Rey, 30 Noviembre: MSS. Simancas.

The delay was used to good purpose by England : before Christmas, as will be told in the ensuing chapter, an effective squadron was at sea under the Lord Admiral. To Parma it was signally disastrous. Through unaccountable negligence he was left uninformed that the fleet was not coming. The winter opened with heavy rains and winds, and the army, kept under canvas in obedience to Philip's orders on the hills above Dunkirk, suffered no less terribly than the English had suffered in Walcheren in the previous winter. Week passed after week in weary expectation. The Spanish regiments, 'the chief sinews' of Parma's force, became unfit for service. Spanish, German, Italians, dwindled away and died, and of the thirty thousand who were ready to embark in September, not eighteen could take the field at the beginning of the following ^{1588.} year. The King neither wrote nor sent, till at ^{January.} length, at the end of January, there came a letter intimating that the Armada was not to sail till the spring, and expressing some irritation that Parma had not made the trial by himself, or that the Duke of Guise and he had not gone across together.

The Prince, whose loyalty would not usually permit him to use an impatient word, could not wholly restrain his provocation at so absurd a reproach. As a general and a soldier he had been already acutely tried by the sufferings of his troops. He reminded the King that he had been expressly forbidden to move till Santa Cruz's arrival. The ships at Antwerp were imprisoned in the Scheldt. His transports could only attempt the passage in the most favourable weather. So far from being able to fight, they could bear neither wind nor sea. Four English vessels could sink the whole of them. As to Guise, he had a large army in the field; but when all was said, he was still French, and the less Philip trusted him the less he would be disappointed. ‘Had the Marquis come,’ Parma continued, ‘when I was first told to look for him, the landing could have been effected without difficulty. Neither the English nor the Dutch were then in a condition to resist your fleet. In this and all else I have punctually, lovingly, and loyally obeyed your Majesty’s commands. Your Majesty charged me in repeated letters to wait for the arrival of the fleet. If your Majesty will now order me to attempt the passage, I will try it though we all perish. Neither my honour nor the place which I hold will permit me to hesitate. Your Majesty knows that the fleet has not arrived; you know the causes which have detained it; and yet your Majesty supposes, to my extreme regret, that I ought now to be in England. Let your Majesty give me an absolute command and I will execute it. To write to me as if I should have acted already in direct contradiction to your instructions is naturally distressing to me. Do me the signal kindness to tell me what to do, and no difficulty shall stop me, though you bid me cross alone in a barge. The situation however is no longer what it was. The united fleets of the English and the rebels are formidable. Let your Majesty see that the Marquis comes well armed and furnished, that if he be obliged to fight, he may, with God's help, have the victory.'¹

The impatience of Philip was but too natural. The condition of his treasury demanded either immediate war or else immediate peace. The Pope stood to his original determination to contribute nothing till the Spaniards were actually in England, and his million crowns, when they came, would be but a drop of water in the ocean of the present expenditure. The Belgian Provinces, utterly exhausted, could yield no more contributions, and Spain had to supply the entire cost, both of the army at Dunkirk and of the fleet. Parma's expenses were five hundred thousand crowns a month;² the Armada was consuming at least as much more; while continued assistance had to be furnished to Guise and the Duke of Lorraine, to keep the League in the field; and so great were Philip's difficulties in finding money, that the peace negotiations were still far from being a mere pretence. When he permitted Parma to invite the English commissioners, it was not merely to gain time, for the protraction of time itself was ruining him. Could the States be brought to accept the conditions which Sir James Crofts and de Looe undertook to obtain from Elizabeth, Parma evidently thought that they ought to be accepted without insincerity or reservation; and equally his chief anxiety was to find Elizabeth sincere also.³

¹ Parma to Philip, January 21— 1588: MSS. Ibid.

31, 1588: MSS. Simancas.

² 'Relacion particular de lo que monta un mes de sueldo,' 29 Avril, partes vienen, y por lo que se puede colegir, parece que la Reyna desea

The financial question was becoming overwhelmingly pressing. The mortality in Parma's army continued; for uncertain what might be expected of him he was obliged still to keep his men exposed. Supplies had failed, and they were on short rations; and though neither mutinous nor out of spirits, their shrivelled numbers told what they were enduring. Parma was himself ill with labour and anxiety. The scanty sums which he contrived to borrow at Antwerp on enormous interest he had to divide between his own troops and those of the League, from which after all he expected but little.¹ Delay was vexatious and ruinous, and Philip once more resolved to risk the weather, trusting to Providence to prevent a storm. Before Parma's letter of the 30th of January had reached him, he had ordered Santa Cruz to sail. The instructions of September were repeated with little variation. He was to make direct for the North Foreland, turning neither to right nor left. If an action was forced upon him, his force would be enormously superior, and ought therefore to secure him the victory; but he was not to go out of his la conclusion de la paz, y que el temer en que está de presente y el gasto que tiene le tienen muy trabajada. Tras todo esso no se puede creer que haga virtud sino forçada de la necesidad, como otras veces he apuntado á V. Mag^a; aunque si la negociacion se comença bien presto, le descubrirá el camino que llevan; y si fuere aparente de bueno suceso, estará en mano de V. Mag^a escoger lo que mas servido fuere. Entiendo que de parte de las provincias rebeldes han destinado á S. Aldegonde y Longolius para asistir á la junta y negociacion por las dichas provincias. Si vinieren, bien puede V. Mag^a estar seguro que si me fuere possible procurare no solo trabar platicas, mas venir en algun concierto.'—El Duque de Parma al Rey, 31 Enero, 1588: MSS. Simancas.

¹ Parma to Philip, February 12—22: MSS. Ibid.

way to seek the enemy ; if possible, he was rather to avoid them ; and once in communication with Flanders, he was to consider himself under Parma's orders.¹

The execution of these commands was prevented by the first, and one of the most serious of the misfortunes which befell the expedition. Santa Cruz, the ablest seaman that Philip had, suddenly died. It was no easy matter to find a successor, and the Duke of Medina Sidonia, on whom the choice fell at last, had to make himself acquainted with the officers, and with the countless details of the business of the expedition, before he was in a condition to move. Medina Sidonia had been governor of Milan and captain-general of Andalusia ; but he had held no command of consequence at sea. He had shown no particular ability anywhere, and his qualifications were mainly his rank and his being son-in-law of Philip's favourite, the Princess of Eboli.

Weeks, perhaps months of delay, had now become inevitable with all their attendant expenses. Had Santa Cruz lived and had the Armada sailed in January, it would have once more found the Channel undefended, for Elizabeth, in a spasm of economy, had again broken up half the fleet, and dismissed the crews. They were recalled speedily and the ships re-equipped, in haste, and at an enormous cost ; but there was an interval of a few weeks which the Spaniards would exactly have caught. The chance passed however and was not allowed to return.²

¹ Instructions to Santa Cruz, January, 1588 : MSS. Simancas.

² Sir James Crofts, in a letter of the 15th of February, strongly urges

Meanwhile the relations between Elizabeth and the States did not improve. In answer to her invitation to send commissioners, the States replied that the King of Spain had refused to make concessions in religion. They required her therefore to abandon 'the hollow, false, deluding treaty,' and to sustain the number of her troops which she had undertaken to supply.¹ Elizabeth retorted 'that she would submit to no more indignities at the hands of the ungrateful Provinces,' and 'had resolved to withdraw her assistance from them.'²

Lord Derby, Sir James Crofts, and Lord Cobham, and Sir Amyas Paulet, who was also attached to the commission, arrived at Ostend on the 27th of March. February, (February 27th—March 9th). Their coming, in one sense, was fortunate, for the lesson of Sluys had been thrown away. The Ostend garrison had been unpaid for eighteen months; their clothes were falling off their backs; 'hundreds of them had not been in a bed for two years,' and with Parma's army within a day's march, the fortifications had been allowed to fall to ruins. There were supplies in the town but for six days.³ The condition of the place was con-the Queen 'to stay Sir Francis Drake' from going to sea. It looks as if he must have been in actual communication with Philip.—Crofts to the Queen, February 15: MSS. Spain.

¹ Mission of the States to England, March, 1588: MSS. Holland.

² Elizabeth to Lord Willoughby, March 5—15: MSS. Ibid.

³ Condition of Ostend, March, 1588: MSS. Spain. The feeling with which the treaty was regarded by the passionate Catholics appears in an intercepted letter from a Lancashire priest in Flanders to Sir William Stanley.

'They say the English beggars will come shortly, accompanied with 400 attendants. Besides Derby, Cobjectured by Parma, and was soon accurately known to him. Robert Cecil and a young Spencer went to Ghent to give notice of the Commissioners' arrival. Parma received them with elaborate courtesy, and when they returned to Ostend, sent an engineer with them disguised as a servant to survey the defences.¹

Two difficulties lay on the threshold of the treaty. The first was the place of meeting. The English wished it to be Ostend itself, that it might seem to the world as if Spain was making the advances. Parma on the other hand declined to recognize even the temporary possession by England of the revolted property of his master. The other difficulty lay in the limitation of Parma's commission. Philip had given him powers to treat for peace, but not make a final agreement without reference to himself, and the reservation appeared to confirm the suspicions entertained so widely of Philip's ham, and Crofts, Amyas Paulet is also joined in commission, that hard gaoler to the holy Queen and martyress. Men muse they are so mad and shameless to sue for that they are impossible to obtain, but if they be now come so near an end of their tyranny as we hope, and themselves fear, they will be blind indeed and play more foolish pranks yet.'—MSS. Spain, February 27.

¹ The Prince was extremely polite to Robert Cecil. He inquired much about England, where as a boy he spent some time with Philip. He spoke feelingly of the war, and of the misery which it was causing, and described himself as most anxious to bring about peace. Robert Cecil mentions a curious circumstance. Though Ostend was short of provisions, the garrison was supplied liberally with game. Pheasants and partridges had flourished upon the ruins of cultivation. They flew continually within the walls. Cecil had 'a setting dog and nets,' and 'hoped to eat partridges in Lent of his own catching, asking no favours of the lord of the soil.'—Narrative of Mr Spencer, March 1; Robert Cecil to Burghley, March 10: MSS. Spain. Compare MSS. Holland, February 26..

sincerity. Messengers went backwards and forwards. Elizabeth assumed a high tone, and refused to treat at all, unless she saw her way before her clearly.¹ The Prince applied to Philip for an extension of authority. Of late, evidently, and since his vast preparations had been completed, Philip had neither expected nor desired that the treaty should take effect. He had made up his mind, with excessive difficulty, to a desperate effort, and was now unwilling that so much cost and labour should be thrown away. Parma, better aware of the difference in such matters between calculations and results, and distressed as he had cause to be by the waste of his own army, still held to his old opinion, and desired to make the negotiations a reality, at least for a time.

After mentioning the difficulties which had been raised, the Prince proceeds:

‘Your Majesty ought to know what is said here about this treaty, what is said especially by your most loyal subjects, men well-affectioned to your Majesty, and to the repose of your realm and state. It is my duty

¹ Dr Rogers, a canon lawyer, one of Sir James Crofts’ people, brought her displeasure on himself by being over humble to Parma. Crofts sent him to Ghent, where he addressed the Prince ‘as having in his hands, like Jupiter, the issues of life and death.’—Account of an interview with the Prince of Parma by Dr Rogers: MSS. Spain. ‘Her Majesty,’ wrote Burghley in reply, ‘can in no sort like that any speeches should be uttered as though she did beg a peace, being persuaded that the King of Spain stands in as great need thereof as herself, and therefore greatly dislikes Dr Rogers’s speech, delivered to the Duke at Ghent, being in truth fond and vain.’—Burghley to Lord Derby and Lord Cobham: MSS. Spain.

to tell you, that if the English are proceeding sincerely, as I believe them to be, every one agrees that it will be most to your interest to make peace. The miseries of these suffering States will be then brought to an end ; the Catholic religion will be re-established under your Majesty's authority ; you will not conquer England, but on the other hand, your fleet will be secure, and you will risk no disaster which may injure your prospects here. If your Majesty desires a conclusion of these troubles in your own lifetime, a conclusion such as God's goodness and your own Christian disposition should lead us all to hope for, you cannot better please your loyal people, you cannot more disappoint those who envy your greatness, especially the heretics, than by now consenting to a sound and honourable arrangement.

‘ Were the situation such as we once hoped it might be, had the fundamental point of secrecy especially been better observed, we might, with God's help, have looked confidently for some good success. Our anticipations however have in many ways been disappointed. The English have had time to arm, by sea and land. They have their leagues with Denmark, and the Germans, and the French Protestants, who will do all they can, be it much or little, to interfere with us. Your Majesty's intentions are blown abroad, and are notorious to every one. We must expect therefore that as well in disembarking and gaining a footing on the soil as in our advance afterward, we shall find as much work as we can do. The enemy being prepared to receive us, we have fewer men than we ought to have, and, although God may be pleased to spare us any serious disasters, which are nevertheless not impossible, the business may be possibly a protracted one; and the French and Germans may be able, not only to make a diversion in these Provinces, but to send succours into England itself. Your Majesty must see clearly that when matters are quieted here, and Walcheren is again your own,¹ you can pursue your purpose at your leisure; no one can then interfere with you; a pretext, as your Majesty knows, can never long be wanting.²

‘I submit these considerations to your Majesty that you may know the state of opinion here: not that I wish to shrink from my own duty. As far as lies in me, I am ready to execute your Majesty’s commands. I can achieve no greater honour or reputation than in losing my life in the service of God and of your Majesty. It is likely indeed that before I can receive your Majesty’s answer, the fleet will have arrived, and, with God’s help, I shall have fulfilled the commands which will arrive with it. Meanwhile I shall continue the treaty that, in the event of any unforeseen impediment, your Majesty may be able to choose the course which shall seem most to your advantage. My doubt is only whether I can do anything without more ample looked for the surrender of Flushing to himself, and not to the States, as one of the conditions of the treaty.

¹ ‘Cuando V. Mag^a aya aquietado todo esto y tenga la Isla de Walcheren á su obediencia, podrá á la mano salva cuando fuere servido proseguir su intencion.’ It is quite certain from these words that Parma

² ‘Cuanto á pretextos justos y fundados, ya sabe V. Mag^a que nunca faltaran.’

powers from your Majesty. In the absence of these, the English will enter into no particulars, and the negotiations may at any time be broken off to the disgust of these reconciled Provinces which look on peace as certain. If your Majesty will send me these powers—only that I may show them—you may be assured that I will conclude nothing without your Majesty's permission.'¹

Parma, it is remembered, had conversed with several of the subordinate members of the English commission. It is evident from his letter that he not only believed, but felt perfectly assured, that Elizabeth was prepared to abandon all demands for religious toleration in the States, and also to restore Flushing. He speaks of the re-establishment of Romanism in the Provinces and the recovery of Walcheren, as concessions which lay at Philip's option to receive. It is evident also that he looked on the conquest of England as likely to be difficult, and on this point he expressed himself more at length in a second despatch which bears the same date :

'All is well with us,' he said, 'save for the astonishing and distressing mortality among the troops. It is sad to think how many have died and how many are sick.'² Of the twenty-eight or thirty thousand men with whom I expected to embark, I have not at present seventeen thousand. I am doing what I can to obtain recruits from Germany. The death of Santa Cruz is most unfortunate. He was a good soldier, and an excellent seaman ; you have lost a valuable servant in him, and the fleet is delayed. But these accidents are in the hands of God, and we can but hope that he is doing the best for his own glory, and for the success of the enterprise. Our purpose is so notorious and the signs of it so obvious, that attempts at concealment are futile. Were I to affect some other movement, I should be throwing away men, and this treaty is the only kind of feint which is now possible.

¹ The Prince of Parma to Philip, March 10—20, 1588: MSS. Simancas.

² 'Es la mayor lastima del mundo de los muchos que han muerto y de los muchos enfermos.'

‘ As to money, I assure your Majesty I am in extremity. Four hundred thousand crowns, which I borrowed in Antwerp, between exchange and interest were but three hundred thousand when they came into my hands. They are already gone, and I am without resource. Baptista de Tassis has applied for another loan, but has returned empty-handed. Your Majesty must look to it. All will fail without money. I have a motley army of all nations, and there will be mutiny and irreparable disorder. The Lord may purpose to chastise us for our sins perhaps with some sharp misfortune. Spaniards are the sinews of the enterprise. If the Armada brings me six thousand, I shall still be under-furnished. My numbers diminish daily ; when I shall have landed, I must fight battle after battle ; I shall lose men by wounds and disease ; I must leave detachments behind me, to keep open my communications ; and in a short time the body of my army will become so weak, that not only I may be unable to advance in the face of the enemy, and time may be given to the heretics and your Majesty's other enemies to interfere, but there may fall out some notable inconvenience, with the loss of everything, and I be unable to remedy it.¹ With insufficient means it is hard to accomplish impossibilities ; I must therefore entreat your Majesty that there be neither neglect nor delay. Your Highness must provide that there be no diversion from any other quarter, and that in case of accident, the Armada brings with it an army of reserve. Affairs of this kind are costly, but you must not let expense deter you. Success in these enterprises depends, next to the favour of God, on the completeness of the preparations.'²

The modest good sense of Parma might have produced some effect on Philip, but for the fascination of the English succession, and the misleading clamour of Allen and Parsons, who measured probabilities by their passions, and assured him that half England was ready to rise in arms to welcome him. He sent the powers which Parma asked for, but only, as he admitted, to satisfy his reconciled subjects in Flanders and Brabant, who might complain if their wishes were disregarded, and he sent with the commission an intimation

¹ Parma was better informed on the real nature of the work before him than European Catholic opinion. There is in the Record Office a copy of an Italian address to Philip inviting him to the conquest of England, describing it as the richest country in the world, the most inviting to plunder, and at the same time the easiest to overrun. 'Cæsar,' the writer admits, found some difficulty. 'Cæsar required great preparation and large resources.' But the cases were not parallel, 'England having in Cæsar's time a large population.'—MSS. Spain, 1588.

² Parma to Philip, March 10—20: MSS. Simancas.

that it was only to be used to protract the treaty till the fleet arrived.

The negotiations, which had now become a pretence to deceive Elizabeth, had deceived also Sextus and the Cardinals. When Olivarez attempted to obtain an advance of money, he was met by a confessed suspicion that the Most Catholic King was attempting to cheat his Holiness. The imputation on his good faith in such a quarter, the reproach which he was assured would fall on him if, after so much had been done and talked of, he left the nest of heresy undisturbed, combined to push Philip forward, and closed his ears to the suggestion of possible failure.¹ Perhaps too he was secretly encouraged by accounts of the Queen's disposition, which were furnished him by the traitors about the Court. While Allen, and Parsons, and Englefield were arranging the disposition of the public offices, or discussing a redistribution of property with Olivarez, and the prudence or imprudence of a general measure of confiscation,² Elizabeth was at her old courses. 'I see no disposition in her Majesty,' wrote Walsingham,

¹ Olivarez to Philip, February 22, March 2, March 18, March 21, April 4: MSS. Simancas.

² 'Quien serian las personas nobles y calificados, á quien se podría honrar de mayores titulos y con los estados de los hereges, en lo cual ha conferido Alano conmigo, y parece que no se puede resolver esto sino sobra la obra, pues de otra manera se quitaría la esperança de los que se quisiesen convertir, y los que hasta agora merecen podrian desmerecer ó discubrirse algun demerito de aqui allá; y tambien otros mas benemeritos de que hasta agora no se tiene noticia; pero bien juzga el Cardinal que sea conveniente luego que este en buen estado la conquista ir premiando á algunos y dandolos titulos y proveer los obispados,' &c.—Olivarez al Rey, 22 Hebrero, 1588: MSS. Ibid.

when the shadow of the Armada was already projecting over England, 'I see no disposition in her Majesty to take a thorough course—a manner of proceeding we hold in all our actions, both at home and abroad, which breedeth both danger and dishonour.'¹

The expectation of a catastrophe impaired the value of landed property. When the flower of the Roman youth had fallen at Cannæ, the confidence of the people was so little shaken that the ground on which Hannibal's army was encamped was sold in the forum at its usual price. Sir William Drury, writing to Burghley in the spring of 1588, about the April. payment of a debt to the Queen, said, that his wife would sell her jewels to save him from having to part at a loss with his estate, 'for no man would give anything as land was worth, because they feared a hard world.'²

The knowledge of Philip's real intentions dispenses with the necessity of pursuing in detail the further history of the treaty, which answered no purpose save to give Elizabeth an excuse for inactivity, and to madden the unfortunate Provinces. A few features of it only require to be noticed. Six weeks were consumed before a place could be selected for the Commissioners to meet, the English standing out, as a point of honour, that Philip's representatives should come first to Ostend, if it were but for an hour. Parma at last consented to a compromise. Dr Rogers assured him that if he would yield, the Queen would not only surrender the cautionary towns to him, but if Holland and Zealand continued obstinate, would assist Spain in reconquering them.¹ Thereupon he sent Ricardot, President of the council of Flanders, semi-officially to Ostend, and allowed the first conference to be held under tents, a cannon-shot outside the defences.

¹ Walsingham to Sir William Russell, April 8—18: MSS. Hol-land.

² Drury to Burghley, March 20: MSS. Ibid.

Here, on the 11th—21st of April, Ricardot, de la Mote, and others went through, on behalf of Spain, the formal preliminaries of a treaty; Parma himself meanwhile, disguised as a rabbit-catcher, wandering among the sandhills, and taking a survey of the rents in the fortifications.² Little was done, for the fuller powers for which Parma had applied, though on the way, were not yet arrived. The English asked for an armistice, including England as well as the Provinces, and covering the fleet in the Tagus. It was refused, except for Walcheren and Ostend itself. Progress was then reported to London, and the next session was ordered to be held at Bruges.

And now the rotten foundation of the whole proceeding became at once apparent. Derby, Cobham,

¹ 'Que por esta poca honra que se hará la Reyna, ella no solo restituyrá á V. Maga todo lo que tiene destos estados, mas ayudará á cobrar la parte que quedare obstinada.'—El Duque de Parma al Rey, 6 de Avril: MSS. Simancas.

² 'Me meti yo disfracado, y mientras duró la platica y comida que tambien se le habia mandado aprestar allí reconocer, con achaque de andar á caça de conejos por las Dunas, la fortificacion con lo que deseabade la plaça, confirmandome con un Ingeniero que en figura de criado habia enviado con el Secretario Garnier las veces que allí fué.'—Parma al Rey, 13 de Mayo: MSS. Ibid.

Sir Amyas Paulet, and Dr Dale had brought vague instructions, such as Elizabeth's council had been induced to sanction. Sir James Crofts, who professed to possess a knowledge of the Queen's real intentions which was not extended to the other Commissioners, took upon himself in the pause which followed to go alone to Ghent, and speak privately with Parma. He did not impress the Prince with his wisdom, but he laid proposals before him which he said that the Queen would confirm if he would send over a secretary who could deal with her alone; and these proposals, as reported by the Prince to Philip, agree precisely with a note of them in the English Records.

According to the offer of Crofts, the old treaties between England and the House of Burgundy were to be renewed, and a common course was to be agreed upon on the means by which Holland and Zealand were to be recovered to the obedience of the King of Spain. The King was 'to allow such toleration in matters of religion in the United Provinces as he might do with conscience and honour,' and was not 'to introduce the Spanish Inquisition.' The Spanish and Italian troops were to be withdrawn, and the old administration restored. If Philip would consent to these conditions, the Controller undertook, in his mistress's name, that she would restore to him the cautionary towns and all other towns and fortresses in the occupation of English troops.¹

¹ 'Articles which Sir James Crofts | April 30—May 10: MSS. Spain.
hath thought good to propound,' | Puntos propuestos par James Crofts.

May.

These, it will be observed, were the stipulations which had appeared from time to time throughout the negotiation as representing Elizabeth's personal views, and were implied from the beginning in the very nature of it. The last and most dishonourable article for the surrender of the towns, the Prince described as the foundation of the treaty, and was the first which he required to be put in execution as an evidence of sincere meaning. He, on his part, was willing to consent to the withdrawal of the troops; not however till Holland and Zealand had completely submitted; and if the terms were really offered with the Queen's sanction, and if they had been accepted by Parma, she would have been obliged in self-defence to unite with Philip in extinguishing the remains of the revolt, or she would have lost the object for which she was meditating such detestable treachery. No wonder Sir William Russell should write from Flushing 'that this unhappy peace had been the cause of all the dissensions and of all the jealousies between the States and England.'¹ No wonder Lord Howard 'prayed God there might not be cause to curse a long grey beard with a white head witless, that would 'make all the world think England heartless.'² No wonder Burghley feared that the States, made desperate by such false dealing, would, all or part, treat secretly with Parma

Enclosed in a letter from Parma to Philip, of the 13th of May: MSS. Simancas.

¹ Sir Wm. Russell to Walsingham, March 26—April 5: MSS.

Holland.

² Lord Howard to Walsingham, January 27—February 6: MSS. Domestic.

for their own peace, and that the Queen, outmatched with her own weapons, would be forced to continue the war alone or submit upon 'intolerable conditions.'¹

Every intelligent person in England or out of it who wished well to the Queen regarded the treaty as madness. Yet she allowed herself to be persuaded by a deliberate traitor, who was receiving pay from Spain, that soldiers like Lord Howard of Effingham desired war because their trade was fighting; politicians like Walsingham and Burghley, from Protestant bigotry; and the United Provinces, that they might prey on her exchequer.² Sir James Crofts had for two years been in intimate communication with her on the subject of the peace. It is not conceivable that he was ignorant of her wishes. Champagny said that his visit to Parma had worked a miracle, and that peace was certain.³ He was himself confident that what he had done would be approved, and he wrote to Burghley in the highest satisfaction.⁴

The King having determined that the treaty should

¹ Burghley to Walsingham, February 6—16: MSS. Domestic.

² 'Those that recommend war recommend it for sundry respects: some for war's sake, as I should do perhaps if I were young and a soldier; others for religion; others for spoil and robbery, whereof your Majesty feeleth too much. They are all inclined to their peculiar interests, caring nothing for the Prince's treasure, the impoverishing the subject, and the overthrow of trade. It is my duty to remind your Majesty that if you do not stand fast in what is best for the whole estate and commonwealth, many practices will be used to persuade yourself against yourself.'—Mr Controller to the Queen, February 22—March 4: MSS. Domestic.

³ Champagny to Burghley, May 3—13: MSS. Spain.

⁴ Crofts to Burghley, May 2—12: MSS. Ibid.

end in nothing, these ignominious concessions would have been to no purpose had the Queen formally endorsed them. But it was one thing to desire privately a convenient conclusion, to talk about it, and say that she would have it so; it was another to make up her mind practically to what no sophistry could excuse; or if she could bring herself to it, to carry the council along with her. The Controller was severely rebuked for having presumed to go beyond his orders. He was ordered home to England to explain 'how he had presumed to wade so far without directions;' ¹ and a note in Lord Burghley's hand implies that when the question rose again, the Prince was to be told that even if peace was made the Queen would not surrender the cautionary towns till she had been repaid the money for which they were held as securities; if a peace was not made in which the Provinces were comprehended, she would not deliver them at all.² A sound and honourable resolution, yet a resolution which stultified the entire negotiation in which she had allowed herself to be entangled. She had quarrelled with the States, she had allowed her army to be wasted, and every advantage which she could have derived from her alliance with the States to be frittered away, in pursuit of a treaty of which the surrender of the towns was the first and most obvious condition—so obvious that in every word which Parma or Philip had said in weighing the comparative advantages of war or peace, it was assumed as a matter of course. The impossibility of consenting to it stared her in the face when the moment for action came. It is probable that even if left to herself she would under no circumstances have actually done it: but to have played with the thought; to have twisted the public policy of the country out of its natural course to secure an object which every intelligent man in Europe knew that she could attain only by dishonour, would alone suffice to disqualify Elizabeth from being cited as an example of the capacity of female sovereigns.

¹ The Queen to the Commissioners at Ostend, May 8 and May 24 : MSS. Spain.

² Notes in Burghley's hand, May, 1588 : MSS. Ibid.

The mischievous effects of the treaty were not limited to the States, for as long as it was in progress Elizabeth would neither stand vigorously to the defence of England nor provide herself with alliances elsewhere. Her policy everywhere was partial, feeble, and fretful. Henry of Navarre in Burghley's opinion was 'the hinge of her security.'¹ When the League first took arms, she had sent him money with the consent and almost at the request of the King. An English subsidy had equipped the army for the field which had fought and won at Coutras, but with the prospect of peace she had drawn her purse-strings, and would supply no more.² Philip, though he knew not on what side to look for funds, found means notwithstanding to fill the chest of the Duke of Guise. He understood

¹ 'Cardo totius nostræ felicitatis.'

² 'Thus,' wrote Burghley, 'you see how her Majesty can find means at small holes to stop her own light, and I must tell her to-day with what dangers she seeketh to spare.'—Burghley to Walsingham, September 18, 1587: MSS, Domestic.

that if he was to invade England he must keep the French Court occupied, and at the beginning of 1588, after the surrender of the Germans on the Loire, the Duke was still at the head of his army, and dictating terms to the King. The Huguenots, on the other hand, who had conquered at Coutras were dispersed for want of means to hold them together, and although the King had again let Elizabeth know, through Stafford, with what delight he would hear that she was enabling Navarre to hold up his head, she chose to think that expense that way was no longer necessary, and had fastened her hopes upon Andrea de Looe and her diplomacy. She at any rate was in no want of money. The half-million which she had reserved in her treasury was still apparently untrenched upon. Burghley, who had the charge of her finances, would not so often have lamented her unseasonable parsimony if want of means had been the cause. A year later, when the aspect of the world had changed, she was able without effort to throw an army into Portugal. Her exchequer is a mystery. She had been honourably sparing in applying to Parliament for subsidies. She had been lenient in extorting the legal fines from recusant Catholics, and unwilling to use her powers of confiscation over the estates of the refugees, but by hard housewifery, by rigid economy, by leaving her own soldiers to starve, and by allowing her willing subjects to serve their country at their own expense, she had contracted her outlay far within her revenues. Her narrow habits had become a second nature to her. She knew well that there was a time to spare. She only knew that there was a time to spend when she had entangled herself with some miserable creature like Alençon.

Navarre only could save France from the Duke of Guise, and the Duke of Guise once master of France, her own end was certain. The Prince of Condé was dead. Navarre was sustaining by himself the whole weight of the conflict; and in the spring, when some great crisis was visibly coming, he sent the most trusted of his ministers, M. de l'Hôpital, to London to try the effect of personal persuasion. 'England,' de l'Hôpital said, 'was the head of Protestant Christendom. The King of Navarre was its right arm.'¹ The German Princes, to whom he was going afterwards, made Elizabeth's support a condition of further efforts on their part. He explained to her that his master could not possibly bear on his own shoulders the weight which was about to be thrown upon them. If she did not help him he must yield.

As usual, she could not resolve. She would not consent, she would not refuse. She lingered over her answer when the minutes were as drops of the life blood running from the veins of the Protestant cause. She said that Navarre had no right to give way after the sums with which she had already provided him. She held out hopes that at some future time she might again be liberal; but actual help, or distinct promise of it, he could not wring from her.

'Charity,' wrote M. de l'Hôpital to Burghley, 'your

¹ M. de l'Hôpital to Burghley, April 1: MSS. France.

proverb says begins at home ; or, as we say, 'the flesh is closer than the shift.'¹ Let the Queen say plainly that she cannot help us because her own expenses are too heavy, and we shall be satisfied. We must then do what we can. But to entertain us with riddles, to refuse to give us the means of defending ourselves, and to forbid us to provide for ourselves in some other way,—this my master will think a little hard.² One of two things. Let her Majesty help us, or not. If no, then, in the name of common truth and kindness, let her say so plainly, while we can make terms, and are not compelled to surrender at discretion.'³

If she could spare no money, de l'Hôpital asked her to send some one with him to Germany, to recommend his cause in her name. She declared, at first, she would give him neither help nor countenance ; and when he took his leave he had scarcely received a better answer. She said that some one should possibly follow him into Germany, and explain her wishes.

The alternative condition at which de l'Hôpital hinted was obviously the King of Navarre's conversion, which she could not recommend, yet to which she was not unwilling that he should be forced. Dogmatic theology sat as lightly on Navarre as on Elizabeth. To him, as to her, the varieties of Christian opinion were of as little moment as the fashions of dress. The one article of the à nostre repos par quelque autre voye, je ne sçay, Monsieur, si mon maistre trouvera cela un peu dure.'

¹ 'La chair est plus proche que la chemise.'

² 'Mais de l'entretenir avec les ambages, et avec les esperances fort éloignées nous oster celui de penser

³ De l'Hôpital to Burghley, April 1 : MSS. France.

Roman faith which they both abhorred was intolerance and persecution, and mass or chapel made little difference. He was free from the rivalry of Condé, and had no longer to dread that another Bourbon, if he conformed, might steal from him the allegiance of the Huguenots; he had but to yield to the pressure, to which at last he in fact gave way, to have the King and three-quarters of France at his back, and to be able to defy for ever the worst malice of the League.¹

To desire this consummation was as natural as to desire a treaty with Spain, in which the religious liberties of the Netherlands were to be sacrificed. Elizabeth perhaps trusted too—and her trust in this instance was curiously well-founded—to the constant friendship which she had found in Henry of Valois: weak, cowardly, and treacherous as he was, yielding always to the stream, as he had yielded in the terrible days of St Bartholomew, the King of France was yet true, as a whole, to the traditional policy of his house. Though he was too feeble to encounter the League in the field, his fear and hatred of the Guises made him its deadliest opponent; and the most dissolute, superstitious prince in all Europe had chosen the latitudinarian Elizabeth as the peculiar object of his regard.

Finding the King of Navarre unable to take the field, he too felt that a crisis of some kind was coming. Philip had sent Guise three hundred thousand crowns, with an intimation that the Armada was about to sail, and that the neutrality if not the active assistance of France must be secured at all hazards. The cloud which had been raised by the succession question was still undisputed; but Guise was, for the present, the only Frenchman on whom Philip could depend, and so far, at least, as the establishment of the League and the overthrow of Elizabeth, their roads lay in the same direction.

¹ Stafford to Elizabeth, April 5—15: MSS. France.

To prevent the Spaniards from having the use of the harbours in the Channel, the King, while he had time, secured Boulogne and Calais. He reinforced the garrisons, put in governors on whose constancy he could rely, and charged them to hold both places against all comers. The Duke of Aumale, Guise's brother, went down to the coast, and summoned Boulogne to surrender. He was too late however and was obliged to lay siege to it in form, with the prospect of being detained there for the summer. Guise himself prepared to secure if possible the person of Henry. He sent a message through Believre demanding the control of the government, and followed it up by advancing on Paris. The city, which was always devoted to him, had organized itself into military districts, and had already placed itself under his command. He appeared at the gates on the 9th of May (April 29-May 9) and was received with the wildest enthusiasm, women showering flowers upon him as he rode through the streets, men clinging to his stirrup on their knees, and adoring him as a saint. Two days of convulsion followed, and Guise at the end of them, in all points but one was sovereign of France. In Paris there was the universal shout, 'Vive Guise; vive le libérateur de France;' but the King himself had slipped through his hands. On the evening of the day of the barricades, when all was lost, Henry had sprung on his horse without boot or spur, galloped off over the bridge of St Cloud, and was away to Chartres. Had Guise taken him, a French fleet would, in all likelihood, have joined Medina Sidonia in the English Channel; to share the honours of the invasion, and to dispute afterwards Philip's claim to the throne. But he was gone out of reach, and in a few days was surrounded by a powerful body of loyal noblemen and gentlemen. Guise, who aspired himself to be King of France, did not dare to exasperate the moderate Catholics by following him in arms, and two precious months were lost in correspondence and diplomacy. The Duke had his way at last, or seemed to have it.

July.

A peace was signed on the 15th of July, by which Guise was made Lieutenant-Governor of the realm, the league with England declared broken, and Boulogne ordered to be surrendered to d'Aumale. But it came too late for the immediate purpose. The Armada was already at the mouth of the Channel, and its fate about to be determined for good or evil before the League could share its glory or its shame. The King, who to appearance had yielded everything, was animated only with a more deadly determination to revenge his disgrace. He told Stafford that nothing still should be attempted against England without notice, and that however helpless he might seem, 'before long there would be a great change : ' his fair countenance towards Guise concealed ' a marvellous design tending to a most great enterprise,' and if ' the Spanish fleet could only be defeated all good things would follow.'¹

The ' great enterprise ' was the famous tragedy of Blois, which followed in the ensuing winter. For the present, France remained a passive spectator of events on which the fate of Europe depended. Philip's ambition had alienated Scotland ; Elizabeth had paralyzed the United Provinces : and thus, from a combination of causes, England and Spain were left face to face to fight out their great duel single-handed.

¹ Stafford to Walsingham. July 31 and August 1 : MSS. France.

CHAPTER LXXI.

THE ARMADA.

THE Jesuits had carried the day, and Spain had made up its mind at last to enforce the Bull of Pope Pius. A combination of curious circumstances, assisted by four and twenty miles of water, had protected England hitherto from sharing the miseries of the rest of Europe; but the exemption in itself, provoking to the natural envy of the less fortunate, could not last for ever. Not a year had passed without a warning of an intended invasion, and the notice to prepare had not been thrown away.

Thirty years of peace were supposed abroad to have emasculated the once warlike English nation, and to have so enamoured the people of quiet, that they had no longer energy to defend their own firesides. If their vigour was unimpaired it was held certainly that they must want skill and experience. Their peculiar weapon the long bow, though it had not yet become a toy for the playground, could no longer decide a battle in the face of muskets and cannon; and ardent Catholic Europe expected confidently that in collision with the trained regiments of Spain or France, the English militia would break in pieces at the first encounter. On the sea they were acknowledged to be still dangerous. The English corsair was a name of terror wherever there were Catholic traders to be pillaged. English merchantmen in the Mediterranean defied, engaged, and defeated the royal galleys of Spain, though outmatched to twice their strength.¹ The general impression however was that if the naval defences could be pierced, and a well-found army be thrown on shore in any part of the kingdom, the power of England would collapse in ruins. London itself was undefended; and there was not a fortress in the whole island which would delay an army for an hour.

It has been seen that the Prince of Parma knew better what the country was made of. Although the hundred beef-eaters at Court constituted the only permanently existing force in the service of the Government, yet English and Spanish soldiers had encountered in many a hard fight on the Antwerp dykes or in the open field, and man to man the Spaniards could claim no superiority. He had experienced at Sluys that their engineering skill was not contemptible. He knew perhaps, to use the language of a writer, who after his own people respected the Spaniards above all other nations in the world, that 'the English had always been, and at that present were, a free people, such as in few or no other realms were to be found the like, by which freedom was maintained a valiant courage in that people.' Flanders, France, and Ireland had been training schools where many thousands of Englishmen of all ranks had learnt the art as well as the practice of war, while for the last eight years the militia had been carefully trained in the use of the modern weapons. Volunteer military schools had been established all over the country, gentlemen who had served abroad drilling the sons of the knights and squires. Three hundred London merchants who had seen service took charge of the City corps,² and the example it is likely was imitated in the other towns; while along the coast the privateering trade had made lessons in fighting a part of the education of every high-spirited lad.

¹ Thus in 1586 five London vessels returning from Constantinople engaged Don Pedro da Leyva with eleven armed galleys between Sicily and Malta. The action lasted five hours; one of the galleys was sunk, and the Spanish admiral was obliged to sheer off.—HAKLUYT, vol. ii. p. 422.

In this way for eight years all England had been in preparation for the day of trial. It had not been without danger, for the general military organization had been made a shield behind which the Catholic families had been invited to make ready for rebellion. But the recusants were known and marked; though every able-bodied man was put in training, the custody of the arms was reserved for those who could be trusted; while the Protestants had the essential advantage that only they could furnish experienced soldiers. The Catholic English who made war their profession were serving abroad in the armies of Parma or Guise.

¹ Certain things to be considered | MSS. Domestic, December, 1585.
for the special wealth of England; | ² STOWE.

Thus it was, that when the long-talked-of peril was at the doors, and the people were called on to take their harness to resist invasion, a hundred thousand men, well officered and appointed, were ready at a day's notice to fall into their companies, and move wherever they were wanted. In the uncertainty where the Spaniards would land they were left at their homes, but with their line of action accurately laid down. The musters of the midland counties, thirty thousand strong, were to form a separate army for the defence of the Queen's person, and were directed to assemble on the first note of alarm between Windsor and Harrow. The rest were to gather to the point of danger. The coast companies had orders to fall back, wherever the enemy landed, removing the corn and cattle, and avoiding a battle till the force of the neighbouring counties joined them. Should the landing be, as was expected, in Suffolk, Kent, or Sussex, it was calculated that between thirty and forty thousand men could be thrown in their way before they could reach London, while twenty thousand would still remain to encounter Guise, should he attempt a diversion in Hampshire or Dorsetshire.¹

How far forces thus constituted could have held their ground against the veteran soldiers whom they would have encountered, is a question on which the Prince of Parma's modest opinion is entitled to respect. In saying that he would have to fight battle after battle, it is to be presumed that he expected to win the first and perhaps the second. He expected also that his victories, like those of Pyrrhus, would be dearly purchased, and was very far from confident of the ultimate result. It would turn, in human probability, on the action of the Catholics, about which there was still an uneasy uncertainty. Philip's claims on the succession had alienated those who were Catholics rather by descent than fanaticism; but there was still a party of unknown strength under the influence of the Jesuits, of which the Earl of Arundel was the political leader, who had forgotten their country in their creed.

¹ 'Notes of places likely to be assailed.' 'Notes of the forces to repair out of each county,' &c. : MSS. | Domestic, 1588. Compare the Muster lists, printed in MURDIN, pp 594-615.

Father Darbyshire, an English Jesuit at Paris, told an agent of Walsingham's, 'wishing to gain him to the cause,' that 'there was a band of men in London, with an officer sworn to the King of Spain, who had served under Parma,' who, when the Armada was in the Channel, and 'all the forces were drawn to the coast to resist invasion,' intended to rise, set fire to the city, force the Tower, and release Lord Arundel. The Catholic standard was then to be raised, and the faithful everywhere would take arms and join the Spaniards.¹ Even if there was no general rebellion, there was a fear that advantage might be taken of the absence of the loyal part of the population from their homes to make local disturbances, which would recall them from the army, or render them unwilling to join their standards, for fear of what might happen in their absence; and orders had been given by the council to use the gallows freely on the slightest sign of a disposition to create trouble.¹

¹ MS. endorsed 'Mr Walton and Mr Alis, April, 1588.'—MSS. Domestic.

It was not by land however, either that the Spaniards most feared the English, or that English statesmen and officers most relied on the powers of the country to defend itself, if it was only allowed fair play. An Englishman writing from Lisbon in the heat of the preparations for the Armada, reported, 'that he had talked to many of the people there. They confessed they feared England on the water, but not on the land. The English, they said, were better warriors than they on the seas. Their mariners and gunners were better, and they feared their fireworks.'² Their experience of Drake and Hawkins and their companions had made them modestly conscious of their own inferiority where numbers were in any way equal.

But a fleet was not like the militia, a thing which the country could extemporize out of its own resources. The sea towns and private adventurers could fit out merchantmen to fight effectively against an enemy of their own size and strength; but the largest ship in ¹ 'It is to be considered that the King of Spain is not altogether hopeless of some party of Papists and malcontents. If the regiments be not in readiness, it will be too late to assemble them for resistance of any foreign enemy, and to withstand them at home both in one day; for every man will stand in fear of the firing of his own house and the destruction of his family. Therefore if any stir should happen in this case, some severe proceeding would be speedily used by martial law.'—Places likely to be assailed: MSS. Domestic, April, 1588.

² Report from Lisbon. James Tyehall, April, 1588: MSS. Ibid.

England at this time belonging to a private owner did not exceed four hundred tons, and of vessels of that size there were not more than two or three sailing from any port in the country. The armed cruisers which had won so distinguished a name in both hemispheres, were of the dimensions of the present schooner yachts in the Cowes squadron. Philip, as a paternal governor, had encouraged shipbuilding in Spain by grants from the Crown. For every vessel which was constructed above three hundred tons burden he allowed four ducats a ton ; for every vessel above five hundred he allowed six ducats a ton : half of his grant being a bonus from the Crown, half a loan to be repaid at leisure. Elizabeth had been advised to imitate the example.¹ But she had preferred to leave her subjects to their own enterprise, nor had she cared herself to lead the way of improvement. When her naval resources were all counted, including vessels which had been built by her father and sister, the entire English navy contained but thirteen ships above four hundred tons, and in the whole fleet, including fifteen small cutters and pinnaces, there were only thirty-eight vessels of all sorts and sizes carrying the Queen's flag. She had extended to the dockyards the same hard thrift with which she had pared down her expenses everywhere. One precaution only she had taken on the other side, characteristic also of herself. She had placed at the head of her naval administration the fittest person in her dominions to manage it—Sir John

¹ Certain things to be considered for the special wealth of England : MSS. Domestic, 1585.

Hawkins—who, sea robber, corsair, slave hunter, as he was, yet with scrupulous fidelity threw his mind and his fortune into his charge. When the moment of trial came, Hawkins sent her ships to sea in such condition, hull, rigging, spars, and running rope, that they had no match in the world either for speed, safety, or endurance. In the small Swallow, which had been built by King Henry, Lord Howard offered to sail to Rio Janeiro in the wildest storm that could blow.

A few words in detail may be spared to the constitution of the fleet which was about to accomplish so splendid a service. In ordinary times, one or two second class vessels alone were kept in commission, which discharged the duties very imperfectly of Channel police. The navy did not exist as a profession. It was the Queen's policy to appear as little as possible in any work that had to be done, and to leave it to privateers. When officers were wanted, they were chosen from those who, like Sir Francis Drake, had distinguished themselves as adventurers. The crews were engaged by the week, by the month, or for some special service. A commission was appointed in 1583 consisting of Burghley, Walsingham, Howard, Drake, and Frobisher, to examine into the condition of ships and stores, and so to organize the yards at Portsmouth and Chatham, that a squadron could be held ready for sea if suddenly called for. The whole navy was then thoroughly overhauled and repaired. The charges for its future maintenance were divided into ordinary and extraordinary. The first covered repairs of all kinds, wages of shipwrights, carpenters, clerks, watchmen, and cost of timbers, ropes, anchors, mooring cables, and other necessary dockyard expenses. For all this the Queen allowed four thousand pounds a year. She thought the sum excessive, but it could not be brought lower. The second, or extraordinary charges, covered special expeditions, for which in every instance a particular estimate was made by the council, with the lighter cordage, canvas, provisions, and other perishable stores of which the consumption varied with the nature and extent of the service. It included also the building of wharves, sheds, and storehouses, and also of new ships, of which it was then decided that one at least must every year be added to the fleet. Construction of this kind was done by contract. The ships were expected to last in good condition thirty years at least. The Bonaventura, a vessel of six hundred tons, was built in 1560. She was with Drake in his expedition to the West Indies in 1586. She carried his flag at Cadiz in 1587. She had been engaged in every service of consequence which had been undertaken since the Queen's accession: She was caught in a gale in the beginning of 1588, and ran on a sandbank at the mouth of the Scheldt, when, to use Lord Howard's words, 'it was thought impossible, unless she had been made of iron, that she should not have been severely injured if not lost.' She was got off 'without a spoonful of water in her well;' and after a hard life of twenty-eight years, the Admiral said 'there was not in the world a stronger ship.'¹

¹ Lord Howard to Burghley, March 9—19, 1588: MSS. Domestic.

The cost at which vessels of this kind were constructed indicates that although contractors did their work well, they were contented with moderate profits. The Rainbow, a ship of five hundred tons, was set afloat fit at all points for sea for two thousand one hundred pounds; the Vanguard, also of five hundred tons, for two thousand six hundred pounds¹—or, allowing for the difference in the value of money, about thirteen thousand and sixteen thousand pounds respectively.

The wages of an able seaman under Henry VIII. had been sixpence a day, or calculated in meat, drink, and clothing, according to the prices of the beginning of the sixteenth century, equal to six shillings of our money. Out of this he found his own living. As the value of money began to fall with the introduction of bullion from America, the Government altered the mode of payment, themselves supplying the ships' rations. In 1585 the sixpence tried by the same standard was worth but three shillings, and the sailor received in money six and eight pence a month, while of food 'of good and seasonable victuals' his allowance for every flesh day, i.e. for every Sunday, Monday, Tuesday, and Thursday, was a pound of biscuit or a pound and a half of bread, a gallon of beer, and two pounds of meat—salt beef, fresh beef or mutton, as the case might be. On the three other days he had the same quantity of beer and biscuit with half a ling or a cod, and half a pound of butter or a pound of cheese. The diet was occasionally varied by substituting bacon for beef and mutton, reducing the salt fish and increasing the butter and cheese; in all cases however the beer and bread remaining constant.¹ These allowances were never altered whatever might be the variation of price; the cost of each man's three daily meals ranging from fourpence to sevenpence, at which it had permanently settled by 1588. The pay had been raised three years before at the intercession of Sir John Hawkins from six and eight pence a month to ten shillings. The increase however cost nothing to the Crown, a smaller crew better paid being found to do more effective service. Hawkins said he had observed that with higher wages men became more healthy and self-respecting, 'such as could make shift for themselves and keep themselves clean, without vermin.'²

¹ Names of her Majesty's ships sent to sea, December 27, 1587—January 6, 1588: MSS. Domestic.

At the recommendation of the Committee of 1583, five new ships had been added to the navy, larger than any which were already afloat; the Ark and the Victory of eight hundred tons, the Bear and the soup.—Orders signed by Don Pedro de Valdez, 1575: MSS. Spain, Rolls House. The rations of English soldiers in the field were on a yet more liberal scale. Sir Henry Sidney, when Lord Deputy, fixed the daily allowance for each English soldier in Ireland at two pounds and a half of beef and a pound and half of bread.—Notes on the victualling of the army: MSS. Ireland, June, 1575.

¹ Proportion of victual for 6000 men for six weeks, 1581; Notes of a seaman's diet, February, 1582; The Purveyor of the Navy to the Lord Admiral, July 23—August 2, 1586: MSS. Domestic. The Spaniards, still more aware of the importance of change of diet at sea, varied the rations more frequently. A pound and a half of bread and a pint of Andalusian wine was allowed daily. Meat, fish, and cheese alternated in rather smaller quantities than in England, but with the addition of peas, beans, and garlic, made into

² Naval notes, March, 1585-6: MSS. Domestic.

Elizabeth Jonas of nine hundred, and the Triumph of a thousand. The four last named had not been commissioned before 1588. They had been constructed upon a new principle, introduced by Hawkins. The high sterns and forecastles were lowered, the keels lengthened, and the lines made finer and sharper. Old seamen shook their heads at the innovation, and foretold the usual disasters. They would be too crank, it was said, to carry sail. They were fit only for smooth water, and would founder in the heavy seas of the Atlantic.¹ The Queen having paid dear for them, shrunk from experiments which might show her to have countenanced an expensive folly, and had preferred so far to keep them safe at their moorings in the Medway.

This was the condition of the royal navy of England when called on to face the most powerful fleet which had existed from the beginning of time. The privateers promised to be useful as auxiliaries. The great merchants in every port armed the best of their ships. London provided thirty; Southampton, Poole, Dartmouth, Plymouth, Barnstaple, and Bristol contributed as they were able; and English brigs and barques of two hundred tons, which never went to sea without being prepared to encounter pirates, were no contemptible allies. Lord Howard of Effingham had also two ships of his own. Hawkins had four or five. Drake had a whole squadron, for the western privateers rallied of themselves to the flag of their chosen hero. But it was on the Queen's ships that the brunt of the battle would have to fall, and above the largest of them the vast galleons and galleasses towered up like Flemish dray-horses by the side of the light Arabian coursers.

¹ Hawkins to Burghley, July 17-27: MSS. Domestic.

The Bonaventura, the Golden Lion, the Rainbow, and the Dreadnought had been with Drake at Cadiz, and on Drake's return, contrary to the advice of Burghley, had been paid off and dismantled. The dockyards had suffered like every other department of the public service from the Queen's determination to make peace. The repairing work had fallen far into arrears ; and in September, 1587, when Philip sent orders to Santa Cruz to sail, and bade Parma prepare for his immediate arrival, there was not a vessel in the Channel carrying the Queen's flag larger than a pinnace. The ships were lying half-rigged at Chatham, with neither crews nor officers, and requiring all of them to be examined and refitted, before they could be sent to sea for a winter's cruise. Several weeks at least would be consumed before men in sufficient numbers could be collected and arms and stores taken on board. The Queen, in Leicester's words, 'was treating for peace disarmed;' and had Santa Cruz been able to use the opportunity, he would have found his way to Margate Roads without receiving or firing a shot. Burghley, who had believed that, for this year at least, the danger had passed over, was roused at the beginning of October from his dangerous security. The galleon which Drake had brought home with him in August was sold with her cargo, and the money turned to instant account.¹ An embargo was laid on the merchant-ships in the various ports, and their crews were impressed for the Queen's service. Hawkins was directed to put the whole navy as rapidly as possible in condition for sea; and, on the 21st of December, instructions were sent to Howard of Effingham 'to take the ships into the Channel to defend the realm against the Spaniards.'

Just as in Spain the intended storming of the stronghold of heresy had stirred the crusading spirit, and the Castilian nobles had sent the best of their sons to the Armada, so when the call was sounded at last for the defence of England, it rung like a trumpet-note through manor-house and castle. The chief of the House of Howard was in the Tower, praying for the success of the servants of the Pope; but the Admiral, as if to wipe the stain from the scutcheon, brought his son-in-law, Lord Sheffield, and one at least of the Duke of Norfolk's sons, to serve at his side. Lord Henry Seymour came too, and all the distinguished seamen, Hawkins, Frobisher, Palmer, Townsend, and numbers more, whose names were only less illustrious. Drake was already at Plymouth, with his own squadron of privateers, and the Revenge, a Queen's ship which had been sent down to him. The common sailors who had volunteered 'were as able a company as were ever seen'—ill found in apparel, and desiring, not unreasonably, a month's wages in advance to provide themselves, but otherwise the pride and flower of English mariners.¹

¹ 'The goods taken by Sir Francis Drake in the Philip of Spain to be sorted and sold for ready money, so as her Majesty may employ her portion for the arming of the navy, and the merchants and other adventurers employ theirs for the arming of their ships.'—Notes in Burghley's hand, October 3: MSS. Domestic.

Lord Howard's first commission, drawn by Drake's advice, left him free to act at his discretion, 'to invade the Spanish dominions,' if it should be thought good, or to go wherever he saw a chance to strike a blow.² The fleet was on fire with enthusiasm. Seamen and officers, honest Englishmen everywhere, had for years been longing to have done with privateering, false colours, lies, and pretences, and 'to have a good severe open war with Spain, as the only road to an honourable settlement.' Their wishes seemed likely to be gratified at last. Mid-winter as it was, the general desire was to follow up Drake's work at Cadiz, lie on the coast of Spain, and either dash into the Tagus and burn the fleet as it lay at anchor there, or else enrich England and ruin Philip by seizing the Indian treasures at the mouth of his own harbours.³

But the vessel of the State was still far from open waters. To the disgust of every one it was announced, immediately after the issue of the commission, that the services of the fleet would be required only for six weeks, before the end of which

¹ Lord Howard to Burghley, December 22, 1587: MSS. Domestic.

² Commission to Lord Howard of Effingham, December 21—31: MSS.

Ibid.

³ Notes of her Majesty's ships sent to sea, December 23—January 2: MSS. Ibid.

the Queen confidently hoped that peace would be established. The limitation itself made a distant enterprise impossible ; but she could not wait till even this short period had elapsed. She had allowed herself to be persuaded by Sir James Crofts that soldiers and sailors wished for war because it was their trade, and that Howard and Drake, if left at sea, would do some rash violent action which would make negotiations more difficult. A random story came up from Spain that the Armada was dissolving, and on the credit of it she directed the dismissal of half the crews which had been collected and engaged at so much expense. She ordered two-thirds of the fleet to stay in the Thames with reduced complements. She sent Drake to lie at Portsmouth with three small vessels, and Lord Henry Seymour to cruise shorthanded with the rest in the Channel, but with strict injunctions not to pass beyond it.¹

Her orders were obeyed. The men were dispersed, the fleet was made practically useless, and the sea was again open ; and it was at this moment that Philip, as if he had divined what his sister-in-law would do, or as if he had received secret information from England, sent the Armada the second orders to sail, which were unfulfilled only through the death of Santa Cruz. ‘Never,’ said Lord Howard, savage at his mistress’s perversity, ‘never since England was England was there such a stratagem and mask made to deceive us withal as this treaty.’¹ ‘We are wasting money,’ said Sir John Hawkins, ‘wasting strength, dishonouring and discrediting ourselves, by our uncertain dallying.’²

¹ Alteration in the order of the fleet, January, 1588.

Nothing that could be said in the least availed. The merchant-ships were released, and the best of the crews rejoined them, and went their way upon other voyages, beyond reach of recovery. ‘God send me to see such a company together again when need is,’ wrote the Lord Admiral. ‘If the power of Spain come before the middle of April, there will be as much ado to have men to furnish us as ever was, and men we must have, or the ships will do no good.’³ ‘What did move her Majesty,’ he continued, ‘to diminish our forces on the sudden I know not. If anything be attempted now upon the sudden, either for Scotland or to invade this coast, we shall do as much good for the service as the hoys which lie at Lyon quay. There is no master in England that will undertake with these men that are now in them to carry the ships back to Chatham. Our state is well known in Flanders, and as we were a terror to them at our first coming out, so now they make little reckoning of us. They know that we are like bears tied to stakes, and they may come as dogs to offend us, and we cannot hurt them.’⁴

It would have been easy now for Parma, if the weather would have allowed him, either to land a few

¹ Howard to Walsingham, January 27—February 6: MSS. Domestic.

² Hawkins to Walsingham, February 1—11: MSS. Ibid.

³ Howard to Walsingham, January 28—February 7: MSS. Ibid.

⁴ Howard to Walsingham, February 1—11: MSS. Ibid.

thousand men on the coast of Fife, or to transport his entire army to England. Howard could not have fired a shot to interfere with him. The Scotch plan however had been given up for reasons best known to Philip. The weather was wild and boisterous beyond experience. Exposure and sickness had thinned the rolls of the Prince's companies far below the number with which he believed that he could prudently make the venture; nor if his ranks had been as full as he could have wished to see them, would he have risked his army upon the Channel in the wave-swept hoys and barges of the Belgian ports, till a more advanced season brought smoother seas. The worst actual mischief was the false economy of the changes of plan. A week after the strength of the fleet had been reduced, the Queen grew uneasy at being defenceless. Orders were sent to restore Seymour's squadron to its full numbers, while the ships in the Thames were recalled to Chatham to be paid off. A fortnight later, in a fresh panic, they were commanded again to sea; men had to be collected wherever they could be found, and bounties and allowances were made necessary, which doubled the cost at which they could have kept in commission from the beginning.

March. There had been the same 'uncertain dallying' with Sir Francis Drake. The order to Portsmouth was recalled, and, at his earnest entreaty, he obtained leave to go down to the coast of Spain with the Revenge and the privateer squadron. But the permission was withdrawn as soon as given. Although Parma had distinctly refused to grant a general armistice, which would guarantee England against attacks, the Queen discovered that if Drake showed himself off Lisbon, 'it would be a hindrance to the peace; the King of Spain would take it ill.'¹

With the small progress made by her Commissioners in Flanders, and with the daily reports which came in from Spain of the approach of the Armada, she could not refuse to allow the fleet to remain at sea. But she permitted some miserable scoundrel to lay a plan before her for saving expenses, by cutting down the seamen's diets, stopping the beef and mutton, and setting them to defend their country and her throne, on fish, dried peas, and oil.² Clinging to her hopes of peace, and afraid probably of the navy endangering it, she tied the ships to harbour by supplying the stores in dribblets. She allowed rations but for a month at a time, and permitted no reserves to be provided in the victualling offices. Drake had offended her by consuming ammunition at target practice. She would not give him a second opportunity. 'The proportion of pow-

¹ Howard to Burghley, March 9—19: MSS. Domestic.

² 'Every man's victual of beef standeth her Majesty four pence the day, two pence the pound besides casks and salt. So the mess being four persons amounteth to sixteen pence the day for their meat, besides bread and drink. By altering that kind of victual to fish, oil, and peas, her Majesty's charge will be but three pence for three fishes the day at ten shillings the hundred of New-land fish, two pence in oil for the mess the day, and two pence in peas at two shillings the bushel, with one penny upon every mess the day in casks and other charges, which amounteth to in all eight pence the day on every mess, which is half the charge that beef did stand.'—Provision of victuals for the fleet, March 12—22: MSS. Domestic.

der' in the largest ships was 'sufficient but for a day and a half's service if it was begun and continued as the service might require;' in the rest of the fleet 'it was sufficient but for one day's service.'¹ 'Good my lords,' expostulated Drake with the council, 'consider deeply of this, for it importeth the loss of all.'² It was no fault of the council. The council would not have left Drake to ask for what was obviously necessary. The Queen had taken upon herself the detailed management of everything. Lord Howard's letters prove that she and she only was responsible. As if every officer she possessed were in a conspiracy to ruin her, she appears to have kept all descriptions of supplies within her own reach in London or at Chatham, permitting nothing to be served out without an order from herself; and the ships at Plymouth, furnished from a distance with small quantities at a time, were often for many days without food of any kind.

April. 'Such a thing was never heard of since there were ships in England,' Lord Howard wrote to Burghley, 'as no victuals in store. Her Majesty's father never made a less supply than six weeks, and yet there was marvellous help upon extremity, for there were ever provisions at Portsmouth; and also at Dover store ever at hand upon necessity.'³

And again to Walsingham:—

'I am very sorry her Majesty is so careless of this most dangerous time. I fear over much and with grief

¹ Drake to the Council, March 30—April 9.

² Ibid.

³ Howard to Burghley, April 8—18; MSS. Domestic.

think it, her Majesty relies upon a hope that will deceive her and greatly endanger her, and then it will not be her money nor her jewels that will help her; for as they will do good in time, so will they help nothing for the redeeming of time being lost. I dare say her Majesty will look that men should fight for her, and I know they will; but I pray heartily for a peace, for I see that which should be the ground of an honourable war will never appear; for sparing and war have no affinity together.’¹

The alterations of purpose had created so much confusion, that the four largest ships, the Triumph, the Victory, the Elizabeth Jonas, and the Bear, were for many weeks left behind for want of hands to man them, ‘keeping Chatham Church.’² The Queen indeed had considered that they would not be wanted, and that it would be a waste of money to refit them. By the beginning of May, the hopes of peace having faded away, and certain information having arrived that the Armada was on the point of sailing, the council so far prevailed that they were put in order, and allowed to join Howard in Margate roads. Supplies were issued to the entire fleet, calculated to last to the middle of June; and leaving Lord Henry Seymour, with the Vanguard, the Rainbow, the Antelope, and a squadron of privateers, to watch Dunkirk, the Admiral stood down Channel to join Drake, and wait for the Spaniards’ coming. Looking into Boulogne on his way, which the Duke of

¹ Howard to Walsingham, April 7—17: MSS. Domestic.

² Howard to Walsingham, March: MSS. Ibid.

Aumale was vainly besieging, he was off Plymouth on the morning of the 23rd of May (June 2nd).
May.

Drake with forty sail, adventurers all of them except the Revenge, and sent to sea by himself and his friends, came out to meet him, and the united fleets, imposing at least in numbers, entered the Sound together. Spies had brought word that the Armada intended to sail in the middle of the month. In the condition of the English magazines, it could not come too soon; and the plan was to take in water, and at once make for the mouth of the Channel, and force an engagement in the open sea.

The weather however continued desperate: a wild winter had been followed by a wilder spring, and the lengthening days were still the only signs of approaching summer. A severe south-westerly gale set in. Plymouth roadstead, undefended by a breakwater, was a dangerous anchorage, and to put to sea was more dangerous still. Howard, with the great ships, took his chance, and lay rolling in the Sound, 'dancing lustily as the gallantest dancer at Court.' Had he gone into the harbour, he could not have come out unless the weather moderated. The rest of the fleet, being smaller and more manageable, went for shelter into the mouth of the Tamar, and there lay chafing with impatience while their provisions wasted away. Fresh supplies had been promised, but the days passed, and the victualling hoys did not arrive; on the 28th of May (June 7th), there was but food for eighteen days, and Devonshire, strange to say, could not furnish anything. If the eighteen days ran out, and the Spaniards came at the end of them, the sailors would have to go into action starving. They continued in good spirits, ready, 'if well handled,' to go through fire and water. They were put on short rations, but they caught fish to eke out their reduced mess-dinners. There was sickness, but they would not yield to it; one and all praying only either 'for the speedy coming of the enemy,' or the expected but lingering victuallers.¹

.

The impression left upon those who were at this time most about the Queen, who saw her daily and transacted business with her, was that she would succeed this time in what she had often escaped doing by a narrow accident, and finally ruin both herself and the country. She now knew that in dancing after peace, she had been pursuing a mirage, yet the knowledge made no difference. She was incapable of personal fear, and she skipped and joked and wrangled over her money-bags, as if the Spanish fleet was a dream, and Philip fabulous as a wizard of romance. 'I am sorry,' wrote Walsingham from his bed to Burghley,² 'to see so great a danger hanging over this realm so slightly regarded and so carelessly provided for. I would to God the enemy were no more careful to assail than we to defend, and there would be the less cause of fear. Seeing that we have neither recourse to prayer, nor to such effectual preparations as the danger im-

¹ Howard to Walsingham, June 12—22, June 14—24: MSS. Domestic.

² Walsingham was subject to epilepsy, and was lying, as he pathetically said, 'waiting for my fit.'

porteth, I cannot but conclude according to man's judgment, *salus ipsa non potest servare hanc rempublicam.*¹

'For the love of Jesus Christ, Madam,' said Lord Howard to her, 'awake and see the villanous treasons round about you, against your Majesty and the realm.'² He was addressing ears, closed by a levity and obstinacy which were alike incurable. The victuallers came to Plymouth at last, ten days beyond their time. They had brought provisions but for one additional month only, and a positive message that no more should be sent. So peremptory Elizabeth was about it, that she forbade further preparations to be made, nor till the month was out could a consent be wrung from her for any further supply. The contractors, when the order reached them, answered that they could not execute it within less than four weeks, and for those four weeks therefore, if a knowledge of their mistress's character had not prepared the officers for what might possibly happen, the entire fleet would have been without food. The one month's provisions which came on the 23rd of June were June. distributed to make them last for six weeks at least. Six men were placed at every four men's mess. They bore it without complaining. The beer which had been sent at the same time was sour and poisonous. They bore this too, or would have borne it, but that it brought dysentery, a more dreaded enemy than the Spaniard, which carried them off by scores. Unable to endure the sight of their patient suffering, Drake and Howard ordered wine and arrowroot at Plymouth on their own responsibility for the sick beds. When all was over, the Queen called them to a sharp account for an extravagance which had saved possibly a thousand brave men to fight for her. Howard disdained to defend himself, and paid the bill out of his own purse.

¹ Walsingham to Burghley, June 19—29: MSS. Domestic. | ² Lord Howard to Elizabeth, June 23—July 3: MSS. Ibid.

Here for the present we leave the English fleet, the summer as it deepened becoming only more and more stormy—gales blowing from all quarters, now a hurricane of thirty hours from the north, now shifting to east and south-east, and then to west. The ‘wind and rain’ was uniform in nothing but violence, ‘so stormy and tempestuous as would not be credited.’ The ‘oldest fisherman’ on the coast could not remember ‘such a summer season.’¹ One satisfaction only Lord Howard found, and that a great one. Hawkins at least had done his share of the work right excellently. The English ships were ‘in royal and perfect estate, feeling the seas no more than if they had been riding at Chatham.’ Through the whole fleet not a spar was sprained, not a rope parted, timbers and cordage remained staunch and sound within and without. The Triumph and her four large consorts were grounded again and again ‘to tallow and to wash.’² They suffered nothing from the strain, and they were dry to the keel as Arabian sand. Their seaworthiness however would serve them nothing if the enemy lingered till their magazines were empty. Drake's hopes were still to make for the coast of Spain, supply his necessities from Philip's store-ships since his mistress failed him, and fight the Spaniards in their own harbours. He feared that Philip knew their condition, and was waiting pur-

¹ Lord H. Seymour to Walsingham, July 12—22, July 18—28 : MSS. Domestic.

² Hawkins to Burghley, July 17—27 : MSS. Ibid.

July. posely till want of food dissolved them. Once, at the beginning of July, with a north wind the fleet stood across to Ushant. Then however the wind shifted. They feared the enemy might pass them, and, afraid to venture further, ran back to the Sound, and there they waited; in all, twenty-nine Queen's ships of all sizes, ten small vessels belonging to Lord Howard and his family, and forty-three privateers between forty tons and four hundred, under Drake, the united crews amounting to something over nine thousand men.

Meanwhile the slow, lingering, long-expected Armada was at last really approaching. Lisbon through the spring months had been a scene of extraordinary confusion. Three nations, Spanish, Italian, and Portuguese, had furnished their several contingents. The Spaniards themselves not wholly moulded into unity—Gallicians, Andalusians, Catalans, Castilians, were divided into squadrons, imperfectly understanding each other, and separated by hereditary feuds. The hidalgos from Valladolid and Burgos, ardent and enthusiastic volunteers, lay in their tents surrounded by their servants. Portuguese and Castilian peasants, not so enthusiastic, and impressed from their farms to serve, were kept in gangs under guard lest they should run away. Six different languages were spoken among Philip's own free subjects, and besides these there was a motley company from every corner of the known world—galley slaves from Constantinople and Algiers, Jesuits from Rheims, exiled priests, Irish and English, gathering like ravens to the spoil of the heretics. Lord Baltinglass was there from the Wicklow hills; Lord Maxwell, turned now into Earl of Morton, from the Scotch borders; Caley O'Connor, a distinguished 'murderer,' 'who could speak nothing but his own tongue;' and Maurice Fitzgerald,¹ dreaming of the Desmond coronet; with many a young Scotch and English gentleman besides, who had listened too ardently to the preaching of Campian and Holt. The faithful of all countries had rushed together, as at the call of an archangel, to take part in the great battle for the cause of God and the Church.

Among these elements Medina Sidonia kept such order as he could, his chief difficulty being to prevent Spaniards and Portuguese from breaking each other's heads upon the quays. At length the weary preparations were completed; the galleons were equipped for sea, the stores laid in, the soldiers, sailors, and volunteers all embarked. On the fleet itself the treasures of the Indian mines had for three years been freely lavished. In the six squadrons there were sixty-five large ships; the smallest of them was of seven hundred tons; seven were over a thousand, and the largest, La

¹ Son of Sir James Fitzgerald, who was killed in the woods of Mallow.

Regazona, an Italian, was thirteen hundred. They were all 'built high like castles,' their upper works musket proof, their main timbers 'four and five feet thick,' of a strength it was fondly supposed which no English cannon could pierce. As a symbol of the service on which they were going, and to secure the guardianship of heaven, they had been baptized after the celestial hierarchy. The names on both sides, either by accident or purpose, corresponded to the character of the struggle; the St Matthew, the St Philip, the St James, the St John, the St Martin, and the Lady of the Rosary, were coming to encounter the Victory, the Revenge, the Dreadnought, the Bear, the Lion, and the Bull: dreams were ranged against realities, fiction against fact, and imaginary supernatural patronage against mere human courage, strength, and determination.¹

Next to the galleons, were four galleasses, gigantic galleys, carrying each of them fifty guns, four hundred and fifty soldiers and sailors, and rowed by three hundred slaves. In addition to these, were four large galleys, fifty-six armed merchant vessels, the best that Spain possessed, and twenty caravels or pinnaces attached to the larger ships.

The fighting fleet, or Armada proper, thus consisted of a hundred and twenty-nine vessels, seven of them larger than the Triumph, and the smallest of the sixty-five galleons of larger tonnage than the finest ship in the English navy, except the five which had been last added to it. The aggregate of cannon was two thousand four hundred and thirty. They were brass and iron of various sizes, the finest that the Spanish foundries could produce. The weight of metal which they were able to throw exceeded enormously the power of the English broadsides. In compensation however, and making up fortunately for the imperfect provision allowed by Elizabeth, the supply of cartridges was singularly small.¹ The King probably calculated that a single action would decide the struggle, and it amounted to but fifty rounds for each gun.

¹ I owe this observation to Mr Motley.

The store of provisions was enormous. It was intended for the use of the army after it landed in England, and was sufficient to feed forty thousand men for six months. The powder and lead for small arms was also infinite. The complement of sailors was moderate considering the size and number of the ships—all told they amounted to no more than eight thousand. The disposable space was probably required for the land force which was going to Parma's assistance. Of soldiers, Castilian and Portuguese, there were nineteen thousand; of gentlemen volunteers a thousand; six hundred priests, servants, strangers, and miscellaneous officers; and two thousand men besides, of not sufficient importance to be described particularly in the Spanish records, consisting of Turks, Jews, Algerines, or heretic Dutchmen, who rowed as slaves in the galleys and galleasses.¹

¹ 'Los dichos navios van armados con 2431 piezas de artilleria, 1497 de bronce de todos calibros y entre ellas muchos canones y medias culabrin as y las 934 de hierro colado . . . para la dicha artilleria se llevan 123,790 balas.'—Legajos de Guerra, 221 : MSS. Simancas.

Medina Sidonia had been recommended to the command in chief by his rank, and by his connection with the Princess of Eboli; but immediately under him were the ablest officers in Philip's dominions. Martinez de Recalde, Governor of Galicia and Vice-Admiral, was said to be the best seaman that Spain possessed next to Santa Cruz. Pedro de Valdez, General of the squadron of Andalusia, had commanded the Spanish fleet on the coast of Holland, when Don John was in the Netherlands, and knew the English Channel well. Miguel de Oquendo, who had the squadron of Guipiscoa, was a Spanish Philip Sidney, a young chivalrous nobleman of distinguished promise, who, a month before the fleet sailed, had obtained from the King a reluctant permission to take part in the expedition. Among the other names of interest in the list of officers was that of Hugh de Monçada, chief of the galleasses, made remarkable by the fate which overtook him; that of Diego de Pimentel, afterwards Viceroy of Mexico; and more particularly that of the brilliant Don Alonzo da Leyva who commanded the land forces. Born of a family who had for several generations been the terror of the Mediterranean corsairs, Don Alonzo had won his spurs as a boy in the last revolt of the Moors. Afterwards he had himself formed and led a company of Spanish lancers, who fought at Gemblours under Don John of Austria, and on Don John's death he was removed from the Netherlands, and put at the head of the fleet which was permanently stationed at Sicily. He was so celebrated personally, and so many attractions combined in him of birth, bearing, and distinguished services, that the fathers of the high-born youths who had volunteered to accompany the Armada, most of them committed their sons to da Leyva's special charge.

¹ Much has been said of the bolts and shackles found in some of the ships that were taken. It has been assumed that they were intended for English heretics; in point of fact they were no more than part of the ordinary furniture of all vessels carrying slaves.

The short supply of cannon cartridge was one serious deficiency. Masters of the art of war as the Spaniards believed themselves, and cheap as they held English inexperience, they had not yet comprehended the exigencies of a naval engagement. Another misfortune of even greater consequence to them was the incompetency of their pilots. The time had been when Spanish seamen knew the intricacies of the Channel as well as the English themselves; but since the capture of Flushing their ships of war had no longer any occupation left them there, and their commerce in those seas had been left to the Dutch, who though in revolt, still traded with their ports, supplied them with salt herrings for their fasting days, and had brought to Lisbon from the Baltic the hemp and tar with which the Armada itself had been fitted out. But though willing in the way of merchandise to supply the Spaniards with materials of war, they had declined to furnish them with pilots, and Parma, to whom Philip wrote in his difficulty, was obliged to reply that the best sailors were heretics, and that in all the Low Countries he was unable to find more than two or three competent men whom he could bribe or force to take service with the Armada.¹ All else was going well. The Pope would not indeed advance a ducat of his promised subsidy till the Spaniards were actually in England; but he had been more compliant about the succession, promising to leave it at Philip's disposition. He had made Allen a cardinal, with the See of Canterbury in prospect. The Duke of Mantua had relieved Philip's money difficulties, and Parma's hollowed ranks were filled again with fresh recruits. The Prince had once more his thirty thousand Spaniards, Germans, Italians, and Walloons in his camp, and the treaty having exploded upon the cautionary towns, he no longer affected any kind of concealment. The quays of Nieuport and Dunkirk were thronged with hoys and barges. The cavalry horses were stabled in the towns ready to embark; the troops encamped in the immediate environs. Artillery stores, platforms, crates, pioneers' tools, were already on board. The fleet at Antwerp, though unable to pass Flushing, yet succeeded in keeping the Dutch in check. They ventured out occasionally in front of Dunkirk, but could not lie there. When the crisis actually came they had not a sail on the seas; but they were able to prevent Parma from making use of Sluys, which had cost him so dear to capture,² and this after all was as much or more than Elizabeth had a right to expect.

¹ Parma to Philip, May 13: MSS. | ried by inland canals to Nieuport.—
Siencas. | Parma to Philip, June 22: MSS.

² The Sluys barges had been car- | Ibid.

The Armada was coming to execute the censures of the Church, and a spiritual demonstration was prepared to accompany it. In addition to his other dignities, the Archbishop elect of Canterbury was named Legate for England, and he had prepared a pastoral letter which was printed in Flanders, to be carried over by Parma and issued at the moment of his arrival. The burden of it was an exhortation to the faithful to rise in arms and welcome their deliverer, and copies had been already smuggled across the Channel and distributed through the secret agencies of the Catholic missions. The style and substance resembled the epistles of Pole, the prototype and example of all subsequent spiritual incendiaries.

The Spanish arms, the new Legate said, were not directed against his countrymen. Their sins had been many, but the retribution was to fall only on the wicked Queen, on the usurping heretic Elizabeth, the bane of Christendom, and the murderess of the souls of her subjects. Henry VIII., tyrant as he was, had fallen short in atrocity of his infamous daughter. Vengeance was falling upon her at last. Ruin was now to overwhelm her, and the just of the earth would say, 'Lo, this is she that took not God for her strength, that trusted in the multitude of her riches and prevailed in her iniquities, but was struck down under the hand of the Most High.' He invited the English nobility, to whose swords he said the defence of the Church had been entrusted, to consider the character and condition of the woman whom they had called their Sovereign. She was born in adultery, an offspring of incest, a declared bastard, incapable of lawfully succeeding. Her father had been excommunicated and deposed by the father of Christendom. Her mother's mother and her mother's sister had been his concubines. She had herself overthrown the Holy Church, profaned the sacraments, and torn God's priests from the altars in the very act of celebrating the holy mysteries. She had persecuted the Catholic gentry, and suppressed the old nobility; and had advanced churles and profligates to honour and authority. In the Sees of the bishops she had installed the scum and filth of mankind, infamous, lascivious, apostate heretics. She had made England a sarctuary of atheists and rebels, and vampire-like she had enriched herself and her servants by sucking the blood of the afflicted Catholics. Her chief favourite, whom she made use of to gratify her lust, had murdered his wife, it was to be presumed, with her knowledge and consent, and had afterwards made away with the husband of another lady. Yet this man, a mere lecherous minion, she had made her principal minister of state.

In language which is better left unquoted, the Cardinal proceeded to describe Elizabeth personally as the foulest of prostitutes and her Court as the vilest of brothels. The Church, he said, in pity had chastised her offences by excommunication, but she had despised correction, and those who had been sent to bring her to repentance she had slain with the sword. Innocent, godly, and learned men, priests and bishops in England and Ireland, had been racked, torn, chained, famished, buffeted, and at last barbarously executed ; and fulfilling the measure of her iniquities she had at length killed the anointed of God, the Lady Mary, her nearest kinswoman, and by law the right owner of her crown. The execution of the Church's judgment upon her had been long deferred, in part because she was too strong to be overthrown by her subjects alone, without danger to the lives of many noble and godly persons, in part through the long-suffering and sweet and fatherly forbearance of the chief shepherd of the Church, who had persevered in hoping that she might be converted from her evil ways. Seeing however that gentleness had availed nothing, the Holy Father had at length besought the princes of Christendom to assist him in the chastisement of so wicked a monster, the scourge of God, and shame of womankind. The Most Catholic King had accepted the glorious charge, and his legions were about to appear on the English shores.

'Me too,' the Cardinal concluded: 'me too, being of your own flesh and blood, his Holiness has been pleased to choose as his legate, for the restoring of religion and the future ordering of the realm ; as well for the title of the Crown as for other causes which may fall out between the Church and the Commonwealth. His Holiness confirms and renews the sentence of his predecessors against Elizabeth. He discharges you of your oath of allegiance. He requires you in the bowels of Christ no longer to acknowledge her as your Sovereign ; and he expects all of you, according to your ability, to hold yourselves ready on the arrival of his Catholic Majesty's powers to join them. This if you do, your lands and goods will be assured to you. Therefore, my lords and dear countrymen, take part one with another in this honourable quarrel. If you remain still, you will fall under the curse pronounced by the angel against the land of Meroz. You will be guilty of your own ruin, and of the blood of your people. Above all, fight not for a quarrel in which, if you die, you will incur damnation. In this the hour of wrath upon Elizabeth and her partakers, fight not against the souls of your ancestors, and the salvation of your wives and children. Fight rather for God's Church and the honour of England's knighthood. Fight for Christ, for religion, and for the holy sacraments of our faith. The prayers of all Christian people, the blood of the martyred bishops, friars, priests, and laymen, shed in that your land, cry to God for your victory. The saints in heaven are interceding for you. The priests on earth stretch forth their consecrated hands night and day for you. Our Saviour himself is among you in the blessed sacrament. Fear not. The enemy is falling by his own weakness. The English nation will turn from the setting sun, and follow no more the broken fortunes of a mean and filthy woman. The heretics are but few, and of all men are most effeminate, most dastardly, least capable of war. The angel of the Lord will scatter them. Take heart. Quit yourselves like men. I shall myself soon be with you. Each day appears a year to me till I enjoy your presence in the Lord.

‘From my lodging in the Palace of St Peter’s at Rome,

‘This 28th of April, 1588,

‘THE CARDINAL.’¹

All being thus in order, the Prince of Parma ready to embark, the paternal admonition to the English nation to commit treason prepared for circulation, and the last touches added to the completeness of the fleet in the Tagus, the Duke of Medina Sidonia sailed from Lisbon on the 19th—29th of May. The northerly breeze which prevails on the coast of Portugal was unusually strong. The galleons standing high out of the

¹ Admonition to the Nobility of England, &c. by Cardinal Allen, 1588. Abridged. The abstract in the text gives but a feeble impression of the virulence of Allen’s language. It is to be regretted that Parma, who knew what Elizabeth’s character really was, should have sanctioned its publication. He had misgivings as to the probable conduct of the Catholics, and he imagined that Allen’s authority would carry weight with them.

‘En lo que toca,’ he said, ‘á la voz que V. Mag^d manda se le de á la entrada del pretexto de la reforma de la religion y de la venida del Cardinal de Inglaterra Alano con auctoridad apostolica á absolverlos y componer las cosas que á esto tocan, temé yo la cuenta que conviene por las razones que otras veces se han platicado, y verse que los mas de los de aquel Reyno no estan tan mortificados que no tengan sus humores. El Conde de Olivarez me ha enviado de Roma un discurso y declaracion en lengua Inglesa que ha compuesto el dicho Alano á este fin, para que se estampe y se publique por todo el Reyno al tiempo de la invasion; y se hace traducir para entenderlo y ver si hubiese algo que quitar ó poner, y luego se dará á la estampa con la forma de un bando breve y compendioso que comprehenda en substancia los cabos principales del dicho discurso como lo acuerda el mismo Alano—la ayuda del qual assi para este punto principal de la religion como de las demas cosas politicas entiendo será muy provechosa por la auctoridad que tiene entre los Catolicos y por su bondad suficiencia y doctrina.’—El Duque de Parma al Rey, 13 de Mayo: MSS. Simancas.

water, and carrying small canvas in proportion to their size, worked badly to windward. They were three weeks in reaching Finisterre, where the wind having freshened to a gale, they were scattered, some standing out to sea, some into the Bay of Biscay. Their orders, in the event of such a casualty, had been to make for Ferrol. The wind shifting suddenly to the west, those that had gone into the Bay could not immediately reach it, and were driven into Santander. The officers however were, on the whole, well satisfied with the qualities which the ships had displayed. A mast or two had been sprung, a few yards and bowsprits had been carried away ; but beyond loss of time there had been no serious damage.

The weather moderating, the fleet was again collected in the Bay of Ferrol by the 6th—16th of July. All repairs were completed by the 11th—21st, and the next day, the 12th—22nd, the Armada took leave of Spain for the last time.

The scene as the fleet passed out of the harbour must have been singularly beautiful. It was a treacherous interval of real summer. The early sun was lighting the long chain of the Gallician mountains, marking with shadows the cleft defiles, and shining softly on the white walls and vineyards of Coruña. The wind was light, and falling towards a calm ; the great galleons drifted slowly with the tide on the purple water, the long streamers trailing from the trucks, the red crosses, the emblem of the crusade, showing bright upon the hanging sails. The fruit boats were bringing off the last fresh supplies, and the pinnaces hastening to the ships with the last loiterers on shore. Out of thirty thousand men who that morning stood upon the decks of the proud Armada, twenty thousand and more were never again to see the hills of Spain. Of the remnant who in two short months crept back ragged and torn, all but a few hundreds returned only to die.

The Spaniards, though a great people, were usually over-conscious of their greatness, and boasted too loudly of their fame and prowess ; but among the soldiers and sailors of the doomed expedition against England, the national vainglory was singularly silent. They were the flower of the country, culled and chosen over the entire Peninsula, and they were going with a modest nobility upon a service which they knew to be dangerous, but which they believed to be peculiarly sacred. Every one, seaman, officer, and soldier, had confessed and communicated before he went on board. Gambling, swearing, profane language of all kinds had been peremptorily forbidden. Private quarrels and differences had been made up or suspended. The loose women who accompanied Spanish armies, and sometimes Spanish ships to sea, had been ordered away, and no unclean thing or person permitted to defile the Armada ; and in every vessel, and in the whole fleet, the strictest order was prescribed and observed. Medina Sidonia led the way in the San Martin, showing lights at night, and firing guns when the weather was hazy. Mount's Bay was to be the next place of rendezvous if they were again separated.¹

On the first evening the wind dropped to a calm.

¹ Orders to the fleet of Spain by the Duke of Medina Sidonia : MSS. Domestic, 1588.

The morning after, the 13th—23rd, a fair fresh breeze came up from the south and south-west; the ships ran flowingly before it; and in two days and nights they had crossed the bay, and were off Ushant. The fastest of the pinnaces was despatched from thence to Parma, with a letter bidding him expect the Duke's immediate coming.¹

But they had now entered the latitude of the storms which through the whole season had raged round the English shore. The same night a south-west gale overtook them. They lay-to, not daring to run further. The four galleys unable to keep the sea were driven in upon the French coast, and wrecked. The Santa Aña, a galleon of eight hundred tons, went down, carrying with her ninety seamen, three hundred soldiers, and fifty thousand ducats in gold.² The weather was believed to be under the peculiar care of God, and this first misfortune was of evil omen for the future. The storm lasted two days, and then the sky cleared, and again gathering into order they proceeded on their way. On the 19th—29th they were in the mouth of the Channel. At daybreak on the morning of the 20th—30th the Lizard was under their lee, and an English fishing-boat was hanging near them, counting their numbers. They gave chase; but the boat shot away down wind and disappeared. They captured another an hour or two later, from which they learnt the English fleet was in Plymouth, and Medina Sidonia called a council of war, to consider whether they should go in, and fall upon it while at anchor. Philip's orders however were peremptory that they should turn neither right nor left, and make straight for Margate roads and Parma. The Duke was unenterprising, and consciously unequal to his work; and already bending under his responsibilities he hesitated to add to them.

¹ 'Cartas del Duque de Medina, 25 Julio.'—MSS. Simancas.

² 'Relacion de lo sucedido á la Real Armada, etc., dada por el Contador Pedro Coco Calderon.'—MSS.

Ibid. 'Legajos de Mar y Tierra.' When I refer again to this singularly interesting narrative, it will be under the title of Calderon.

Had he decided otherwise it would have made no difference, for the opportunity was not allowed him. Long before the Spaniards saw the Lizard they had themselves been seen, and on the evening of the 19th—20th, the beacons along the coast had told England that the hour of its trial was come.

To the ships at Plymouth the news was as a message of salvation. By thrift and short rations, by good management, contented care, and lavish use of private means, there was still one week's provisions in the magazines, with powder and shot for one day's sharp fighting, according to English notions of what fighting ought to be. They had to meet the enemy, as it were, with one arm bandaged by their own Sovereign; but all wants, all difficulties, were forgotten in the knowledge that he was come, and that they could grapple with him, before they were dissolved by starvation.

The warning light flew on to London, swift messengers galloping behind it. There was saddling and arming in village and town, and musters flocking to their posts. Loyal England forgot its difference of creeds, and knew nothing but that the invader was at the door. One thing was wanting, a soldier to take the supreme command ; but the Queen found what she needed, found it in the person in whom in her eyes, notwithstanding his offences in the Low Countries, all excellencies were still combined—her own Leicester. Worse appointment could not possibly have been made ; but even Leicester was lifted into a kind of hero by the excitement of the moment. He was not a coward, and not entirely a fool. Tilbury had been chosen as the place where the force was to assemble which was intended to cover London. It was the lowest spot where the Thames could be easily crossed, and it was impossible to say on which side of the river the enemy might choose to approach. Leicester flew at once to his post there, and so far he had fulfilled his duty that he had sixteen thousand men with him at Tilbury, with thirty thousand forming rapidly in his rear out of the musters of the midland counties, before Parma could have advanced, under the most favourable circumstances, within a day's march of London.¹

¹ The Armada reached Calais on Saturday, the 27th (August 6). Had all gone well Parma might, with very great exertion, have crossed on the following Wednesday, the 31st (August 10). His own letters prove that he could not have been ready sooner. His plan was to land at Margate, and even if he was unopposed three days at least would have been required to move his army within thirty miles of London. On the 26th of July (August 5),

Leicester had ten thousand men with him at Tilbury. There were nine thousand on the same day in London, and the musters of the midland counties, even if they marched no more than fifteen miles a day, must have joined him at latest, had their presence been required, before the 4th—14th of August.—See Leicester's letters to Walsingham from the camp: MSS. Domestio. Provisions had been as little attended to for one service as the other. When

Meanwhile, on the night of the 19th—29th, while the Armada was still some leagues to the south of the Lizard, the wind blowing fresh into Plymouth Sound, the Queen's ships and a few of the privateers were warped out behind the shelter of Mount Edgecombe. All hands went merrily to work; vessel after vessel was brought to moorings behind Ram Head, so placed that they could fetch clear to the sea; and by Saturday morning, when the Spaniards were first sighting the coast of Cornwall, forty sail were lying ready for action under the headland.

The day wore on; noon passed and nothing had been seen. At length, towards three in the afternoon, the look-out men on the hill reported a line of sails on the western horizon, the centre being first visible, the two wings gradually rising and spreading along the rim of the sea. On they swept in a broad crescent, slowly, for the air was light; and as the hulls showed clear, it was seen that report had not exaggerated the numbers said to be coming. A hundred and fifty, large and small, were counted and reported to Lord Howard; a few stray tenders bound for Flanders having sought the company and the protection of the mighty escort.

The English ships at once weighed, but showed themselves as little as they could. The evening was four thousand Essex men came in on the 26th of July, after a hot march of twenty miles, 'there was neither a barrel of beer nor a loaf of bread for them.' London happily exerted itself, and sent stores down the river;	the spirit of the men deserved better treatment. Famished as they were, 'they said they would abide more hunger than that to serve her Majesty and the country.'—Leicester to Walsingham, July 26—August 5.

---	---

cloudy, with the wind hanging to the land. It was growing dusk when the Armada opened Plymouth, and then for the first time Medina Sidonia perceived that Howard was prepared for him, and that if he wished it he could not enter the Sound without an action. There was not light enough for him to measure his enemy's strength. He saw sails passing continually between his fleet and the land, and vessels tacking and manœuvring; but confident in his own overpowering force, he sent up signals to lie-to for the night, and to prepare for a general action at daybreak.

About two o'clock, the moon rose with a clear sky—a gibbous moon, little more than a half circle, but by the light of it the Spaniards perceived that sixty or seventy ships had glided out behind them, and were hovering at their rear just out of cannon-shot.

July 21—31. The dawn was still, but towards eight o'clock the breeze freshened from the west. The Armada made sail, and attempted to close. To Medina Sidonia's extreme astonishment, it seemed at the pleasure of the English to leave him or allow him to approach them as they chose. The high-towered, broad-bowed galleons moved like Thames barges piled with hay; while the sharp low English sailed at once two feet to the Spaniards' one, and shot away as if by magic in the eye of the wind. It was as if a modern steam fleet was engaged with a squadron of the old-fashioned three-deckers, choosing their own distance and fighting or not fighting as suited their convenience.

The action opened with the Ark, carrying Howard's flag, and three other English ships, whose names the Spaniards did not know, running along their entire rear line, firing successively into each galleon as they passed, then wearing round and returning over the same course. The San Matteo luffed into the wind as far as she could, inviting them to board, but they gave her their broadsides a second time and passed on.

Astonished and confounded as well by the manœuvring as by the rapidity of the fire, the Spanish officers could not refuse their admiration. They knew that they were inferior at sea, but how inferior they had not realized. The English were firing four shots to one, and with a fresh breeze even the galleasses could not touch them. Such artillery practice and ships so handled had never been seen.¹ Alonzo da Leyva in the Rata attempted to cross the Ark. Howard kept away as if to meet him, but ran by, again fired into the San Matteo, which was lying head to wind unable to move, and swept on upon his way.

The rest of the English ships were now engaged on the same conditions. The action continued through the whole forenoon, the Spaniards making efforts to close and always failing. Conscious of their disadvantage, they still fought bravely. 'So far as we see,' wrote Drake, 'they mean to sell their lives with blows.'² But they had been flurried and surprised. Being to leeward, and leaning over to the wind, their shots had flown high, and had scarcely touched the English ships

¹ 'Muy bien artillados y marinados y veleados.'—CALDERON.

² Drake to Lord Henry Seymour, July 21: MSS. Domestic.

at all, while they had themselves suffered considerably. The Biscayan flag-ship, the San Juan, had her mizen-mast shot through in two places, many spars carried away, the captain wounded, and fifteen men killed. Oquendo had specially distinguished himself, being present wherever the danger was greatest, driving back into action vessels which were inclined to flinch ; but as the wind held neither he nor any one could change the fortunes of the day, or enable the Spaniards to hurt an enemy whom they could not touch ; and the rest of the English fleet coming out of the harbour, Medina Sidonia signalled to make sail up Channel, Martinez de Recalde covering the rear with the squadron of Biscay.

The wind was now rising, and promised a squally evening. A fast boat was sent on with letters to Lord Henry Seymour reporting progress so far, and bidding him prepare in the Downs. An express went to London, begging for an instant supply of ammunition ; and while Drake went in pursuit of a detachment which appeared to be parted from the main Spanish fleet, and proved only to be the Flemish traders, Howard hung upon Recalde, sparing his powder but firing an occasional shot to prevent the enemy from recovering from their confusion.

The misfortunes of the first day were not yet over.

Afraid to spread lest any of them should be cut off, the different squadrons huddled together. A rolling sea came up from the west, and as evening fell, the Capitana, of the Andalusian division, a galleon of 1200 tons, carrying the flag of Pedro de Valdez, fouled the Santa Catalina, and broke her bowsprit. The forestays parted and the foremast fell overboard, and the ship, hampered by the wreck, dropped behind. Don Pedro fired a distress gun, and two of the galleasses came to his assistance, and tried to take him in tow, but the waves were running so high that the cable broke. Don Pedro was the only high officer in the fleet who was well acquainted with the Channel. He was himself of more importance than his ship, and the Duke despatched boats to bring him off with his crew. But he would not leave his charge, and he was left to his fate. It was almost dark. Howard, believing the wreck to be deserted, did not stay for her, and went on in pursuit. A London privateer hung behind at her side till midnight, exchanging occasional shots with her, and sometimes hearing voices calling, but 'the wind and sea being very great,' the words could not be distinguished. Drake, returning from his chase, came up with her in the morning. She struck her flag, and he took her with him to Torbay, where he left her to the care of the Brixham fishermen, and himself hastened after the Admiral, carrying on with him de Valdez and the other officers. The prize proved of unexpected value. Many casks of reals were found in her, and, infinitely more important, some tons of gunpowder, with which the Roebuck, the swiftest trawler in the harbour, flew in pursuit of the fleet.¹

¹ The prisoners were a serious | likely to be demanded of the pro-
embarrassment to the Torbay magis- | perty found in the ship that they trates. So sharp an account was | did not venture, without permission,

Two hours after the accident to the Andalusian Capitana, another disaster overtook the galleon of Oquendo. He was himself apparently not on board at the time. The officers, impatient and irritated at the results of the action, were quarrelling with themselves and one another. The captain struck the master gunner with a stick. The master gunner, who was a German, went below in a rage, thrust a burning linstock into a powder-barrel, and sprung through a port-hole into the sea. The deck was blown off from stem to stern. Two hundred seamen and soldiers were sent into the air; some fell into the water and were drowned; some scorched or mutilated dropped back into the wreck. The ship, which was also one of the largest in the fleet, was built so strongly that she survived the shock and floated, and her masts still stood. The flash was seen. The Duke sent boats to learn what had happened and to save the men. The officers and the few who were unhurt, were taken off; but there were no means of removing the wounded. They too were abandoned therefore, to be picked up at daylight by the English to feed them on the stores which they had brought with them. Foreigners who could speak no English, were looked on as no better than savages. 'The cost of keeping them was great, the peril great, the discontent of the country people greatest of all,' and had the rough and ready Devonshire clowns acted on their own judgment, they would have solved the difficulty expeditiously after their own fashion. Prisoners of war who could pay no ransom, found nowhere very gentle treatment in the sixteenth century. Ultimately some of them were sent to Exeter gaol, some were confined in a barn at Tor Abbey, some on board their own ship; and 'to save expense, they were fed on the refuse of their own provisions, which was too bad to be taken away, the fish stinking, and the bread full of worms.'—Gilbert to Walsingham, July 26—August 5: MSS. Domestic.

and sent on shore, where the disabled were kindly treated. The hull was still worth rifling. It contained money like all the rest of the ships, and at the bottom of the hold there were powder barrels which had escaped the explosion.

Lord Howard was supplying his worst July 22—deficiencies out of the enemy's own resources, August 1.
and wringing from themselves the means of completing their destruction. After a wild night, the morning broke fine and still. The wind had shifted with the dawn, and a light air was now coming up from the east. The Armada was off Portland; the English three or four miles to the west; both fleets lying motionless in the calm, and rising and falling to the swell. Howard being now to leeward, had lost his advantage of the day before. Sidonia, had he wished it, might have forced another engagement with fairer chances in his favour, but he preferred to rest his shaken crews, and give them breathing-time to recover their confidence. He despatched a second letter to the Prince of Parma, describing his position and relating his adventures. He made the best of what had befallen him, and concluded, on the whole, that the English were afraid of him, because they had declined to close; but he was evidently extremely anxious. He knew nothing of the coast. He begged Parma most earnestly to send him pilots: and he confessed himself at an entire loss what to do or where to go if he was overtaken by a storm.¹

¹ Medina Sidonia to the Duke of Parma, July 22—August 1: MSS. Simancas.

In the Channel during fine summer weather, the wind, as the fishermen say, goes round with the sun. It blows sometimes freshly from the north-east in the morning; it drops to the south at noon; to south-west in the afternoon; and so, falling calm at sunset, rises again at night from the north. Sidonia knew nothing

Tuesday, of these local peculiarities; the next morning
July 23—

August 2. the relative positions of the fleets remaining unchanged, and finding himself to windward, he bore down upon Howard, with a steady easterly breeze, to offer battle. The English headed out towards the sea. He supposed that they were flying, and though he could not overtake them, was tempted to give chase. The galleons, though bad sailers all, were of unequal slowness. The San Marcos outsailed the rest, and was led far beyond her consorts in the pursuit. When the breeze headed round as usual, Lord Howard was now to windward of her, while she was herself several miles to windward of her consorts, and beyond reach of help from them.

The object of the English was to avoid a general engagement, and especially to avoid coming to close quarters, where the enemy would be on more equal terms with them; outnumbered as they were, and short of powder, their plan was to make the best of their superiority as sailors, and wound and injure as many of the galleons as possible, with least damage to themselves. The San Marcos was instantly set upon. She defended herself with extreme courage, and, as the Spaniards thought, with no less skill. She fought single-handed for an hour and a half, firing what they considered the unexampled number of eighty shots, and receiving five hundred. Oquendo came at last to the rescue, and the action off Plymouth having almost exhausted his stock of powder, and the Brixham sloop not having yet overtaken him, Howard was obliged to draw off till he could be relieved from the shore.¹ Sidonia, ignorant of the cause of his retreat, believed that he had been worsted by the San Marcos alone, and that if the galleasses had gone into the action, as they might and ought to have done, they would have won a signal victory.²

A stray Venetian had been meanwhile taken by the privateers, with one or two other small vessels, and carried into Weymouth. The news that the Spaniards were in the Channel had by this time penetrated into every corner of the country, and the patriotic heart of England was on fire. The Oxford High Church students who were training for the College at Rheims; the young ladies and gentlemen who had given their consciences in charge to the Jesuit missionaries, who, if they admitted that they were English, yet called themselves in preference Catholic—first Catholic and only English afterwards—these, it might be, were, like Lord Arundel in the Tower, beseeching Heaven for their country's fall; but the robust heart of the nation laid aside its quarrels of opinion in the presence of danger to England's independence. Had Mary Stuart lived, had

¹ Diary of Sir John Hawkins, July and August, 1588: MSS. Domestic.

² Medina Sidonia to Don Hugo de Moncada, July 23—August 2: MSS. Simancas.

James of Scotland been a Catholic, and had the Spaniards come with no other purpose but to place him on the throne of Elizabeth, the admonition of Allen might have found some, though not even then perhaps a general, response. But Philip had chosen to present himself as meaning, under the mask of religion, to make England a dependency of Spain; and, in the face of so hateful a possibility, Cliffords, and Veres, and Percies took their places beside the Raleighs and the Cecils of the new era; and from Lyme, and Weymouth, and Poole, and the Isle of Wight, young lords and gentlemen came streaming out in every smack or sloop that they could lay hold of, to snatch their share of danger and glory at Howard's side. The strength which they were able to add was little or nothing; but they brought enthusiasm, they brought to the half-starved and neglected crews the sense that the heart of England was with them, and transformed every common seaman into a hero. On the Tuesday evening after the fight, Medina Sidonia counted a hundred sail behind him, and observed, with some uneasiness, that the numbers were continually increasing.

July 24— Wednesday was again calm. Neither shot August 3. nor powder had yet arrived, though express after express had been sent for it. No risk might be ventured, and the English lay now six miles from the Armada, waiting till their magazines were refilled. The Duke, supposing them to be afraid, sent Don Hugo de Monçada with the galleasses to engage. On that day there was not a breath of wind of any kind, and the galleasses had Howard at some advantage. There was no serious loss however; that night ammunition came sufficient for one more day's fighting, and Sir George Carey, who had run out from behind the Isle of Wight in a pinnace, to see what was going on, found himself, at five in the morning, 'in the midst of round shot, flying as thick as musket-balls in a skirmish on land.'¹ The night had been still and dark. Thursday, July 25—August 4. With the first light, the Spaniards saw two of their store-vessels, loaded with provisions, being towed away by some English launches. The wind rising, Alonzo da Leyva in the Rata, with two galleasses, which had taken Reçalde's place in the rear, at once started in pursuit. The main body of the Armada lying open, and the San Martin with Sidonia's own flag being clearly distinguishable, Howard for the first time determined to try a close engagement.

It was a day of special distinction for the Howard family. He took his cousin Lord Thomas with him in the Lion, his two sons-in-law, Lord Sheffield and Sir R. Southwell, in the Bear and the Elizabeth Jonas, and with his own and one other ship, the Victory, under Captain Barker, he went straight into the centre of the Armada, steering direct for the San Martin herself, and exchanging broadsides at speaking distance with every galleon that he passed. Oquendo, sure to be found where hardest blows were going, threw himself across the Ark's course before she could reach the

¹ Sir George Carey to —, July 25—August 4: MSS. Domestic.

San Martin. The Ark ran into him, and two soldiers on his fore-castle were killed by the shock; but the Ark's rudder was unshipped; she cleared herself of her enemy, but dropped away for the moment unmanageable to leeward, and was immediately surrounded by a number of galleons, which attempted to close with her. In an instant her own boats had her in tow; her sails filled as they pulled her head round, and when the galleons had assured themselves of their prize, she slipped away between them so fast, that a Spanish spectator says, 'though the swiftest ships in the whole Armada pursued her, they seemed in comparison to be at anchor.'¹

The action continued afterwards for several hours. The English had not suffered at all. Hardly a man had been wounded. But neither had they any captures to boast of. Calderon leaves it uncertain whether da Leyva recovered the store-ships; the English writers do not mention having taken them. The only visible result had been the expenditure of powder. But the invisible result to the Armada had been far more serious. The four feet of timber had been no defence against the English shot. The soldiers had been sent below for security, and the balls ripping through the oak, had sent the splinters flying among them like shell. Many had been killed, many more had been wounded; masts, yards, rigging, all had suffered. They had expected that one engagement would annihil-late the power of their enemies, and battle followed upon battle, and there was as yet no sign of an end. They began to be afraid of the English. There was something devilish in the rapid manœuvres of their ships and the torrents of shot which plunged into their tall sides, while their own flew wild and harmless. Their ammunition too, slowly as they had fired, was giving out as well as the English, and it was less easy for them to supply themselves. The Duke resolved to fight no more if he could help it, and to make the best of his way to the Prince of Parma, to whom he again wrote, without attempting to conceal his perplexities.

¹ 'Se fué saliendo con tanta velocidad que el galeon San Juan de Fernando y otro ligerísimo, con ser los mas veleros de la Armada que le fueron dando caça en comparacion, se quedáron surtos.'—CALDERON

‘The enemy pursue me,’ he said. ‘They fire upon me most days from morning till nightfall; but they will not close and grapple. I have given them every opportunity. I have purposely left ships exposed to tempt them to board; but they decline to do it, and there is no remedy, for they are swift and we are slow. They have men and ammunition in abundance, while these actions have almost consumed ours; and if these calms last, and they continue the same tactics, as they assuredly will, I must request your Excellency to send me two shiploads of shot and powder immediately. I am in urgent need of it. I trust to find you ready on my arrival to come out and join me. If the wind is fair we shall soon be with you; but any way, whether we are detained or not, we cannot do without ammunition. You must send me as much as you can spare.’¹

¹ Medina Sidonia to the Duke of Parma, July 25—August 4: MSS Simancas.

July 26— The day following, Friday, the Duke was August 5. allowed a respite. The fine weather continued, and the Spaniards inclined away towards the coast of France, while Howard bore up for Dover, for the supplies of all kinds which he so frightfully needed. The Earl of Sussex, who was in command at the castle, gave him all the powder that he had. The stores came in, which had been taken from the prizes: every barrel of powder, every shot, whether of stone or iron, having been first carefully registered for the severe account which it was known that the Queen would demand. The victuallers had not arrived, but were supposed to be at the mouth of the Thames; and having obtained as much as he could get, if less than he wanted, Howard returned in the evening to his place in the rear of the Armada.

July 27— On Saturday the weather broke. After less August 6. than a week of calm and sunshine, squalls and driving showers again came up from the westward. The Armada was then off Boulogne, the English fleet a league behind it. The Duke, with the prospect of a rising sea, without pilots who knew the coast, afraid of the Downs for fear of the Goodwin Sands, and of Margate, on account of the banks and shoals in the mouth of the river, determined to bring up in Calais Roads, and wait there till Parma was ready. The wind was to the west of south, and as long as it held in that quarter the roadstead was tolerably secure. Coming up with a rising tide, he let fall his anchors suddenly, hoping that his pursuers would be unprepared, and would be swept past him ; but his movements had been observed by eyes which were skilful to interpret them. The English anchors fell simultaneously with his own two miles astern, and the two fleets lay watching each other, almost within cannon-shot of the shore.¹

There were still some hours of daylight remaining, and M. Gourdain, the governor of Calais, drove down with his wife to the parade, in the hope of seeing a battle.² The Duke sent an officer on shore, to intimate his arrival, and request the hospitalities of the port, while a boat went on to Dunkirk with another despatch to the Prince.

It was brief, uneasy, and impatient: Sidonia was irritated at finding no answer to his former letters. He again confessed himself helpless against the repeated assaults of the enemy. He trusted Parma was ready to cross. If not, and if there was to be more delay, he begged him to send immediately thirty or forty fly-boats or gunboats, which could move quickly, and keep the English at bay. He was uncomfortable at the position of the fleet, and painfully anxious to remove to some more secure anchorage.³

It is needless to say that the Prince had not been idle. His expenses were so enormous that he had been once more in extremity for money—his army had been in as bad case as the English fleet at Plymouth, and at

¹ R. Tomson to Walsingham, July 30—August 9: MSS. Domestic.

² 'Hallóle con su muger en un coche à la marina, esperando ver si se daba la batalla.'—CALDERON.

³ Medina Sidonia to the Prince of Parma, July 27—August 6: MSS. Simancas.

the point of breaking up through famine.¹ He had kept his men together only by the expectation of the supplies which were coming with the fleet. Medina Sidonia's letters had reached him one after the other, and the troops were in perfect readiness to go on board the transports. The officer who came from Calais expressed impatience that they were not already embarked. The Duke, it seems, had expected that Parma would have met him on the sea, and that they could fight the English with their united force. Farnese explained that this was impossible. To come out while the enemy's fleet was undispersed would be certain destruction. His transports could not protect themselves. The Armada must clear the Channel, and, weather permitting, he was then prepared to fulfil his Majesty's commands. As to sending gunboats to protect Medina Sidonia, he could not do it, for he had none belonging to him. Medina Sidonia must protect him. Ammunition he would provide, 'so far as his own penury would allow.'

That the majestic fleet which was to overwhelm opposition should arrive at the scene of action so helpless as itself to require assistance, was not particularly encouraging. Parma however promised that his army should go on board immediately. He would be ready, he said, by the middle of the following week. He admitted that the Armada must not remain a day longer than necessary in Calais Roads, and was as anxious as the Duke could be to see it in some better shelter.

¹ 'Á pique de deshacerse de pura necesidad.'—El Duque de Parma al Rey, 10—20 Julio: MSS. Simancas.

Only he reiterated—and as the Duke was evidently unconvinced, he sent a special messenger to Philip to insist upon it—that to risk his barges in a naval engagement would be simple madness. They could not encounter even the slightest roll of the sea, and if there was no enemy to fear, could only pass safely in a calm.¹

Parma's answer did not diminish Medina Sidonia's uneasiness. More than half of his shot was expended; and with the enemy's fleet so near, the promised supply from Dunkirk could not easily reach him. On the night of his arrival too the few Flemish pilots that he had slipped overboard in the darkness, stole the cockboats,

¹ 'Parece el Duque toda via pretendiendo que yo saliese en estos baxeles á juntarme con el para ir á dar todos sobre el Armada enemiga; mas siendo estos de la calidad que se sabe, se trata de lo imposible, pretender pasar la mar en ellos sin manifesto peligro de perder este exercito; mas siendo el Duque bien informado de lo que hay, será del mismo parecer; y que se entienda en cumplir la orden de V. Mag^d quanto antes, y no divertirse á otra cosa. Basta que en todo lo que yo pudiere, le dare el contento que es razon y asistire como puede desear.' Parma to Philip, July 29—August 8: MSS. Simancas. Parma's words show clearly, if proof were wanted, that it was not the presence of the Dutch which prevented him from coming out. The words 'el Armada enemiga' refer exclusively to the English. He never speaks of the Dutch by the honourable title of enemies. They are always 'los rebeldes.' Nor does he allude anywhere to the possibility of interference from them, except in the use of Sluys harbour. Their ships had been off Dunkirk in the middle of July, but they had been driven into the Scheldt by the storm of the night of the 21st—31st, and did not issue from it again till after the action off Gravelines.—See Burnham to Walsingham, July 25—August 4: Killigrew to Walsingham, July 31—August 10: MSS. Holland. Lord Howard says expressly that on the action of July 29, not a Dutch sail was visible. I do not insist on this from any wish to detract from the merits of the Hollanders. Their good liberty in the cause of European liberty are too genuine to require or permit a fictitious distinction to be intertwined in their laurel wreath.

set their shirts for sails and made for Flushing,¹ leaving him dependent on the imperfect knowledge of the Spanish shipmasters and their still more imperfect charts.

Grave however as may have been the anxiety of the Spanish commander, Lord Howard and the English officers had cause for deeper disquiet. Their spirits were unshaken, their resolution firm as ever; but they could not conceal from themselves that they had severe and dangerous work before them, and that on their conduct only it depended to save their country, if not from conquest, yet from being the scene of a bloody and desperate struggle. Notwithstanding all that they could do, the enemy's fleet had arrived at its destination, how much injured they could not tell, but to appearance with its strength not materially impaired, and in com-

July 28—munication with the Prince of Parma's army.

August 7. Lord Henry Seymour joined them with the squadron of the Straits an hour after they anchored, and forty London privateers were reported to be in the mouth of the Thames. But ships and men were of no use without food and ammunition. Seymour 'was victualled but for one day's full meal.' Howard and Drake, after sharing all they had in their respective divisions, eked out as it had been by short rations, fish, and voluntary fasting, could provide their crews but with five scanty dinners and one breakfast more. The provisions said to be on the way had not arrived; and of powder,

¹ Notes from Flushing, August | says that two of them deserted to
3—13; MSS. Holland. Calderon | Lord Howard.

after all that Sussex had been able to furnish out of Dover Castle, they had only sufficient for one day's fighting. Burghley had laboured in vain with the Queen. He had tried to borrow money in the City, but his credit in the City had sunk with the appearance of the Spaniards;¹ and the prudent merchants had drawn their purse-strings till the cloud over the future should be raised. The treasury was not empty. There is no record that the half million of reserve had been touched. The Burgundian diamonds had been neither restored nor disposed of; but to the money and the jewels, which, as Howard said, would never save her, Elizabeth clung with the maddened grasp of passionate avarice. It was known that there was powder in the Tower. A messenger had galloped up from Dover stating the condition of the fleet, and pressing for an instant supply. The most tape-bound constitutional Government could not have sent a more helpless answer than Walsingham was obliged to return. The Admiral was lying with empty magazines, with an enemy twice his strength almost within gunshot, and he was required to specify exactly 'the proportion of shot and powder that he wanted.'²

Deserters may perhaps have comforted him with the knowledge that the Spaniards were no better provided; but Parma's magazines were at hand, and delay at all

¹ Burghley to Walsingham, July 19—29: MSS. Domestic.

² 'You write that I must specify the proportion of shot and powder that we want. Such is the uncertainty of the service, that no man can do it; therefore with all speed send as much as you can.'—Howard to Walsingham, July 29—August 8, MSS. Ibid.

events was ruin. Starvation, if nothing else, would drive every English ship from the seas in another week, and the Channel would be in the enemy's possession. Sunday was fine, with the wind still from the south-west. The boats of the Armada passed backwards and forwards between the galleons and Calais, bringing fresh vegetables, medicines, and other conveniences. In the afternoon, as the breeze freshened, five large English ships drove their anchors and fouled each other; but they were separated without serious hurt and securely moored again, and at five in the evening a council of war was held in Howard's cabin. Howard himself, with Sheffield, Seymour, Southwell, Palmer, Drake, Hawkins, Winter, Fenner, and Frobisher assembled, with the fate of England in their hands, to decide what to do. If we are to believe Camden, 'the foresight of Queen Elizabeth' prescribed the course which was resolved upon.

The Spanish fleet was anchored close on the edge of the shoal water, and to attack it where it lay was impossible. It was determined to drive them out into the Channel with fire-ships, of which they were known to be afraid. Sir Henry Palmer proposed to cross to Dover and fetch over some worthless hulks; but time would be lost, and there was not a day nor an hour to spare. Among the volunteer vessels which had attached themselves to the fleet there were many that would be useless in action, and as fit as the best for the service for which they were now needed. Eight were taken, the rigging smeared rapidly with pitch, the hulls filled with any useless material which could be extemporized that would contribute to the blaze. The sky was cloudy. The moon was late in its last quarter, and did not rise till morning; and the tide, towards midnight, set directly down from the English position to where the ships of the Armada, seeking shelter from the bend of the coast, lay huddled dangerously close. Long, low, sighing gusts from the westward promised the rising of a gale.¹ The crews of the condemned vessels undertook to pilot them to their destination, and then belay the sheets, lash the helm, fire, and leave them.

Thus, when the Spanish bells were about striking twelve, and, save the watch on deck, soldiers and seamen lay stretched in sleep, certain dark objects which had been seen dimly drifting on the tide near where the galleons lay thickest, shot suddenly into pyramids of light, flames leaping from ruddy sail to sail, flickering on the ropes, and forecastles, foremasts, and bowsprits a lurid blaze of conflagration.² A cool commander might have ordered out his boats and towed the fireships clear; but Medina Sidonia, with a strain already upon him beyond the strength of his capacity, saw coming upon him some terrible engines of destruction, like the floating mine which had shattered Parma's bridge at Ant-

¹ For the details of the scenes of the night and the following day I must refer generally to the letters of Howard, Drake, Winter, Tomson, Fenner, and others in the Record Office, and to four Spanish accounts, written by persons actually present, Coco Calderon, the Prince of Ascoli, Don Juan de Manrique, and one more whose name is not given, all of which are in MS. at Simancas.

² 'Y ellas ardiendo espantosamente.'—CALDERON.

werp. Panic spread through the entire Armada; the enemy they most dreaded was upon them. The galleons were each riding with two anchors; for their misfortune few of them were provided with a third. A shot was fired from the San Martin as a signal to cut or slip their cables and make to sea. Amidst cries and confusion, and lighted to their work by the blaze, they set sail and cleared away, congratulating themselves when they had reached the open water, and found that all or most of them were safe, on the skill with which they had defeated the machinations of the enemy. They lay-to six miles from shore, intending to return with the daylight, recover their anchors and resume their old position.

The English meanwhile, having accomplished at least part of their purpose in starting the Armada out of its berth, weighed at leisure, and stood off after it into the Channel, Drake, with half the fleet, hanging on the skirts of the Spaniards; Howard, with the rest, hovering nearer to Calais, endeavouring to drive in upon the sands or the fire-ships the last loiterers of the Armada which had been slower than the rest in getting out. The

July 29— first object which the Admiral saw at daybreak
August 8. was the largest of the four galleasses, with de Monçada himself on board, aground on Calais Bar. Her helm had been entangled in a cable, she had become ungovernable, and the tide had forced her ashore within shot of the French batteries at back of the sand-bank which forms the harbour. The tide had ebbed, the water was still round her, but she had fallen over towards the bank,¹ and Howard, whose notion was to 'pluck the feathers of the Spaniards one by one,'² sent his own launch with some other boats to take her. She was powerfully manned; between soldiers, sailors, and slaves, she carried seven hundred men. In the position in which she was lying however her large guns were useless, and the galley slaves, with the prospect of liberty before them, did not make the defence more easy. The Spaniards fought gallantly; several of the English were killed, but at last two musket-balls struck Monçada at the same moment. He fell dead on the deck. The slaves sprung overboard, and half in panic and half in pursuit, the crew and the troops followed. 'Some swam, some waded on shore, many were drowned.' The English swarmed up over the bulwarks, took possession of the galleass, and intended to wait for the tide to carry her off.

The French meanwhile were watching the scene in crowds from the top of the Rysbank. M. Gourdain, as the ship was on the French shore, might have disputed if he had pleased the lawfulness of the capture. He contented himself with sending off a boat with a message that the English deserved the spoil for their courage, and might have it; but the ship itself he required them to leave where it lay. The language was perfectly friendly, and Gourdain, having been appointed by the King, was better disposed to England than to Spain. National antipathy however proved too strong to be controlled. 'Our rude men,' says an English officer who was present, 'knowing no difference between friend and foe,' began to ill use the French who had come on board, 'spoiling them,' and probably pitching them into the sea. Their friends on shore took up their quarrel. The Rysbank battery opened upon the galleass in return, and the English had to scramble into their boats in haste, carrying with them what plunder they could seize.¹

¹ 'Por estar boleado de un lado.'

² Howard to Walsingham, July 29—August 8: MSS. Domestic.

It was well that no more time was wasted over so small a matter. Lord Howard had delayed already too long for his fame.² It was no time for the Admiral of the fleet to be loitering over a stray plume which had dropped from the enemy's wing, when every ship was imperiously needed for a far more important service. Medina Sidonia intended to return to his position at Calais. Drake, whose larger mind comprehended the position in its broader bearings, was determined not only that he should never see his anchors again, but that he should be driven north through the Narrow Seas. The wind was still rising and threatened a storm. He had seen enough of the sailing powers of the galleons to be assured that until it shifted they could make no way against it; and once in the North Sea, they would be in unknown waters without a harbour into which they could venture to run, and at all events poco que no hizo su deber. Toda la gloria se da á Drack.'—Extract of a letter from Calais, August 31: MSS. Simancas.

¹ R. Tomson to Walsingham, July 30—August 9: MSS. Domestic.

² 'Del Almirante se habla un for a time cut off from their communication with Dunkirk. They had drifted in the night further than they intended, and when the sun rose they were scattered over a large surface off Gravelines. Signals were sent up for them to collect and make back for Calais; but Drake with his own squadron, and Henry Seymour, with the squadron of the Straits, having the advantage of wind, speed, and skill, came on them while they were still dispersed. Seymour opened the action at eight in the morning with a cluster of galleons on the Spaniards' extreme right. Reserving their fire till within a hundred and twenty yards, and wasting no cartridges at any longer distance, the English ships continued through the entire forenoon to pour into them one continuous rain of shot. They were driven in upon their own centre, where they became entangled in a confused and helpless mass, a mere target to the English guns, Sir William Winter alone delivering five hundred shot into them, 'never out of harquebuz range, and often within speaking distance.'¹

Drake himself meanwhile had fallen on Medina Sidonia and Oquendo, who, with a score of galleons better handled than the rest, were endeavouring to keep sea room, and retain some command of themselves. But their wretched sailing powers put them at a disadvantage for which skill and courage could not compensate. The English were always to windward of them, and hemmed in at every turn, they too were forced back upon their consorts, hunted together as a shepherd hunts sheep upon a common, and the whole mass of them forced slowly towards the shoals and banks on the Flanders coast.

¹ Winter to Walsingham, August 1—11: MSS. Domestic.

Howard came up at noon to join in the work of destruction. The English accounts tell a simple story. The Spaniards' gun practice, which had been always bad, was helpless beyond past experience. Their want of ammunition was not suspected, for they continued to fire throughout the day after their slow awkward fashion; but their guns, worked on rolling platforms by soldiers unused to the sea, sent their shot into the air or into the water; while the English, themselves almost untouched, fired into them without intermission from eight in the morning till sunset, 'when almost the last cartridge was spent, and every man was weary with labour.' They took no prizes and attempted to take none. Their orders were to sink or destroy. They saw three large galleons go down. Three others, as the wind fell westerly, they saw reeling helplessly towards Ostend; and the fate of these they heard of afterwards; but of the general effect of the fire, neither at the time nor afterwards did they know anything beyond its practical and broad results. Some details however of that terrible day can be gathered from the narratives of the few Spaniards who fought through it and survived to tell the tale.

Being always to leeward and the wind blowing hard, the hulls of the galleons as they heeled over were exposed below the water-line. The massive timbers which were to have furnished so secure a shelter added only to the effect of the shot. The middle decks were turned into slaughter-houses, and in one ship blood was seen streaming from the lee scuppers. Their guns were most of them dismounted or knocked in pieces, and their chief work was to save themselves from sinking by nailing sheets of lead over the shot-holes. The action was on so large a scale, and there was so much smoke and confusion, that individuals could only see what was immediately near them. Don Pedro Coco Calderon, purser of the fleet, lay most of the day at the side of Medina Sidonia, himself exposed to the tempest of balls.¹ Alonzo da Leyva with the Rata was next to him, and close by were the San Matteo and the San Felipe, commanded by Don Diego de Pimentel and Don Francisco de Toledo. They were opposed to Drake in person, and frightful as was their disadvantage, they fought with conspicuous courage. With men falling in all directions, and heads and arms flying in the smoke, they still manned their maintops, keeping up a fire of musket-balls. Don Francisco finding, as he supposed, that the San Felipe was sinking, attempted to grapple with the English ship that was nearest to him. He had fought so well, that one of the English officers seeing his apparently desperate condition, sprung upon his forecastle and called to him in Spanish complimenting his valour, and bidding him save the lives of his brave crew by an honourable surrender. One of the Spaniards replied with a shot from a musket. The officer fell: the English ship filled her sails and backed away, leaving the San Felipe to her fate, the Spanish crew shouting after them that they were cowards and Lutheran hens, and daring them to come on once more.¹

¹ 'Sufriendo la tempestad de la carga de balazos.'

It was an idle bravado: soon after the San Felipe sent up signals of distress. A barque called the Doncella went to her assistance, but was herself shot through and through while the crew of the San Felipe were going on board her; and she filled so rapidly that they returned into their own galleon, made for the shore, and contrived to keep afloat till they touched the sands between Nieuport and Ostend. The Nieuport boatmen carried them into a friendly harbour, from whence they made their way to the Prince of Parma. The San Antonio of Padua, another of the three which the English observed to fall away, crawled into Ostend, where she was taken possession of by the English garrison. The San Matteo had a sadder fortune. She too, finding that she was filling, sent to Medina Sidonia for assistance. Medina Sidonia had work enough to save himself, and could not help her. She was put before the wind and followed the San Felipe, but falling more to leeward grounded between Ostend and the Sluys. She was seen by a Dutch lugger, and Lord Willoughby, who was in Flushing, sent three vessels to take possession of her. She again made a gallant fight, and for two hours kept at bay her new assailants, but

¹ 'Los nuestros llamandoles cobardes, y intimando con palabras feas su poco animo, llamandoles de galli-nas Luteranas y que volviesen á la batalla.'—CALDERON.

she was carried by boarding at last. Don Diego and two or three noblemen were reserved alive for their ransom ; all the rest, the survivors of five hundred who went into action in the morning, were either killed or flung into the sea. Among the bodies were found those of two English refugees, one of them a brother of Lord Montague.¹

Outside meanwhile the battle, if battle it could be called which was but the rending and tearing of a scarce resisting enemy, continued till evening. Towards sunset the wind shifted to the north-west with an increasing sea. The wounded ships were driving in a mass towards the banks, and, had the English powder held out for a few hours more, the entire Armada must have been either sunk or driven ashore.² Gun after gun however fell gradually silent. A few provision ships came off from the Thames with a day or two's rations. The men were exhausted with toil and hunger combined, and the fleet hauled off to take on board the supplies so sorely needed.

Sidonia, left to himself, extricated his miserable vessels, and made sail for the North Sea, the Santa Maria going down with all hands as the sun went under the horizon. When the ships' companies were called over, it was found that four thousand men had been killed or drowned. The wounded were not mentioned, but were perhaps at least as many more. The galleons pierced and shattered were leaking in all directions, the rigging cut up, the masts splintered, the sails torn, rudders, yards, and bowsprits shot away, and still more unfortunately, most of the water-butts destroyed. The men had been kept hard at work the day before cleaning and polishing up the guns. Through some accident they had missed their evening meal.¹ The fire-ships had spoilt their night's rest, and through the long day's desperate engagement there had been no leisure to serve out food. Nature could endure no more. To remain where they were was certain wreck, to attempt to recover Calais was to invite a fresh attack, and they fled away into the German Ocean, as close to the wind as their crippled state would bear, 'generally frightened and dismayed.'²

¹ Borlase to Walsingham, August 3—13: MSS. Holland.

² Captain White to Walsingham, August 8: MSS. Domestic.

The condition to which they were reduced was imperfectly conjectured by the English. Had the fairest weather come to their relief that English August ever knew, their crews could not have been induced to face Drake again, while they could scarcely have had round shot left to load each gun in the fleet for a single discharge. Howard, who had been present at but half the action, imagined that they 'were still wonderful great and strong.'³ Drake saw more clearly that 'the day's service had much appalled them,' and that some days at least would have to pass 'before Parma and Sidonia would shake hands.'⁴ Still it was thought certain

¹ 'A la noche quedó muy trabajada la gente por las muchas penas que se hicieron la noche de antes, ayudando á razar la artillería sin se les haber dado bastimento.'—CALDERON.

² Narrative of Juan de Licorno : MSS. Ireland.

³ Howard to Walsingham, July 29—August 8 : MSS. Domestic.

⁴ Drake to Walsingham, July 29—August 8 : MSS. Ibid.

that they would come back if they were not pursued, and though both Drake's and Howard's magazines were almost empty, and they believed those of the Spaniards to be full, they determined 'to put on a brag,' and 'give chase as though they had wanted nothing.'

Thus, when morning once more dawned on ^{July 30-} the miserable Armada, they again saw on their ^{August 9.} weather beam, almost within cannon-shot, and clinging to them like their shadow, the dreaded English fleet. It was the eve of St Lawrence's day, Philip's patron saint, whose precious shoulder-bone he had added to the treasures of the Escorial. But St Lawrence, though he might save his worshippers' souls in the other world, seemed to want either power or will to aid them in the present. To windward was the enemy, to leeward and clear within sight the seas were breaking on the endless shoals which fringe the low coast of Holland. The lead gave but seven fathoms, and for each mile they sailed the depth grew less and less, as the north-west wind edged them nearer to the line of yellow foam. Crippled as they were, their masts would not bear a weight of sail sufficient to draw them off. To tack was impossible; there was still room to wear round, but only to fall into the enemy's hands or venture another engagement. Pilots they had none. Their most experienced officers were gone. De Valdez and Francisco of Toledo were prisoners; Pimentel had been flung on the coast of Flanders; Monçada lay dead at Calais; Diego Florez, the Castilian Admiral, had lost heart and nerve. The men generally were sick with despondency, and a seaman, taken afterwards in Ireland, said if the English had that day offered to board them, they would all have struck.¹ Sidonia in his extremity summoned the young Miguel de Oquendo to advise him.

‘Señor Oquendo,’ he exclaimed, ‘what are we to do? We are lost—what are we to do?’

Oquendo gave a brave man’s answer.

‘Let Diego Florez talk of being lost;’ he said. ‘Let your Excellency bid me order up the cartridges.’²

An opportune shift of wind came to the Duke’s relief, sent, as was fondly imagined, by ‘the Lord.’ Swinging suddenly to the east it smoothed the sea, and lifted him away from the banks to the open water. The English being no longer to windward fell back, and the Spaniards, with scanty sail, and refitting as they could their shattered spars and stays, crawled out of danger. They had now a fair wind to return to Calais. The sea having gone down, Parma could come out of Dunkirk, and seeing the enemy retiring, Sidonia partially rallied his spirits and called a council of war. Martinez de Recalde, Diego Florez, Alonzo da Leyva, with the best of the sailing masters, and among them Coco Calderon, who tells the story, came on board the San Martin; and Diego Florez asked for the opinions of all of them, what it would be best to do? His own he probably indicated in the tone in which he put the question. There was

¹ Examination of Spanish prisoners, September 12—22: MSS. Ireland.

² ‘Á esta hora viendo el Duque á Oquendo que iba arribando sobre él, le dió, ‘¡O Señor Oquendo! ¿qué harémos? que somos perdidos.’ Y le respondió, ‘Digalo Diego Florez. Mande me V^{ra} Excellencia á munición de balas.’—CALDERON.

the alternative of a return into the Channel or a return to Spain by the Orkneys and Ireland. The first was the way of courage, the second of imagined safety, and they chose the last. The proud Castilian spirit which had presumed to match the world in arms was broken. A da Leyva or an Oquendo might prefer death to what they might deem dishonour. The common men would not face a repetition of the scene of the preceding day.

Calderon, who was an experienced navigator, said that the west of Ireland was dangerous; but terror of the English fleet was more real than the unsubstantial perils of an untried sea. He was overruled. The supply of water in the fleet was examined into, and a sufficient quantity to support life was allotted to each person, and all that day and all the next day, the Armada pursued its tedious way into the North Sea.

Howard too, with the change of wind, called his officers about him. The Prince of Parma depended for what he called 'the sinews of the enterprise,' on the Spanish troops which Sidonia was bringing, and he had made up his mind distinctly that cross he would not unless the Armada returned to support him. But the English only knew that Dunkirk was unguarded, the water smooth, and the defence of the country left to the incapacity of Leicester. It was decided that Lord Henry Seymour's squadron must return to its post in 'the narrow seas.' They waited till dark that their departure might not be seen by the Spaniards; and bitterly against their will, for another action was confidently looked for, though 'in a manner famished for want of victuals,' thirty vessels turned round outside Brill and made the best of their way back to the Straits. In a few hours the uncertain weather had again changed.

July 31— They were met by a returning south-wester
August 10. and were driven into Harwich; the Channel was once more made impassable, and the alarm on the score of Parma was at an end.

Meantime Drake and the Lord Admiral, with ninety sail and five days' provisions, clung to the rear of the enemy. 'We have the army of Spain before us,' wrote Drake to Walsingham, 'and mean, by the grace of God, to wrestle a fall with it. There was never anything pleased me better than seeing the enemy flying' with a southerly wind to the northwards. God grant ye have a good eye to the Duke of Parma, for with the grace of God, if we live, I doubt not ere it be long so to handle the matter with the Duke of Sidonia as he shall wish himself at St Mary Port among his orange trees.'¹

The Spaniards, finding that they were not attacked, and observing that the number of their pursuers was reduced, flattered themselves that the English too must have suffered severely in the action of Monday, and that if they were afraid themselves, they were also an object of fear.² The ignominy of returning to Spain, having

¹ July 31—August 10: MSS. Domestic.

² 'Relacion de lo sucedido á la real Armada.' A second narrative, not Calderon's, but also by an eyewitness. It was true that the English still considered the Spaniards formidable. 'Her Majesty's navy,' says an English officer, 'followed them always hard, but durst not accomplished nothing, became more obvious the more it was considered, and Sidonia once more began to gather up his courage, and to think again of trying to recover Calais.¹ But the black south-wester scattered his reviving spirits. Without pilots, in a strange sea, with the autumn storms prematurely upon him, and with no friendly port for which to run, he became utterly unmanned. The very elements had turned against him, the special prerogative of the Almighty, and he could think of nothing now but of hastening home by the ocean road, where, let the dangers be what they might, there were no English enemies in his path.

On therefore the Armada sped before the rising breeze, the English still following in expectation every moment that they would bear up and engage, and unable to believe that Castilians would yield so easily, and go back to their own country with dishonour and shame.² Harder and harder blew the wind, and as the sea rose, their distressed condition became more apparent. The pursuing fleet began now to pass drowned and drowning bodies of mules and horses flung over to save the scanty water-casks. More than one poor crippled ship dropped behind as her spars snapped, or the water made its way through her wounded seams in the straining seas. The Spaniards 'stricken,' it was now board them, because they are so high built so as forty of ours was troubled to take one of their greatest armadas at the fight on Monday.' — MSS.

Holland, August 3—13.

¹ 'A los 11, esperando buen

tiempo, se resolvió de volver nuestra Armada sobre el enemigo y tomarse á su puesto, volviendo la vuelta del Canal.'

² Howard to Walsingham, August 8—18: MSS. Domestica.

plain, 'with a wonderful fear,' made no attempt to succour their consorts, but passed on leaving them to founder.

Friday,
Aug. 2—12. Scotland. There had been some uneasiness about Lord Maxwell had been at Lisbon in the spring, and it was supposed that they might possibly be making for the Forth. But they passed on without attempting to enter it; and there seemed no probability that if they let the Forth escape them they would try for any other Scotch harbour. It was now blowing a gale. The English had but three days' provisions left, and to follow further so ill provided, with the prospect of a continuing storm, was to run into needless danger. Drake thought that the Armada would make for Denmark, refit in the Cattégat, and return at its leisure. Two pinnaces were detached to watch its course, and sending an express to London from Dunbar, to beg that food and ammunition might be despatched to Margate for them, they turned back before they were overtaken by famine. It was a sore disappointment, for they knew that, had they been fairly provided, not a Spanish ship would have carried home the tale of the Armada's discomfiture. The hope now was that the elements might complete the work of the guns. 'The long foul weather might be followed by a later summer.'¹ But if the gales continued to blow from the south-west, it was uncertain whether, torn and crippled as they were, they would be able to fetch Denmark. 'Their great ships were so light' that, even when sound and in fair weather, 'they could hardly bear their sails.' The climate of the North Sea was also likely to try the sailors who had been trained in lower latitudes, and the opinion in the English fleet, soundly formed as it proved, was 'that many of them would never see Spain again.'¹

¹ Seymour to the council, August 6—16: MSS. Domestic.

Hunger however was an enemy that would not fly. Storm or no storm, unless Howard could recover the Thames, his case would be as bad as Sidonia's; and he beat back in the face of the gale, Hawkins's spars and cordage standing proof against all trials. Off the Norfolk coast, the wind became so furious that the fleet was scattered. Howard, with the largest of the ships, reached Margate as he intended. Others were driven into Harwich, and rejoined him when the weather moderated. Aug. 10-20.

The greatest service ever done by an English fleet had been thus successfully accomplished by men whose wages had not been paid from the time of their engagement, half-starved, with their clothes in rags and falling off their backs,² and so ill-found in the necessaries of war that they had eked out their ammunition by what they could take in action from the enemy himself. 'In the desire for victory they had not stayed for the spoil

¹ Fenner to Walsingham, August 4-14: MSS. Domestic.

² 'It were marvellous good a thousand pounds' worth of hose, doublets, shoes, shirts, and such like were sent down with all expedition, else in a very short time I look to see most of the mariners go naked.'

—Howard to Burghley, August 10-20: MSS. Ibid.

of any of the ships that they lamed.’¹ There was no prize-money coming to them to reward their valour. Their own country was the prize for which they had fought and conquered. They had earned, if ever Englishmen had earned anywhere, the highest honour and the highest recompense which the Government could bestow.

The reward which in fact they received will be very briefly told. Food had been provided, and was sent down the river on the 9th—19th of August. The one month’s victuals taken in at Plymouth on the 23rd of June, had been stretched over seven weeks. The three days’ rations with which the fleet had left the Forth had been made to serve for eight days. Entire crews had thus been absolutely famishing. The next point to be determined was, if the ships were to be paid off, or were to remain in commission. ‘Sure bind, sure find,’ was the opinion of Lord Howard. It was still possible that the Armada might return. ‘A kingdom was a great wager, and security was dangerous, as they would have found had not God been their friend.’² Drake ‘would not advise her Majesty to hazard a kingdom with saving a little charge.’ ‘The Prince of Parma,’ he said, ‘was a bear robbed of his whelps; and for his credit’s sake, being so good a soldier, would try to do something.’³ The Queen, on the other hand, thought of nothing but the expense, and was only gust 8—18: MSS. Ibid.

¹ White to Walsingham, August 8—18: MSS. Domestic.

³ Drake to Walsingham, August

² Howard to Walsingham, August 8—18, 10—20.

eager to stop the drain on the exchequer at the earliest possible moment. The question was answered, and the uncertainty was ended, by causes independent of the will either of herself or her advisers. The strain of the last few months was taken off, and with it the spur to the hearts and spirits of the exhausted seamen. Even at Plymouth short food and poisonous drink had brought dysentery among them; and in one vessel, 'the Elizabeth Jonas, which had done as well as any ship in any service had ever done,' there had been 'a dangerous infection from the beginning.' Want of food, want of clothes, want of the relief, which if they had been paid their wages they might have provided for themselves, had aggravated the tendencies to disease, and a frightful mortality now set in through the entire fleet. Boatloads of poor fellows were carried on shore at Margate, and were laid down to die in the streets, 'there being no place in the town to receive them.' The officers did what they could. Howard's and Drake's purses were freely opened—some sort of shelter was provided at last in barns and outhouses; but the assistance which they could provide out of their personal resources was altogether inadequate. 'It would grieve any man's heart,' wrote Lord Howard, 'to see men who had served so valiantly to die so miserably.'¹

The fear of Parma's coming soon died away. In a few days news came that the camp at Dunkirk was broken up, the stores taken out of the transports, and the sailors paid off: the pinnaces sent in pursuit of the Armada returned with clear tidings that it had passed westward round the Orkneys; but the havoc among the brave men who had driven it from the shores of England became daily more and more terrible. They sickened one day: they died the next. In the battle before Gravelines not sixty in all had been killed: before a month was out, there was hardly a ship which had enough men left to weigh the anchors.¹ It was characteristic of the helplessness at head-quarters produced by Elizabeth's hardness, that, notwithstanding the disorder was traced definitely to the poisonous beer, it continued to be served out. Nothing better was allowed till it was consumed.² The sick required fresh meat and vegetables. Within a few hours as they were of London, they continued to be dieted with the usual salt beef and fish. The men expected that, at least, after such a service they would be paid their wages in full. The Queen was cavilling over the accounts, and would give no orders for money till she had demanded the meaning of every penny that she was charged. It was even necessary for Sir John Hawkins to remind the Government that the pay of those who died was still due to their relatives.³

¹ Howard to Burghley, August 10—20: MSS. Domestic.

¹ Howard to the council, August 22—September 1: MSS. Domestic.

² Howard to Walsingham, August 26—September 5: MSS. Ibid.

³ 'Your Lordship may think that by death, discharging of sick, &c. &c., something may be spared in the general pay. Those that die their friends require their pay. For those which are discharged, we take up fresh men, which breeds a far greater charge.'—Hawkins to Burghley, August 26—September 5: MSS. Ibid.

From the severe nature of the service, Lord Howard had been obliged to add to the ^{August—}September number of officers. He was challenged for the extra pay, and was obliged to petition for some small assistance from the Queen in defraying it himself. 'The matter is not great,' he said. 'Five hundred pounds, with the help of my own purse, will do it. However it fall out, I must see them paid.'¹

There had been expenses in the fleet which could not be avoided, and in the destitution in which he had been left, Howard had used three thousand pistoles out of the treasure taken in the ship of Pedro de Valdez. So keen an account was exacted of him that the Lord Admiral of England, the conqueror of the Armada, had to defend himself against a charge of peculation. 'I did take them,' he wrote to Walsingham, 'as I told you I would: for, by Jesus, I had not three pounds left in the world, and have not anything could get money in London—my plate was gone before. But I will repay it within ten days after my coming home. I pray you let her Majesty know so; and, by the Lord God of Heaven, I had not one crown more, and had it not been mere necessity I would not have touched one; but if I had not some to have bestowed upon some poor miserable men, I should have wished myself out of the world.'²

The worst meanness was yet to come. A surcharge appeared in the accounts of six hundred and twenty pounds, for 'extraordinary kinds of victual, wine, cider, sugar, oil, and fresh fish,' distributed among the ships while at Plymouth, by the order of Howard and Drake. The Lord Admiral explained that a few delicacies had been thought necessary for the relief of men who, being sick or wounded, might be unable to digest salt meat. He admitted that he had done what was unusual; he said that he had made the allowances 'in regard of the greatness of the service, for the encouragement of those on whose forwardness and courage success depended.' He might have added that their legitimate food had been stolen from them by the Queen's own neglect. He petitioned humbly that she would pass the charge. It is uncertain whether she consented or not. It is certain that a further sum for the same purpose Lord Howard felt obliged to take upon himself. He struck the entry out of his account book. 'I will myself make satisfaction as well as I may,' he said, 'so that her Majesty shall not be charged withal.'¹

¹ Howard to Burghley, August 26—September 5: MSS. Domestic. | ² Howard to Walsingham, August 27—September 6: MSS. Ibid.

Lord Howard perhaps, as a nobleman whose father had received large benefactions from the Crown, and to whom the Queen afterwards was moderately liberal, might be expected to contribute at a time of difficulty out of his private resources. The same excuse will not cover the treatment of Sir John Hawkins, who owed nothing to any crowned head, and was the architect of his own fortunes. Hawkins had not only been at the head of the dockyards, but he had been the person employed in collecting the ships' companies, and afterwards in settling the wages with them. No English vessels ever sailed out of port in better condition. No English sailors ever did their duty better. But Elizabeth had changed her mind so often in the spring, engaging seamen and then dismissing them, and then engaging others, that between charges and discharges, the accounts had naturally grown intricate. Hawkins worked hard to clear them, and spent his own fortune freely to make the figures satisfactory; but she, who had been herself the cause of the confusion, insisted on an exactness of statement which it was difficult if not impossible to give; and Hawkins, in a petition in which he described himself as a ruined man, sued for a year's respite to disentangle the disorder.¹

¹ Howard to Burghley, December, 1588: MSS. Domestic.

The two statesmen fared no better who had furnished the brain of England, while the fleet had been its right arm. Burghley and Walsingham were the soul of the policy which had placed Elizabeth in triumph at last at the head of Protestant Europe. For them, in the hour of victory, there was only abuse, scattered freely and in all presences. They who had never wavered, who had steadily advised a single course, who had never ceased to urge the necessity of providing in time for exigencies which they knew to be approaching—they it was who were made responsible for what had been wanting in the service, and for the shifts of purpose which had been the cause of the neglect. 'All irresolutions and lacks,' Cecil wrote to Walsingham, 'are thrown upon us two in all her speeches to everybody. The wrong is intolerable.'¹

¹ Petition of Sir John Hawkins, December 14—24: MSS. Domestic.

But did Elizabeth show, no consciousness of the glorious work which had been done for herself and for the commonwealth? Was there not one of those illustrious sons of England on whom as his Sovereign she conferred the honours which were due from his country's gratitude? It was not so altogether. The nation knew Elizabeth only by her public acts. The harassed hours of her ministers, the struggles by which the measures were forced out of her by which England had been barely saved, these of course were unrevealed to the world, and altogether undreamt of. The misery of the dying seamen was set down to the hand of God or to the incapacity of inferior officers. To her people she was always plausible; always to appearance frank and free-spoken. She was now the heroine of the hour. The wreath of victory which her subjects had won for her they laid at the feet of their Sovereign; and that Sovereign with gracious condescension, bestowed it upon her Leicester. Leicester had saved England, and England was required to do homage to the bravest of her sons. The Queen visited the favoured Earl at the camp at Tilbury. She rode along the lines of her army with Leicester at her side scattering gracious speeches which none better understood how to make than she, and then, as she had given the great seal to her second favourite, her 'Mutton,' Sir Christopher Hatton, on Leicester she meditated conferring the far more serious office of Lieutenant-General of England and Ireland. The letters patent were drawn out, and would have been issued, so Camden says, but for the remonstrances of Cecil and Hatton, and for misgivings excited at the last moment in herself, on the prudence of the wild act which she was meditating.¹

¹ Burghley to Walsingham, November, 1588: MSS. Domestic.

Her fondness likely enough would have carried the day in the end, had not the Earl, at the moment of his anticipated greatness, suddenly died. Scandal of course suggested poison ; more authentic evidence says that he was carried off by a fever on his way to Kenilworth.

England was too much occupied with him while alive, and English history may cut short his epitaph. Though he was credited with a thousand crimes, his real guilt was probably limited to connivance after the event at one only of serious magnitude. Lady Robert Dudley was undoubtedly murdered by officious or ambitious servants to clear a way for him to the Crown ; and both he and the Queen were too happy in the possibility which had thus been opened to them to insist on a strict investigation. They did not obtain their desires, and bloodstains from the Cumnor tragedy clung to the skirts of both of them. Elizabeth undoubtedly loved Leicester. Although his claims to affection reached no further than a handsome face, he was the only person for whom she really cared, and many of the obliquities of her character may be traced to her disappointment. But it is to misread Elizabeth to suppose that her relations with him were other than those which are technically called honourable. After a brief alarm at the beginning of her reign, no intelligent layman in Europe suspected that there was anything seriously wrong between them. It answered the purpose of the Jesuits to scatter charges of sexual delinquency against a woman whom they had failed to murder. No dirt sticks more readily than an accusation of this kind when boldly and positively insisted on, and they wished to make her hateful to the world. But Elizabeth was not a person who would have felt temptations to unchastity. Surrounded as she was by a thousand malignant eyes, she could not have escaped detection had she really committed herself, and that the evidence against her has to be looked for in the polemical pamphlets of theologians would alone prove that the suspicion was without ground.

¹ Camden.

Enough of this and enough of Leicester. It is time to return to the flying Armada.

Saturday, When Howard bore up for the Forth the Aug. 3—13. Spaniards for the first time breathed freely, and began to examine into their condition. An inquiry was held on board the San Martin into the causes of their misfortunes. Officers who had shown cowardice in action were degraded, and set to row in the galleasses; and Don Christobal de Avila, captain of the Santa Barbara, was hanged.¹ The stores had probably been injured by the salt water which had made its way through the shot-holes. In some ships the wine as well as the water-casks had been pierced, and it was found necessary to reduce the allowances throughout the fleet. Eight ounces of bread, half a pint of wine, and a pint of water, was all that could be afforded for each man. Sidonia promised two thousand ducats to a French pilot if he would bring the Armada into a Spanish port. Calderon sketched a chart of the route which he submitted to the Duke's council. The wounded began to fail rapidly, and each day in every galleon there was the sad ceremony of flinging the dead into the sea. Calderon's ship contained the medicines and delicacies for the sick, and passing daily from galleon to galleon, he knew the condition of them all.

¹ Calderon.

Of the hundred and fifty sail which had left Coruña, a hundred and twenty could still be counted when Howard left them. For five days they were ^{Aug. 3-13} in the gale which he met on his way back to ^{to 8-18.} the Thames, and which he described as so peculiarly violent. The unusual cold brought with it fog and mist, and amidst squalls and driving showers, and a sea growing wilder as they passed the shelter of the Scotch coast, they lost sight of each other for nearly a week. On the 9th-19th, the sky lifted, and Calderon found himself with the Almirante of Don Martinez de Recalde, the galleon of Don Alonzo, the San Marcos and twelve other vessels. Sick signals were flying all round, and the sea was so high that it was scarcely possible to lower a boat. The large ships were rolling heavily. Their wounded sails had been split by the gusts, and masts and yards carried away. That night it again blew hard. The fog closed in once more, and the next morning Calderon was alone in the open sea without a sail in sight, having passed between the Orkneys and the Shetlands. Recalde and da Leyva had disappeared with their consorts, having as Calderon conjectured gone north. He himself stood on west and south-west. On the 12th—22nd, Aug. 13— he saw a number of sails on the horizon; on 23. the 13th—23rd he found himself with Sidonia and the body of the fleet; and Sidonia signalled to him to come on board. Observations showed that they were then in $58^{\circ} 30'$ North latitude. Their longitude they did not know. They were probably a hundred and fifty miles west north-west of Cape Wrath. Sidonia asked anxiously for Recalde and da Leyva. Calderon could but say where he had last seen them. He supposed that they had gone to the Faroe Isles or to Iceland, where there were German fishing stations which had a trade with Spain.

Again a council was held. The sickness had become frightful. Those who had escaped unwounded were falling ill from want and cold, and the wounded were dying by hundreds, the incessant storms making care and attention impossible. Calderon and the French pilot insisted that at all costs and hazards they must keep off the Irish coast. Diego Florez, distressed for the misery of the men, to whose sufferings want of water had become a fearful aggravation, imagined that along the west shore there must be a harbour somewhere; and that they would find rest and shelter among a hospitable Catholic people. The Bishop of Killaloe, a young Fitzmaurice, and a number of Irish friars were in the fleet. Diego Florez had possibly heard them speak of their country and countrymen, and there were fishing connections between Cadiz and Valencia and Galway, which he and many others must have known of, though they had not been on the coast in person. But the Irish themselves were with Alonzo da Leyva, and Sidonia happily took the opinion of the pilots. The day was fine and the sick were divided; those which could be moved were transferred wherever there was most room for them, and as Calderon passed to and fro among the galleons with his medicines and his arrowroot, he was received everywhere with the eager question, where was Alonzo da Leyva? There was scarcely a man who did not forget his own wretchedness in anxiety for the idol of them all.

The calm had been but an interlude in the storm. The same night the wild west wind came down once more, and for eleven consecutive days they went on in their misery,¹ unable to communicate except by signals, holding to the ocean as far as their sailing powers would let them, and seeing galleon after galleon, Oquendos among them, falling away to leeward amidst driving squalls and rain, on the vast rollers of the Atlantic. An island, which he supposed to be ten leagues from the coast, Calderon passed dangerously near. It was perhaps Achill, whose tremendous cliffs fall sheer two thousand feet into the sea, or perhaps Innisbofin or Innishark. On the 4th—14th of September, he September. with Sidonia and fifty vessels, fifty-two ships only out of a hundred and fifty, leaking through every seam, and their weary crews ready to lie down and die from exhaustion, crawled past the Blaskets, and were out of danger.

¹ 'Anduvimos perdidos.'

And where were all the rest? Thirty, large and small, had been sunk or taken in the Channel. There remained nearly seventy to be still accounted for.

Don Martinez and da Leyva, with five and twenty of them, had steered north after passing the Orkneys. They went on to latitude 62°, meaning, as Calderon had rightly conjectured, to make for the settlement in Iceland. They had suffered so severely in the action, that they probably doubted their ability to reach Spain at all. The storms however, which grew worse as the air became colder, obliged them to abandon their intention. One galleon was driven on the Faroe Isles; the rest turned about, and, probably misled by the Irish, made for the Shannon or Galway. As they braced to the wind, their torn rigging gave way; spar after spar, sail after sail, was carried away. Those which had suffered most dropped first to leeward. A second was lost on the Orkneys; a third fell down the coast of Scotland, and drifted on the Isle of Mull. It was one of the largest ships in the whole fleet. The commander (his name is unknown) was a grandee of the first rank, always 'served in silver.'¹ He had made his way into some kind of harbour where he was safe from the elements ; but the Irish Scots of the Western Isles were tempted by the reports of the wealth which he had with him. The fainting crew could not defend themselves, and the ship was fired and burnt, with almost every one that it contained.¹

¹ Ashley to Walsingham, November 13: MSS. Scotland.

Their companions holding a better, but only rather better course, rolled along upon the back of Ireland, groping for the hoped-for shelter. The coming of the Spaniards had been long dreamt of by the Irish as the era of their deliverance from tyranny. It had been feared as their most serious danger by the scanty English garrison. The result of the fight in the Channel, if known at all, was known only by vague report ; and the country was thrown into a ferment of excitement, when, in the first week of September, Spanish sails were reported in numbers as seen along the western coast, off Donegal, off Sligo, in Clew Bay, at the mouth of the Shannon ; in fact everywhere.

At first there was a universal panic. Seven ships were at Carrigafoyle. The Mayor of Limerick, in sending word of their appearance to the council, converted them into seven score. Twenty-four men were said to have landed at Tralee. Sir William Fitzwilliam, who had returned to be Deputy, and was more infirm and incapable than ever, described them as twenty-four galleons.² Rumour gradually took more authentic form. Beyond doubt, Spaniards were on the coast, distressed, but likely notwithstanding to be extremely dangerous, if they were allowed to land in safety, and to distribute arms and powder among the Irish clans. With one consent, but without communicating with each other, the English officers seem to have concluded that there was but one course for them to pursue. The party at Tralee were Sidonia's household servants, who had been driven into the bay in a small frigate, had surrendered, and had been brought on shore half dead. They begged hard for life; they had friends at Waterford, they said, who would pay a handsome ransom for them. But fear and weakness could not afford to be magnanimous. Sir Edward Denny, who commanded at Tralee Castle, gave orders for their execution, and they were all put to the sword.

¹ Ashley to Walsingham, November 13 : MSS. Scotland.

² Fitzwilliam to the council, September 10—20 : MSS. Ireland.

Two days before, two large galleons had rounded the point of Kerry, and had put into Dingle. They belonged to Recalde's squadron: one of them was the Almirante herself, with Don Martinez on board, who was dying from toil and anxiety. They wanted water; they had not a drop on board, but the dregs of the putrid puddle which they had brought with them from Spain; and they sent boats on shore to beg for a supply. It was the same Dingle where Sanders and Fitzmaurice had landed eight years before, with processions and incense, and the Papal banner displayed—the sacred spot of Catholic Ireland. Now the ships of the Most Catholic King, which had come to fight the Irish battle as well as their own, pleaded in vain to be allowed to fill their water-casks. The boats' crews gave so piteous an account of Recalde's condition, the Catholic cause was so clearly now the losing one, that it was decided they should have no relief at Dingle. It was already a spot of tragical memory to the Spaniards. The boats were seized, the men who had landed imprisoned, and those on board the galleons, hunted already within a hair's-breadth of destruction, and with death making daily havoc among them, hoisted their ragged sails, and went again to sea.¹

¹ News from Tralee, September 9—19: MSS. Ireland.

Another galleon of a thousand tons, named Our Lady of the Rosary, which Calderon had watched sadly falling away before the waves, had also nearly weathered the headland of Kerry. She had all but escaped. Clear of the enormous cliffs of the Blasket Islands, she had no more to fear from the sea. Between the Blaskets and the mainland there is a passage which is safe in moderate weather, but the gale, which had slightly moderated, had risen again. The waves as they

¹ Emanuel Fremoso, one of the prisoners taken at Dingle, thus describes the condition of Recalde's galleon :—

'There died four or five in the ship every day of hunger and thirst, and yet this ship was one of the best furnished for victuals which he knoweth, for out of some other ship people were sent to be relieved out of this ship. There remain five hundred men, one hundred of them are very sick, and do lie down and die daily, all the rest very weak, and the captain very sad and weak. Twenty-five pipes of wine are left in the ship, and very little bread, and no water, but what they brought out of Spain, which stinketh marvellously, and their flesh meat they cannot eat, the drought is so great. No part of the navy touched land anywhere or had any relief of water since the English fleet left them.'—Examination of Prisoners, September 12—22 : MSS. Ireland.

roll in from the Atlantic on the shallowing shores of Ireland boil among the rocks in bad weather with a fury unsurpassed in any part of the ocean. Strong tidal currents add to the danger, and when Our Lady of the Rosary entered the sound, it was a cauldron of boiling foam. There were scarcely hands to Sept. 10—20. work the sails. Out of seven hundred, five hundred were dead, and most of the survivors were gentlemen, and before she was half way through, she struck among the breakers upon the island. A maddened officer ran the pilot (a Genoese) through the heart, 'saying he had done it by treason.' Some of the gentlemen tried to launch a boat, but no boat could live for a moment in such a sea. The pilot's son lashed himself to a plank, and was washed on shore alone of the whole company, and all the rest lay among cannon and doubloon chests amidst the rocks in Blasket Sound.¹

The same 10th of September witnessed another and more tremendous catastrophe in Thomond. The seven ships in the mouth of the Shannon sent their cockboats with white flags into Kilrush, asking permission for the men to come on land. There were no English there, but there were local authorities who knew that the English would hold them answerable, and the request was refused. Here, as everywhere, the Spaniards' passionate cry was for water. They offered a butt of wine for every cask of water; they offered money in any quantity that the people could ask. Finally, they offered the Sheriff of Clare 'a great ship, with all its ordnance and furniture,' for license to take as much water as would serve their wants. All was in vain. The Sheriff was afraid of an English gallows, and not one drop could the miserable men obtain for themselves by prayer or purchase. They were too feeble to attempt force. A galleass landed a few men, but they were driven back empty-handed ; so abandoning and burning one of the galleons which was no longer seaworthy, the other six went despairingly out into the ocean again. But it was only to encounter their fate in a swifter form. They were caught in the same gale which had destroyed Our Lady of the Rosary. They were dashed to pieces on the rocks of Clare, and out of all their crews a hundred and fifty men struggled through the surf, to be carried as prisoners immediately to Galway.

¹ Deposition of Juan Antonio of land. Sir H. Wallop to Burghley, Genoa, September, 1580: MSS. Ire- | September 16—26: Ibid.

Two other galleons were seen at the Isle of Arran. The end of one was unknown, save that it never returned to Spain. The other, commanded by Don Lewis of Cordova, who had his nephew and several other Spanish nobles with him, threatened to founder, and Don Lewis, trusting to the Spanish connections of Galway, carried her up opposite to the town, and sent a strong party, or what would have been a strong party had it been composed of healthy men and not of tottering skeletons, to the quay. They were made prisoners on the spot, and Don Lewis, under whose eyes they were taken, offered to surrender, if he could have a promise of life for himself and his companions. The Mayor said that they must give up their arms. While they were hesitating, they saw the Irish snatching the chains and tearing off the clothes of their comrades, and with feeble hands they attempted to weigh their anchor and go back into the bay. But it could not be. They dropped at their work, and could not rise again. The Mayor took possession of the ship, and sent the crew into the castle, so exhausted that they could not swallow the food which was given them, 'but cast it up again.'¹

Other vessels went on shore at different points of Connemara. Sir Richard Bingham, the Governor of Connaught, sent round orders that every one who came to land alive must be brought into Galway. Armed searching parties were detached through Clare and Connemara, to see that the command was obeyed; and several hundred half-dead wretches were added to those who had been already taken. Bingham was a fine soldier and a humane man, and that he could see but one way of dealing with so large and so dangerous a body of prisoners, must be accepted as some evidence that nothing else could have been easily done with them. Rest and food would only give them back their strength, and the feeble garrisons were scarce in sufficient strength to restrain the Irish alone. Directions were therefore given that they should be all put to death, and every one of the unfortunate creatures was deliberately shot or hanged, except Don Lewis and nine others, whose ransoms, it was hoped, might be found valuable. George

¹ Fenton to Burghley, September 19—29: MSS. Ireland.

Bingham, Sir Richard's son, or brother, went up into Mayo to see the same work done there also ; and ' thus,' wrote Sir Richard himself, ' having ^{Sept. 15-25.} made a clean dispatch of them, both in town and country, we rested Sunday all day, giving praise and thanks to Almighty God for her Majesty's most happy success and deliverance from her dangerous enemies.'¹ Don Lewis, with his nephew, and the rest whose lives had been spared, were ordered to Drogheda, to be carried thence to England. Don Lewis only arrived : the others either died on the road, or being unable to march, were killed by their escort to save the trouble of carrying them.

Young Bingham's presence proved unnecessary in Mayo. The native Irish themselves had spared him all trouble in inquiring after prisoners. The fear that they might show sympathy with the Spaniards was well founded, so long as there was a hope that the Spaniards' side might be the winning one ; but as the tale of their defeat spread abroad, and the knowledge with it that they were too enfeebled to defend themselves, the ties of a common creed and a common enmity to England were not strong enough to overcome the temptation to plunder. The Castilian gentlemen were richly dressed, and their velvet coats and gold chains were an irresistible attraction. The galleon of Don Pedro de Mendoza had made Clew Bay in a sinking state, and was brought up behind Clare Island. Don Pedro went ashore with a hundred companions, carrying his chests of treasures with him. The galleon was overtaken by the gale of the 10th of September, which had made the havoc at the mouth of the Shannon. She was dashed on the rocks, and all who had been left on board were drowned. 'Dowdany O'Malley, chief of the island,' completed the work, by setting upon Don Pedro and the rest. They were killed to the last man, and their treasure taken.¹

¹ Narrative of Sir R. Bingham, September, 1588 : MSS. Ireland.

A consort of Don Pedro was driven past Clare Island into the bay, and wrecked at Burrishoole. The savages flocked like wolves to the shore. The galleon went to pieces. The crew were flung on the sands, some drowned, some struggling still for life; but whether they were dead or alive made no difference to the hungry rascals who were watching to prey upon them. A stroke of a club brought all to a common state, and, stripped of the finery which had been their destruction, they were left to the wash of the tide.

More appalling still, like the desolation caused by some enormous flood or earthquake, was the scene between Sligo and Ballyshannon. A glance at the map will explain why there was a concentration of havoc on those few miles of coast. The coast of Mayo trends directly westward from Sligo for seventy miles, and crippled vessels, which had fallen upon a lee shore, were met by a wall of cliff, stretching across their course for a degree and a half of longitude. Their officers had possibly heard that there was shelter somewhere in the bay. Many ships were observed for days hovering between Rossan Point and Killala; but without experienced pilots they could not have found their way in the finest weather among the shoals and islands. They too were overtaken by the same great storm. The numbers that perished are unknown; there are no means to distinguish between those that foundered out in deep water and those that went to pieces on the beach. The actual scene however, as described by two English witnesses, was as frightful as human eye ever looked upon.

¹ Narrative of Sir Richard Bingham, September, 1588; MSS. Ireland.

‘When I was at Sligo,’ wrote Sir Geoffrey Fenton, ‘I numbered on one strand of less than five miles in length, eleven hundred dead bodies of men, which the sea had driven upon the shore. The country people told me the like was in other places, though not to the like number.’¹

Sir William Fitzwilliam made a progress to the west coast from Dublin shortly after. ‘As I passed from Sligo,’ he said, ‘I held on towards Bundroys,² and so to Ballyshannon, the uttermost part of Connaught that way. I went to see the bay where some of those ships were wrecked, and where, as I heard, lay not long before twelve or thirteen hundred of the dead bodies. I rode along upon that strand near two miles, but left behind me a long mile or more, and then turned off from the shore, leaving before me a mile and better; in both which places they said that had seen it, there lay as great store of the timber of wrecked ships as was in that place which myself had viewed; being, in my opinion, more than would have built five of the greatest ships that ever I saw, besides mighty great boats, cables and other cordage answerable thereunto, and some such masts for bigness and length as I never saw any two could make the like.’¹

¹ Fenton to Burghley, October 28: MSS. Ireland.

² Bundroys Castle, at the mouth of the Erne.

The sea was not answerable for all. The cruelty of nature was imitated by the cruelty of man, and those lines of bodies showed gashes on them not made by rock or splintered spar. ‘The miseries they sustained upon this coast,’ wrote Sir George Carew, ‘are to be pitied in any but Spaniards. Of those that came to the land by swimming or enforced thereto by famine, very near three thousand were slain.’² ‘They were so miserably distressed coming to land,’ reported another, ‘that one man, named Melaghlin M‘Cabbe, killed eighty with his gallowglass axe.’³ The nobler or wiser O’Neil wrung his hands over the disgrace of his country, but could not hinder it;⁴ and the English looked on with a not unnatural satisfaction at work which was dissolving in murder an alliance which they had so much cause to fear.

‘The blood which the Irish have drawn upon them,’ said Sir George Carew, ‘doth assure her Majesty of better obedience to come, for that friendship being broken, they have no other stranger to trust to. This

¹ Fitzwilliam to the English council, December 31; MSS. Ireland.

² Carew to Walsingham, September 18—28; MSS. Ibid.

³ Edward White to Sir Nicholas White, September 12; MSS. Ibid.

⁴ ‘O’Neil bitterly reproached O’Donnell for doing service against the Spaniards, as the best friends that Ireland has.’—Fenton to the council, October 7; MSS. Ibid.

people was very doubtful before the victory was known to be her Majesty's, but when they saw the great distress and weakness that the enemy was in, they did not only put as many as they could to the sword, but are ready with all their forces to attend the Deputy in any service. The ancient love between Ireland and Spain is broken.'¹

'God,' concluded Fenton, 'hath wrought for her Majesty against these idolatrous enemies, and suffered this nation to blood their hands upon them, whereby, it may be hoped, is drawn perpetual diffidence between the Spaniards and them, as long as this memory endureth.'²

The harvest was reaped by the Irish. Sir Richard Bingham and his kindred were at hand to glean the ears that were left. Including the execution at Galway, Bingham claimed to have killed eleven hundred. 'Divers gentlemen of quality' had been spared for their ransom, but special orders came down from Dublin to execute all, and the gentlemen followed the rest. Of the whole number that fell into the hands of the English, Don Lewis of Cordova was the only survivor.³

Such was the fate of the brilliant chivalry of Spain; the choicest representatives of the most illustrious families in Europe. They had rushed into the service

¹ Carew to Burghley, September 18: MSS. Ireland.

² Fenton to Burghley, September 19: MSS. Ibid.

³ Sir R. Bingham to the Queen, December 3: MSS. Ibid. Camden reduces the number put to death to two hundred, and adds that the Queen 'condemned the execution of these, as a matter full of cruelty.' The language both of Bingham and Fitzwilliam shows that up to December no expression of disapproval had reached them.

with an emotion pure and generous as ever sent Templar to the Sepulchre of Christ. They believed that they were the soldiers of the Almighty. Pope and Bishop had commended them to the charge of the angels and the saints. The spell of the names of the Apostles had been shattered by English cannon. The elements, which were deemed God's peculiar province—as if to disenchant Christendom, were disenchantment possible, of so fond an illusion—whirled them upon a shore which the waves of a hundred million years had made the most dangerous in the world; there as they crawled half drowned through the surf to fall into the jaws of the Irish wolves.

One more tragical story remains to be told. When Calderon recovered the main body of the fleet off Cape Wrath, and the anxious question was asked him from every ship, Where was Alonzo da Leyva?—it was not for da Leyva's sake alone, though no officer in the Armada was more loved and honoured; it was because the freight of the vessel which bore him was more than usually precious. The noblest youths in Castile, whose families had been hardly persuaded to let them accompany the expedition, had been placed specially under Don Alonzo's care. His ship had been in the thickest of every fight. She had suffered severely and could not bear her sails. She had not gone north with Recalde when Calderon left her; but with another galleon she had drifted away to leeward. With extreme difficulty she had cleared the extreme point of Mayo, but unable to go further she had made her way into Blacksod Bay, and anchored outside Ballycroy. That she had reached so intricate a spot undestroyed was perhaps explained by the presence on board of young Maurice Fitzgerald, the son of Sir James 'the traitor,' whose pirate habits may have taught him many secrets of the western coast. Fitzgerald died while she lay there, and 'was cast into the sea in a cypress chest with great solemnity.'¹ It was the country of the MacWilliams, the home and nest of the famous Granny O'Malley. Fourteen Italians were set on shore to try the disposition of the people. They fell in with one Richard Burke, called 'the Devil's Hook,' or 'Devil's Son,' perhaps one of Granny's own brood, who robbed them and took them prisoners. This was on the 9th of September. In the storm of the 10th the ship, which had left her best anchors at Calais, fell helplessly on shore. The sea was broken by a headland which covers the bay; da Leyva and his companions reached the sands, and were able to carry arms with them. They found an old castle at no great distance from the water and attempted to put it in a state of defence. Report said that Sidonia himself was in this party. Bingham was making haste to the spot when he heard that they had re-embarked in another galleon, and were beating out again to sea. The south-west wind was still so heavy that it was thought impossible they could escape. Many shots were heard from the offing the night after they sailed, and the ship with all it contained was supposed to have gone to the bottom. The galleon was left to be plundered. Casks of wine and oil were rolled on shore. Trunks and mails of the young hidalgos were dragged out and rifled by the experienced 'Devil's Hook,' and the sands of Ballycroy were strewed with velvets and gold brocade. The Sheriff came to the rescue in the Queen's name; but the jackals were too strong for him, or the constables put on jackals' skins and scrambled with the rest for the prey. Not a rag or a coin was rescued.

¹ Narrative of Sir R. Bingham.

Meanwhile the shots were not da Leyva's, but came from another straggler which was dashed in pieces upon the rocks of Erris. Da Leyva, finding the wind heading him, had determined to run back and try for Scotland, trusting rather to the humanity of the heretic James than to the orthodox cruelties of the Irish. He fell in with a second galleon off the coast, and the last of the four galleasses, and together they laboured hard to draw off from the shore. But Rossan Point stood out too far for them to clear, and they made for Callibeg or Killibeg harbour. The galleass got in 'sore broken,' but still able to float. The two galleons ran on the rocks at the opening, and da Leyva was wrecked a second time.

Again however no lives were lost. Fourteen hundred men from the ships got safe on land. The galleass contained six hundred more, and they were all well provided with arms. Arms however were not food; and they were starving. The Bishop of Killaloe and an Irish friar who had been with Don Alonzo and had been saved with the rest, undertook that they should be hospitably treated, and a few hundreds of them marched inland with the Bishop for a guide. They fell in with a party of Anglo-Irish sent by Fitzwilliam from the Pale, and led by two brothers named Ovington. It was night; the Ovingtons fell upon them, killed twenty and wounded more. In the morning they found they were dealing with men who were half dead already. The Spaniards had laid down their harquebusses and had not strength to lift them again. 'The best,' it was observed, 'seemed to carry some kind of majesty; the rest were men of great calling.'¹ Perhaps natural pity—perhaps the fear of O'Neil who was in the neighbourhood—perhaps respect for the Bishop, so far influenced the Ovingtons that they did not kill them. They contented themselves with stripping some of them naked and letting them go.

In the extreme north of Ulster—where O'Neil and O'Donnell were still virtual sovereigns, where the MacSweenies ruled under them with feudal authority and appear in the Elizabethan maps as giants sitting in mail upon their mountains, battleaxe in hand—the fear of the English was less felt than in other parts of Ireland. O'Neil, who was furious at the savagery which had been perpetrated on the coast, when he heard of these new comers, sent order that the strangers should be hospitably entertained; and, escaped out of the hands of the Ovingtons, both the party that they had fallen in with and those which remained at Callibeg were supplied with food, and allowed to rest and recover themselves. O'Neil was not at the time in rebellion. Fitzwilliam sent a command that every Spaniard who had landed should be taken or killed. O'Neil sheltered, fed, and clothed his guests till they had recovered strength, and then pretended that they were too powerful for him to meddle with. It was suspected that he meant to use their services in an insurrection, and two thousand soldiers were shipped in hot haste from England to make head against them.

¹ Richard and Henry Ovington to the Deputy, September 14: MSS. Ireland.

But if the Irish chief had any such intention, da Leyva did not encourage it. His one thought was to escape, if escape were possible, from a country which had been the scene of such horrible calamities to Spain, and to carry back the precious treasures which had been intrusted to his care. Either for this reason, or influenced privately by threats or promises from Fitzwilliam, MacSweeny Banagh, on whom the Spaniards depended for their meat, began after a few weeks to shorten the supplies.¹ The galleass at Callibeg—she was called the Gerona—was not hopelessly unseaworthy. The October weather appeared to have settled, and Don Alonzo had repaired her so far that he thought she could carry him safely to the western isles of Scotland. She would hold but half the party; but many of the Spaniards had found friends in Ulster who undertook to take care of them through the winter months, and had no objection to be left behind. The rest, with Don

¹ 'They are like to famish for more beeves and mutton.'—Pat Eu-
want of meat. MacSweeny will not | stance to Sir H. Bagenall, October suffer his country to sell them no | 14: MSS. Ireland.

Alonzo at their head, prepared to tempt once more the fortunes of the sea. He had been hurt in the leg by a capstan when the galleon went on the rocks, and was still unable to walk. He was carried on board; and in the middle of October the Gerona sailed. She crept October. along the coast for several days without misadventure. Rossan Point was passed safely, and Tory Island, and Lough Swilly, and Lough Foyle. The worst of the voyage was over; a few hours more and they would have been saved. But the doom of the Armada was on them. They struck upon a rock off Dunluce; the galleass broke in pieces, and only five out of the whole number were saved. Thrice wrecked, Don Alonzo and the young Castilian lords perished at last. Two hundred and sixty of their bodies were washed ashore and committed undistinguished to the grave.¹

With this concluding catastrophe the tragedy of the Armada in Ireland was ended. It was calculated that in the month of September alone, before da Leyva and his companions were added to the list, eight thousand Spaniards perished between the Giant's Causeway and Blasket Sound:² eleven hundred were put to death by Bingham; three thousand were murdered by the Irish; the rest, more fortunate, were drowned.

But the tale of misery was still incomplete, and those who seemed to have escaped were attended to the last by the same strange fatality. The ships which remained with Sidonia, and succeeded in weathering Kerry, made all sail for Spain, and the wind still hanging to the south of west, they were still obliged to keep as close to it as possible, and dragged on but slowly. They passed Cape Clear in company on the 4th—14th of September, after which each vessel shifted for itself with general directions to make if possible for Coruña.

¹ Don Alonzo, who was the object of so much interest, was described by an Irishman who spoke to him as 'tall, slender, of pale complexion, flaxen and smooth hair, behaviour mild and temperate, of speech good and deliberate, greatly revered by his men.'—MSS. Ireland, December.

² Sir Wm. Fitzwilliam to Walsingham, September 30: MSS. Ibid.

September. Calderon held his course till the 12th—

22nd, when his last drop of water was consumed. The wind and the sea showed no signs of abatement, and the remains of his crew, wearied and worn out, could no longer work the vessel. He had lost his reckoning, and only knew that he was somewhere in the Bay of Biscay. He had made up his mind to run before the wind, and take his chance of the land to which it would carry him, when towards evening he saw a ship crawling along, having lost her topmasts. She fired a gun, to which Calderon replied. She proved to be one of the finest of the galleons, though so shattered that he had not recognized her. He learned however from her captain that the coast of Spain was but a few leagues distant, and that Santander lay directly under their lee. They both reached the harbour there the next evening. Sidonia had arrived the day before, and one after another the survivors dropped in throughout the following week. Recalde only, with the other vessel which was with him in Dingle, succeeded in fetching Coruña; some were as far to leeward as St Sebastian. Fifty-four vessels in all came back, and between nine and ten thousand still living men. So wretched was their state, that an officer sent from Madrid said that it was piteous to see them.¹ Foul and stinking as the ships were, the crews were obliged, at Santander, to remain in their berths at the risk of pestilence, for there was no hospital large enough to receive so many, and the owners of private houses feared infection. Sidonia abandoned himself to misery, shut himself up in his room, refusing to attend to business, and as soon as he could move, fled and hid himself in his country house. At St Sebastian and at Coruña an accident, singularly the same at both places, finished the horror of the story.

‘At the Groyne’ [Coruña], wrote a correspondent of Walsingham from St Jean de Luz, ‘arrived the Admiral Juan Martinez de Recalde with two pinnaces and a great ship; and there by the diseased people that he brought was set on fire the hospital and wholly burned, and Juan Martinez died within ten days after his arrival.’ ‘At the Passage [St Sebastian] arrived Captain Miguel de Oquendo with a ship, whereof he was General, and died within six days after. His own ship, being of a thousand tons, was blown up with gunpowder in the Passage. For the diseased people that he brought home, was appointed a great house for a hospital, hard without the gates of St Sebastian, which was set on fire and burned.’²

The cry that went up from the Peninsula was as the cry of the Egyptians when the destroying angel had passed over the land. There was not a house where there was not one dead, and that the best and the bravest. When the Armada first reached the Channel, rumour, at its common work, had spread news of a glorious victory. The English corsairs had fallen under the wrath of Don Alonzo's sword: the usurping Queen had stooped her dishonoured head before the legions of Parma and Sidonia.

¹ ‘Ès lastima verlos. No hay quien crea.’—Garcia de Villejo al Secretario de la Guerra, 10 Octubre.

² Edmund Palmer to Walsingham, March 14, 1589: MSS. Spain.

Don Bernardino at Paris, when he heard that Sidonia had reached Calais, assumed that he had engaged and conquered the English fleet; for one day the criers were shouting along the quays of the Seine the fondly credited tale of triumph, while couriers galloped south to carry to Spain the fame of her sons. An English merchant at Sebastian describes the joy of the people when the first false news came in.

'A month after the fleet did depart from the coast,' says Edmund Palmer, 'there came news from Don Bernardino that the Spaniards had gotten the victory, and it was my fortune to be at the reading of the letters in San Sebastian; and as they did read, some said of me, See how the dog looks at the news, which was that the Lord Admiral and Sir Francis Drake was taken, with the loss of many of her Majesty's ships, that Plymouth was theirs, with the Wight, Hampton, and Portsmouth, and that they thought in few days to be in London. The town made great feasts all that day, running through the streets on horseback, with rich apparel and vizards on their faces, crying with loud voices, 'That great dog Francis Drake is prisoner, with chains and fetters;' and at night the town was made full of bonfires, crying and shouting, with other their dances accustomed, reviling at her Majesty with villanous words; and when they could not do any more, with stones they brake down all the windows of my house.'¹

A few days dispelled the pleasant dream. The true story came of the scene at Calais, the fireships, the action, and the flight of the Armada: and then for some weeks there was the prolonged agony of uncertainty, till the remnant of the shattered ships reappeared, bringing 'testimonial on their sides from what banquet they came, with loss of half their men in fight, famine, and sickness, crying out on Sir Francis Drake, saying he was a devil and no man.'²

Drake's was the name in every mouth. Drake, against whom saints and angels had no more power than mortals: an incarnated spirit of evil let loose to afflict the Spanish race throughout the globe.

'I would,' said a man at St Sebastian, snatching a harquebuss, which he did not know to be loaded, and levelling it at a passer-by, 'I would yon man were Francis Drake. How I would hit him!' 'and so drew up the snaphance and levelled at the man, and down fell the cock and off went the piece and killed the man, who spake not one word.'³

On Philip himself the news broke slowly. Pictures

¹ Edmund Palmer to Walsingham, September 29: MSS. Spain.

² Ibid.

³ Ibid.

have been drawn of him sitting in his study in the Escorial, and hearing with Castilian composure that his fleet was destroyed. Such a scene was in the nature of things impossible. Line by line and incident by incident the story reached him. He heard from Parma of the arrival of the fleet at Calais, of the forwardness of his own preparations, and of plans proposed by Sidonia to make the landing rather in the Isle of Wight than in Thanet.¹ Next came the account of the midnight panic, the engagement, the Armada's retreat, and of rumoured injury to more than one of the galleons. The Prince of Ascoli, said falsely to be Philip's bastard son, who had accompanied the fleet and had gone on shore at Calais, sent a diary of his own adventures, and Juan de Manrique, the officer whom Sidonia had sent to Dunkirk, filled sheets with complaints of Parma, to whose unreadiness he attributed the threatened failure of the enterprise.² At the end of August Parma reported further that the Armada had passed the north of Scotland, and was gone he knew not whither, perhaps to Norway. He did not conceal the magnitude of the disaster so far as it was known to him, and Philip's anxious side-notes may be read upon his letter, counting and commenting on the various losses.³ The English, Parma said, had won a great victory, and so far as he could learn, bore their success with modesty.⁴ Their

¹ Parma to Philip, July 31—August 9: MSS. Simancas.

² Don Juan de Manrique to Philip, August 1—11, and to Secretary Idriaquez, of the same date: MSS. Ibid.

³ Parma to Philip, August 29—September 8: MSS. Ibid.

⁴ 'No hablan mucho de las perdidas de la Armada ni tanpoco triumphan mucho de su victoria.'

ships were reported to have suffered, but none had been sunk or taken. The honour belonged to Drake. The Admiral was supposed to have been backward.¹

The next instalment of the truth was the return of Sidonia, with a third of the fleet. It affected Philip so much that 'he shut himself up in the Escorial, and no one dared to speak to him.'² Still there were hopes of the rest. More than sixty ships remained yet unaccounted for, besides those whose fate Sidonia could tell. Reports came dropping in of disasters in Ireland, but with them accounts also of Spaniards landed and safe among the Irish chiefs. Months passed away before the calamity was realized in its appalling extent, and then it seemed for the moment as if the sceptre of the monarchy was broken, and its scattered empire was laid open as a prey to the corsairs. The famous mariners of the Peninsula were wholly destroyed. The great officers on whom Philip most relied were dead or taken. De Valdez, Recalde, Monçada, Oquendo, da Leyva—all were gone. 'There was not one man left in all Spain,' wrote Palmer, 'whom the King might put in place for matters of the sea, for those whom his trust was in were dead and drowned.' 'Great lamentation' especially 'was made for Don Alonzo da Leyva, with whom were all the nobles that went.'³

Not one ray of light from any quarter relieved the universal gloom. Parma, that his enormous preparations might not be absolutely wasted, when he broke up his camp at Dunkirk, made a spring on Bergen op Zoom, which was then held by a small English garrison. Colonel Grimston, who commanded, affected a willingness to imitate Sir William Stanley. A bargain was arranged. Grimston was to receive seven thousand crowns, and gold chains were to be distributed among his officers. A part or the whole of the money was actually paid, and eight hundred Spanish soldiers were admitted within the walls. But the Prince was out-matched in his own arts. His men were caught in a trap, and were every one of them killed.¹ The siege was broken up in haste and shame. The army mutinied for pay. The Prince's chest was empty, for the money which was to have replenished it had been lost in the galleons of the Armada. The treasury at home was utterly exhausted, and extraordinary efforts had been made necessary for the protection of the colonies and the gold fleet.

¹ 'Del Almirante se habla un poco mal que no hizo su deber. Toda la gloria se da á Drake.'—Avisos de Inglaterra. Enclosed with a despatch from Parma.

² Edmund Palmer to Walsingham, September 29: MSS. Spain.

³ Palmer to Walsingham, March 14, 1589: MSS. Ibid.

In his extremity Philip appealed once more to Sextus. He had incurred his late enormous expenses in the cause of Holy Church, and at the Pope's own instigation. At least he counted on receiving the million crowns which had been solemnly promised. But neither on this side was comfort to be brought to the Catholic King. From the moment that the religious purpose of the war against Elizabeth was supplemented by earthly ambition—from the instant that Philip allowed the Pope to see that one result of the conquest of England was to be the annexation of the country to the Spanish monarchy—the necessity of a contribution from the Vatican had become less obvious. The enterprise had lost its purity. The scheme of appropriation, threatening as it did the independence of every crown in Europe, was at variance with received political traditions. It was of doubtful justice in itself, and was approved only by the hysterical Jesuits who had become Papists in the chapels of Oxford. In the fear of offending Philip, the Pope had given at length a partial and unwilling consent; but he had refused distinctly to give a maravedi towards the expenses till the Spaniards were in England. Olivarez had entreated, threatened, flattered, and complained; but all equally in vain. The Pope had been as hard as a diamond.¹ Cardinal Carrafa had lent his persuasion, but Sextus had only shrugged his shoulders. ‘To ask his Holiness for money,’ said Olivarez, ‘is like asking for his heart’s blood.’²

¹ Sir W. Drury to Burghley, October 20: MSS. Holland.

When the fleet had sailed from the Tagus, and was refitting at Coruña, the Pope had been told that he had no longer an excuse for delay. The expedition was actually on its way. The cost had been enormous. It had been incurred at the request of the Holy See, and more and more money was continually demanded to supply its wants. But Sextus stood to his text. He

¹ ‘Como un diamante.’

² ‘El sacar el dinero es cosa tan de las entrañas de su Santidad que no aprovecho nada.’—Olivarez al

Rey, 8 Agosto: MSS. Simancas.

had engaged to pay his subsidy when the Spaniards had landed; nothing that Olivarez could say would induce him to anticipate the time, and the ambassador gave up the attempt as useless.

‘I say no more to him about money,’ he wrote; ‘it only provokes him, and he turns his back upon me at table, and utters a hundred thousand idiotic speeches more foolish than one would hear from a child of two years old. There is neither charity, good manners, nor intelligence in him, and everybody attributes his behaviour to distress at the approach of the time when the dollars are to be torn out of his heart. To me he excuses his delay by saying that the time has not arrived. To others he says the Armada is but a jest, intended but to frighten the Queen into making peace with your Majesty.’¹

A few days later there had come news that the Armada was in the Channel, and had been more than once engaged with the enemy. The report of the Spaniards’ success, which had been started by Don Bernardino, was the first to arrive. Contradiction followed, and much confusion of story. The sincerity of Philip however could no longer be doubted. Though the Spaniards were not actually on English soil, they were close to it, and engaged in fighting with the people, and Olivarez then felt justified in demanding what the Pope had promised.

‘I told him,’ said the Count, ‘that your Majesty had fairly earned the million crowns; half a million was due immediately, and your Majesty hoped that when he understood the distress of your army in Flanders, he would not only make no difficulty in providing that sum for you, but would let you have the second moiety in advance. He replied that he did not see why he should be expected to go beyond his engagements. I said your Majesty had not directed me to put it to him as an obligation. Your Majesty looked rather to the spirit than the letter, and you considered that even if he had given no promise at all, he was bound to come forward and assist your Majesty, considering what you had done and spent in the cause of God.

¹ Olivarez to Philip, August 19: MSS. Simancas.

‘He listened without interrupting me, though he betrayed his impatience by twisting uneasily on his seat. When I had done he boiled over. He said he would keep his word, and more than keep it, but pressed he would not be, and so long as the Armada’s fate was unknown he would not do a thing. From the symptoms which have appeared in his Holiness during the last few days one would not credit him with that zeal for the extirpation of heresy and the salvation of souls which his position requires of him. When the first favourable reports arrived he showed no pleasure, but was rather depressed; while the news which have been received since are more agreeable than they ought to have been. Over against the benefit to Christendom, there has been set the grief at parting with money, and the fear and envy of your Majesty’s greatness, and it becomes more clear every day that when he offered the million he did not believe that the enterprise would ever take effect.

‘He has never varied once in refusing to let us have it before the time. When we were supposed to have had the victory he moderated his tone, and was more gracious in his general dealings with me; but as soon as the truth was known he became as proud and arrogant as if he had been just taken out of prison and made into an Emperor. On some mere questions of frontier law, which the Count de Miranda had to discuss with him, he treated both the Count and myself as if we had halters round our necks, as if our present trouble had not come to us through himself and in the cause of God. The Cardinals too, who profess to be neutral, showed none of that pleasure at our success which they ought to have shown, and when tidings came of the reverse they revealed their malice. They seemed to think that they were breathing freely again; so great is the power of ill-will, which in this case may be called heretical.’¹

Cardinal Allen, as Philip’s favourite, fared no better than the ambassador. The Pope had detained him under various pretexts at Rome till the fate of the enterprise was determined. When the issue of the action at Gravelines became authentically known, Allen, in some hope either that the disaster might have been remedied, or that the Armada might have gone to

¹ Olivarez to Philip, September 26: MSS. Simancas.

Scotland, applied for leave to repair to Flanders. Sextus, says Olivarez, treated him 'like a negro,'¹ asked him viciously,² what good he expected to do there, and affected to disapprove of his mission altogether. Olivarez took Allen's side. 'If the Pope,' he said, 'had sent the Legate in time, and had been less grasping in matters of money, the result might have been different.' The Pope spitefully hinted that he had expected the Spaniards to be defeated. Olivarez complimented him on having a spirit of prophecy. His Holiness did not reply, but turned up the whites of his eyes and looked piously towards heaven.³

It is needless to say that not one real of the million crowns was ever forthcoming. The great ideal of Catholic unity, for which the soil of Christendom was being trodden into blood, when traced to its central incarnation, was found residing in a querulous old hypocrite, a sharp practitioner, and a subtle politician, with as many of the meaner parts of human nature, and as little of divine nature, as was to be found in any mortal on whom the sun of heaven was shining.

The Spanish fleet being destroyed, and Philip's prospects in England having collapsed, the Pope reverted to his original desire that James of Scotland might be converted to the faith. A less prudent person than James might have been tempted into some im-

¹ 'Le trató como un negro.'

² 'Con malísimos terminos.'

³ 'Me respondió que si hubiera de tener buen suceso, que el Legado era enviado con grandes profundidades; y aunque le dixe quan profético era menester para adivinarlo, se quedó en ella alçando los ojos al cielo.'—Olivarez al Rey, 29 Octubre; MSS. Simancas.

patient movement, for when the Armada was in prospect he had been promised an English Duchy and a fixed revenue as the price of his neutrality,¹ with other considerable allowances. When the danger had passed, these promises were naturally repudiated; and it was calculated that if certain evil influences at the Scotch Court could be removed, the King, in not unreasonable resentment, might lend a more favourable ear to the Papal exhortations. Maitland, who was now Chancellor, was supposed to be the person who held James to the English connection, and the Bishop of Dunblane undertook to remove the obstacle. After twenty years of Carthusian discipline, the old man had still so much of the Scot about him, that he applied himself at once to the national methods, and undertook to have Maitland killed. His priesthood at first caused him some uneasiness, but a Papal dispensation could make a deed of blood innocent even in successors of the Apostles. Sextus gave him the necessary powers, and he felt his way towards getting the murder accomplished.²

¹ 'The necessity of the time and the imminent danger of a revolt in this country by the approaching of the Spaniards in the Narrow Seas, made me to make such offers as follow to satisfy his Majesty for the time, and to qualify the minds of his nobility to keep all in quiet, while her Majesty with her honourable council do resolve what is to be done.

'1. I offer to his Majesty a duchy and a reasonable revenue thereto.

2. A yearly pension of 5000*l*.

'3. To sustain a guard about his Majesty's person of fifty gentlemen of Scotland and their commanders.

'4. I offer a hundred horse and a hundred foot to be levied on her Majesty's charges to be employed on his borders, for the repressing of the insolency of his outlaws.

'These offers to be performed during her Majesty's life.'—Mr Ashley to Burghley, August 6—16, 1588: MSS. Scotland.

² 'Ante todas cosas será necesario

But James proved too intelligent to take further offence at Elizabeth's treatment of him. The waifs and strays of the Armada which were washed on the out isles of Scotland, were proof sufficient to have convinced a less able man that it would be imprudent to quarrel with her. The assassination of Maitland would have been a wasted crime; and the Bishop, after his brief relapse into worldliness, finding that nothing could be done, returned to his austerities and his prayers.

One more consequence remains to be told which followed on Philip's defeat—one more blow to the theory of Catholic supremacy as interpreted by Spain, and represented by the Inquisition and the Jesuits. After the peace with the League in which he had been compelled to acquiesce, the French King had affected to be reconciled to the Duke of Guise, and to accept his defeat as conclusive. Sir Edward Stafford however had dimly indicated that all was not as it seemed. Henry had prolonged his resistance till he had made it impossible for Guise to take part in the invasion of England; and Stafford, as has been already mentioned, had private information, that 'Guise's good usage' concealed intended treachery.¹

Taking courage from Philip's overthrow the King matured his half-formed purpose. The olive-com-

matar el dicho Canciller, por ser, como es, en tanta privança con la Inglesa, y tener tanto poder en Scozia. Lo cual el obispo tambien promete de procurar, aunque sea Sacerdote, porque tiene poder de su Santi- dad para ello.'—Fraile Juannes Arnoldus, Prior Anglus al Rey, 1589: MSS. Simancas.

¹ Stafford to Walsingham, July 31—August 10, August 1—11: MSS. France.

plexioned, delicate-featured Henry of Valois, with his dark lustrous eyes, his jewelled earrings, and emeralds knotted in his hair, more resembled an Asiatic than a European. Superstitious, dissolute, and cowardly, he concealed the most deadly treachery under features of impassive immobility, and his nature secreted hatred as a cobra's fangs secrete poison.

The Duke of Guise, after thirty-five years' experience of him, for they had been brought up together from childhood, imperfectly understood his disposition. He knew him to be a coward; he did not know the tenacity of purpose of which some kinds of cowardice are capable. The defeat of the Spaniards disposed Guise to conciliation, and to delay, at least for a time, the transfer to himself of the crown which the League intended to accomplish. The King anticipated his ambition, and on the 23rd of December, at the Château of Blois, December. the daggers of a score of assassins revenged the day of the barricades.¹

¹ The death of Guise was said to have affected Philip more profoundly than the destruction of the Armada itself.

'J'ai trouvé,' writes a Frenchman from Madrid, 'la Espagne toute emue de la morte de leur bon amy M. de Guise, et ce Roy en a faict un etrange sentiment, et dit on qu'il luy a plus deplu la morte de M. de Guise que la perte de son armée, où il a perdu passe vingt mil hommes et des plus valians capitains qu'il avoit et avra de long temps.' — to —, from Madrid, February 4, 1589: MSS. Spain.

CONCLUSION.

CHESS-PLAYERS, when they have brought their game to a point at which the result can be foreseen with certainty, regard their contest as ended, and sweep the pieces from the board.

It had been my intention to continue this history to the close of Elizabeth's life. The years which followed the defeat of the Armada were rich in events of profound national importance. They were years of splendour and triumph. The flag of England became supreme on the seas ; English commerce penetrated to the farthest corners of the Old World, and English colonies rooted themselves on the shores of the New. The national intellect, strung by the excitement of sixty years, took shape in a literature which is an eternal possession to mankind, while the incipient struggles of the two parties in the Anglican Church prepared the way for the conflicts of the coming century, and the second act of the Reformation. But I have presumed too far already on the forbearance of my readers in the length to which I have run, and these subjects, intensely interesting as they are, lie beyond the purpose of the present work. My object, as I defined it at the outset, was to describe the transition from the Catholic England with which the century opened, the England of a dominant Church and monasteries and pilgrimages, into the England of progressive intelligence; and the question whether the nation was to pass a second time through the farce of a reconciliation with Rome, was answered once and for ever by the cannon of Sir Francis Drake. The action before Gravelines of the 30th of July, 1588, decided the largest problems ever submitted in the history of mankind to the arbitrement of force. Beyond and beside the immediate fate of England, it decided that Philip's revolted Provinces should never be reannexed to the Spanish Crown. It broke the back of Spain, sealed the fate of the Duke of Guise, and though it could not prevent the civil war, it assured the ultimate succession of the King of Navarre to the French Crown. In its remoter consequences it determined the fate of the Reformation in Germany; for had Philip been victorious, the League must have been immediately triumphant; the power of France would have been on the side of Spain and the Jesuits, and the thirty years' war would either have never been begun, or would have been brought to a swift conclusion. It furnished James of Scotland with conclusive reasons for remaining a Protestant, and for eschewing for the future the forbidden fruit of Popery; and thus it secured his tranquil accession to the throne of England when Elizabeth passed away. Finally, it was the sermon which completed the conversion of the English nation, and transformed the Catholics into Anglicans.

The parties into which Elizabeth found her subjects divided at her sister's death had hitherto subsisted with their relative numbers not materially altered. Anglican High Church theology had as yet no general acceptance. 'Divines' like Whitgift, who sought for favour and promotion, professed the theory of the Via Media, but they had no national following, and perhaps did not altogether believe in it themselves. The sincere who were not Protestants were Catholics—either recusants who preferred their conscience to their property, or schismatics who attended the English churches under protest, to escape payment of the fines; and one as well as the other had looked forward to the re-establishment of orthodoxy, when the Queen's death should open the way to a change. United they still largely outnumbered their opponents, and under the modern constitution they would have returned a powerful majority to Parliament. But Parliament was as yet the councillor rather than the master of the Sovereign. The opponents of the Queen's policy had not sought for seats there, and had preferred to wait quietly for Mary Stuart's accession. After her death they had been embarrassed by the pretensions of Philip. They had been uncertain how to act, and had waited for the issues of a contest in which, as threatening English independence, they had been unable to take a part. The coming of the Armada was an appeal on behalf of the Pope to the ordeal of battle, and the defeat of Spain with its appalling features, the letting loose of the power of the tempests—the special weapons of the Almighty—to finish the work which Drake had but half completed, was accepted as a recorded judgment of Heaven. The magnitude of the catastrophe took possession of the nation's imagination; and the more moderate Catholics, the knights and squires who were scattered over the shires, transformed themselves into Catholics with a difference—Anglo-Catholics or High Churchmen.

Had the battle gone the other way, Parma would have brought his army into Kent; and by appointing Leicester as Commander-in-Chief, the Queen had done all that lay in her to increase his chances of success. Had the country remained staunch, one victory or two would not have ensured his triumph; but a defeat of the Protestants, both by sea and land, would have worked dangerously in the northern counties; Scotland would scarcely have remained quiet, and the Duke of Guise would have had leisure and opportunity to strike in for a share of the spoil. At worst, so skilful a commander as Parma would probably have been able to re-embark, having inflicted enormous injury, having shaken the prestige of success which had hitherto clung to Elizabeth so remarkably, and would have turned the balance of the imagination—at such times a power of enormous force—on the Catholic side. Had the Armada succeeded even in defending itself, though unable to drive the English from the seas, it might have forced its way into the Scheldt, or it might have gone unbroken to the Firth of Forth; in the one case to overwhelm the Provinces, in the other to create an immediate revolution in Scotland, and restore the King and the country to the control of the Catholic nobility. If the enormous resources of the fleet had been made available either thus or in any way to the Church's cause, it is likely that sooner or later the Catholic despotism would have been re-established everywhere, and that the first great effort for the emancipation of Europe might have failed.

It would have still been but a question of time. Violence may constrain the outer shell and form of things. It can win the acquiescence of fools and the applause of parasites. It can kill those who dispute its commands. But it cannot make truth into falsehood, or falsehood into truth. It may replant a dead tree, and insist that it shall be considered as alive, but it cannot give back to the tree its vital functions, or arrest the law by which it has been sentenced to destruction. That which is dead is dead, and that which is dead decays, and the skilfullest embalming will not save it from falling into dust.

But if force cannot restore departed vitality, it can check the growth of what is springing up and distort the form which it shall assume. To the countries which rejected the Reformation, freedom never offered itself again in the dress of a purer religion. It returned upon them as revolution, as the negation of all religion. In Austria, in Spain, in France, in Italy, the Church has been stripped step by step of its wealth, of its power, even of its control over the education of the people. Practical life has become secularized, and culture and intelligence have ceased to interest themselves in a creed which they no longer believe. Doctrine may be piled upon doctrine. The laity are contemptuously indifferent, and leave the priests in possession of the field in which reasonable men have ceased to expect any good thing to grow. This is the only fruit of the Catholic reaction of the sixteenth century, of all the efforts of the Jesuits and the Inquisition, of the Council of Trent, the massacre of St Bartholomew, and the religious wars of Philip II.

If the same phenomena are beginning to be visible in England they have appeared as yet in a less aggravated form. They are manifesting themselves at present, coincident with the repudiation by the clergy of the principles of the Reformation ; and if the clergy are permitted to carry through their Catholic ' revival,' the divorce between intelligence and Christianity will be as complete among ourselves as it is elsewhere ; but we have been exempted hitherto by the efforts of those brave men whose perseverance and victory it has been my privilege in these pages to describe, and unless we are unworthy or degenerate it is not yet too late for us to save ourselves.

Religion is the attitude of reverence, in which noble-minded people instinctively place themselves towards the Unknown Power which made man and his dwelling-place. It is the natural accompaniment of their lives, the sanctification of their actions and their acquirements. It is what gives to man, in the midst of the rest of creation, his special elevation and dignity.

Accompanying our race as it has done from the cradle of civilization, it has grown with our growth, it has expanded with the expansion of knowledge, subject only to the condition that when errors have been incorporated in religious systems, they have been exceptionally tenacious of their ground. Rituals and creeds, created by the piety of constructive and devotional ages, have become so precious when once accepted, that it has been held sacrilege to touch them. They have been guarded by superstition and sealed against alteration by anathema. The eternal nature of the Object of our reverence has been attributed to the forms under which it has been adored, and unable notwithstanding to escape the changes which the development of knowledge imposes upon it, religion has advanced not by easy and natural transitions, but by successive revolutions, violent leaps, spasmodic and passionate convulsions. Opinions formed, or facts believed, in the immaturity of experience become incredible when seen to be out of harmony with larger and more exact information. Piety, the twin brother of science, tends at such times to be the guardian of error. Love of truth is forced into unnatural hostility with the virtue which is only second to it, and then come those trying periods of human history, when devotion and intelligence appear to be opposed, and the metal of which men and nations are composed is submitted to a crucial test. Those who adhere at all costs to truth, who cling to her though she lead them into the wilderness, find beyond it a promised land where all that they sacrifice is restored to them. Those who through superstition, or timidity, or political convenience, or pious feeling, close their eyes to fact, who cling to forms which have become shadows, and invent reasons for believing what is essentially no longer credible, escape a momentary trial only that it may return upon them again in a harder and harsher shape. They surrender themselves to conscientious emotions, and they forfeit those very emotions for which they are sacrificing their intellectual honesty as the object of their reverence becomes more palpably an idol. While the Church of Rome is losing the countries which it persuaded to refuse the Reformation, it exults in the converts which it is recovering from the nations which became Protestant. It fails to see that its success is its deepest condemnation. Protestantism alone has kept alive the sentiment of piety which, when allied with weakness of intellect, is the natural prey of superstition.

Always and everywhere, even among the bravest peoples, the majority are spiritual cowards, and had England in the sixteenth century been governed by universal suffrage, the Roman Catholic system, considered as a rule of opinion, could not have been overthrown without violence. The allegiance to the Papacy might have been renounced, the Church courts might have been forced to conform themselves to the ordinary rules of justice, but transubstantiation and its kindred doctrines would have undoubtedly remained in the creed, with rope and faggot for its sanctions. Government by suffrage however is possible only in periods when the convictions of men have ceased to be vital to them. As long as there is a minority which would rather die than continue in a lie, there is a further court of appeal from which there is no reference. When ten men are so earnest on one side that they will sooner be killed than give way, and twenty are earnest enough on the other to cast their votes for it, but will not risk their skins, the ten will give the law to the twenty in virtue of a robuster faith and of the strength which goes along with it. Left to themselves, and without interference from abroad, the English nation, had there been no Elizabeth, would probably sooner or later have taken the Reforming side. Had the Spanish invasion succeeded however, had it succeeded even partially in crushing Holland and giving France to the League and the Duke of Guise, England might not have recovered from the blow, and it might have fared with Teutonic Europe as it fared with France on the revocation of the Edict of Nantes. Either Protestantism would have been trampled out altogether, or expelled from Europe to find a home in a new continent; and the Church, insolent with another century or two of power, would have been left to encounter the inevitable ultimate revolution which is now its terror, with no reformed Christianity surviving to hold the balance between atheism and superstition.

The starved and ragged English seamen, so ill furnished by their Sovereign that they were obliged to take from their enemies the means of fighting them, decided otherwise; they and the winds and the waves, which are said ever to be on the side of the brave. In their victory they conquered not the Spaniards only, but the weakness of their Queen. Either she had been incredulous before that Philip would indeed invade her, or she had underrated the power of her people: or she discerned that the destruction of the Spanish fleet had created at last an irreparable breach with the Catholic governments. At any rate there was no more unwholesome hankering after compromise, no more unqueenly avarice or reluctance to spend her treasure in the cause of freedom. The strength and resources of England were flung heartily into the war, and all the men and all the money it could spare were given freely to the United Provinces and the King of Navarre. The struggle lasted into the coming century. Elizabeth never saw peace with Spain again. But the nation thrived with its gathering glory. The war on the part of England was aggressive thenceforward. One more great attempt was made by Philip in Ireland, but only to fail miserably, and the shores of England were never seriously threatened a second time. Portugal was invaded, and Cadiz burnt, Spanish commerce made the prey of privateers, and the proud galleons chased from off the ocean. In the Low Countries the tide of reconquest had reached its flood, and thenceforward ebbed slowly back, while in France the English and the Huguenots fought side by side against the League and Philip.

Weary of blood at last, and sickened with a war in which success would have made their country a Spanish dependency, the French Catholics submitted to the accession of a Huguenot King; and Henry of Navarre, a philosopher to whom all religions were in themselves indifferent, exchanged his unpopular heresy for the creed of the majority of his subjects. It was a cruel disappointment to the fiercer and nobler natures which had stood by him during the years of his trial, but it was fatal to the ascendancy of Jesuitism. It secured to the Protestants toleration, if not supremacy, and the political support of France to the cause of European liberty.

The Reformation in England was safe thenceforward from continental sympathizers with its internal enemies. It remained to reorganize the temporal and spiritual anarchy into which the long suspense had permitted the administration to decline. The foreign policy had been carried on upon terms never witnessed in any considerable nation before or since. Private subjects had made war under the forms of peace, to be avowed or disowned by their Government, as happened to be for the moment convenient. English volunteers had served unlicensed in thousands against the Spaniards in the Netherlands. Squadrons of English corsairs had sacked Spanish cities and plundered Spanish galleons. Pirates roamed freely in the English Channel, and there was no authority to interfere with them. The internal economy had fallen into abeyance, and except as they touched seminary priests and Jesuits, the laws upon the statute book had remained dead. Unaccustomed scope had thus been given to private energy. The movable wealth of the country had increased enormously. The taxation was lighter than had been known for a century. The influx of the Protestant exiles, skilful energetic craftsmen, had stimulated manufactures, which the commercial companies were distributing over the world. Yet the increasing wealth had brought its shadow with it in increasing destitution. Adulteration and fraud, the besetting sins of English tradesmen, had run rampant in the disorganization of the ancient guilds. Two years before the coming of the Armada 'more false cloth and woollen was made in England than in all Europe besides.'¹ The aggregation of farms had recommenced after the check which had been imposed upon it at the beginning of the reign. The small holdings had been once more devoured by the large. The labouring peasants had been huddled into villages, where, with no other tenement beyond the rooms which they occupied, they were supported only by daily or weekly wages; while through neglect in enforcing the Statute of Labourers, they had been driven to accept such wages as the employers would give, rather than the fair and just equivalent for their work which it was still the theory of English legislators that they ought or it will be to our hurt irrecoverable. All countries be now trying to make their own cloth in consequence. Although other countries have not such good wool as ours, they are now excelling us in the making, and they hope soon to have no need of any of our cloth, and utterly to banish it. Other nations labour by all means they can to make good cloth, we with all diligence go forward daily making worse and worse.'—Certain things to be considered for the special wealth of England: MSS. Domestic, December, 1585.

¹ 'As we have the best wools in the world, so ought we to have the best cloth. It is our own fault if we have not. The good making of our cloth is a thing to be specially looked after. Many good laws have been made about it, but there is no execution of them, for it is most manifest, and I am right sorry to have occasion to say it, but it is true, that there is more false cloth and woollen made in this realm than in all Europe besides. Thus we lose our reputation in the world. In such a cause there must be a remedy found,

to receive. It is interesting to observe that on the return of composure and confidence the Parliament undertook to deal with these disorders on the old principles. Besides stringent measures to check adulteration and false weights, an Act was passed that four acres of land should be attached to every cottage intended to be occupied by an agricultural labourer, for the use of him and his family.¹ Another Act reinsisted on the breaking up of the large farms, the preamble sharply marking the grounds on which the agglomeration was disapproved. It might be true that the large cultivation was more profitable in proportion to the labour employed upon it; but the interests of capitalists were not yet supreme, and the aim of Elizabeth's Parliament was 'that by the maintenance of husbandry the greater part of the subjects of the realm might be preserved from extreme poverty, and the wealth of the realm be dispersed and distributed in many hands.'² Similarly the Act of Wages, which had fallen into abeyance, was set on its feet again and amplified. The changing value of the currency and the attendant fluctuation of prices making it still impossible to fix a statutable rate, the magistrates of each county were required to assess an annual rate, and whereas in earlier times penalties had been imposed upon the labourer who demanded more than the law permitted, a fine was now imposed upon the employer who gave less than the law enjoined.³

While Parliament was busy with the condition of the people, the concerns of the Church were taken in hand by the Queen herself. Jealous of what she considered her prerogative, and distrustful of the temper of the Commons, Elizabeth never, if she could help it, permitted a religious debate in the Lower House. As Head of the Church, she claimed unrestricted jurisdiction in her own department, and the exclusive initiation of all proposed alterations.

¹ 31 Elizabeth, cap. 7.

² 39 Elizabeth, cap. 2.

³ 39 Elizabeth, cap. 12; 1 James, cap. 6.

The spiritual anarchy had hitherto been even more complete than the secular. The Act of Uniformity was on the statute book; but it had been obeyed or disobeyed, according to the humour of each minister or congregation. Even Sir Amyas Paulet, with the charge of the second person of the realm, had a Puritan service in the chapel at Chartley. Anglican theology had as yet no recognized existence. The religion of the Protestants, according to the received formula, 'was the Bible, and the Bible only.' In the Bible they had found, not a body of creeds or confessions of faith, but a rule of life, to which they were passionately endeavouring to conform. The services in which they took interest were the expositions of Scripture, or the voluntary prayers of those among them who had the power of expressing the general sentiment in words. To such men as these, much of the liturgy was indifferent, much was unpalatable; while the schismatics, as they were called, the conforming Catholics who consented to come to church, cared little for a ritual which, till the defeat of the Armada put an end to their hopes, they had expected to exchange at no distant time for the ancient canon.

For Protestantism Elizabeth had never concealed her dislike and contempt. She hated to acknowledge any fellowship in religion either with Scots, Dutch, or Huguenots. She represented herself to foreign ambassadors as a Catholic in everything, except in allegiance to the Papacy. Even for the Church of England, of which she was the supreme governor, she affected no particular respect. She left the Catholics in her household so unrestrained that they absented themselves at pleasure from the Royal Chapel, without a question being asked. She allowed the country gentlemen all possible latitude in their own houses. The danger in which she had lived for so many years, the severe measures to which she was driven against the seminary priests, and the consciousness that the Protestants were the only subjects that she had on whose loyalty she could rely, had prevented her hitherto from systematically repressing the Puritan irregularities; but the power to persecute had been wanting rather than the inclination. The bishops with whom she had filled the Sees at her accession were chosen necessarily from the party who had suffered under her sister. They were Calvinists or Lutherans, with no special reverence for the office which they had undertaken; and she treated them in return with studied contempt. She called them Doctors, as the highest title to which she considered them to have any real right: if they disputed her pleasure she threatened to unfrock them; if they showed themselves officious in punishing Catholics, she brought them up with a sharp reprimand; and if their Protestantism was conspicuously earnest, they were deposed and imprisoned.

Thus, with their functions reduced to zero, the Anglican prelates, like the rest of England, had looked for 'a change,' and prepared for it. Either they became great farmers and graziers, like the Bishop of Ely; or, by evasions of the statutes, they enriched their families with the estates of their Sees; or they sold their spiritual functions, sold licenses, sold dispensations, and made priests for money 'of the lowest of the people.' They made it impossible in return for the Protestants to respect or care for them. With their ineffectuality, their simony, and their worldliness, they brought themselves and their office into contempt; and men who were trying resolutely to have done with lies and dishonesty, and to use the Bible really and truly as a guide to walk by, could not recognize the imposition of episcopal hands as conveying the sole title to be a teacher in the Church. The very method in which the Bishops were appointed—the congé d'élire, the deans and chapters meeting with a Premunire round their necks, and going through the farce of a religious service and a solemn election, appeared a horror and a blasphemy to every one who believed God to be really alive. The order, and the system depending upon it, was passing into disrepute, and the tendency of every sincere English Protestant was towards an organization like that of the Kirk of Scotland.

To permit the collapse of the bishops however would be to abandon the Anglican position. Presbytery as such was detestable to Elizabeth. She recognized no authority in any man as derived from a source distinct from herself, and she adhered resolutely to her own purpose. So long as her own crown was unsafe she did not venture on any general persecution of her Puritan subjects; but she checked all their efforts to make a change in the ecclesiastical system. She found a man after her own heart for the See of Canterbury in Whitgift; she filled the other Sees as they fell vacant with men of a similar stamp, and she prepared to coerce their refractory 'brethren in Christ' into obedience if ever the opportunity came.

On the reconciliation of the Catholic gentry, which followed on the destruction of the Spanish fleet, Elizabeth found herself in a position analogous to that of Henry IV. of France. She was the sovereign of a nation with a divided creed, the two parties, notwithstanding, being at last for the most part loyal to herself.

Both she and Henry held at the bottom intrinsically the same views. They believed generally in certain elementary truths lying at the base of all religions; and the difference in the outward expressions of those truths, and the passionate animosities which those differences engendered, were only not contemptible to them from the practical mischief which they produced. On what terms Catholics and Protestants could be induced to live together peaceably was the political problem of the age. Neither of the two sovereigns shared the profound horror of falsehood, which was at the heart of the Protestant movement. They had the statesman's temperament, to which all specific religions are equally fictions of the imagination. The methods which they adopted were diametrically opposite, and the result in the two countries is curiously instructive.

Henry IV. developed the policy which the Valois princes had been too weak to carry out. He changed his own nominal creed, and heard mass in Notre Dame, while he established what is called toleration, and secured his Huguenot subjects the free exercise of their own religion.

In England, on the other hand, toleration was theoretically unknown. It was assumed, as a matter of course, that every citizen was of the creed of the State; while the outward uniformity concealed notorious differences, and men who would have cheerfully condemned each other to stake or gallows, were comprehended in the same communion.

Neither plan can be said to have completely answered. Toleration and uniformity are only possible where a difference of creed is regarded merely as a more or less innocent difference of opinion. When France recovered from its exhaustion, theological passion revived with it. The Edicts were once more swept away—compulsory orthodoxy came back, to be followed in turn by a revolution. The attempt to maintain a rigid Church system in England cost a king and an archbishop their lives. The English method however was probably, under the circumstances of the time, the wisest that could have been at first adopted. Had the Act of Uniformity been enforced with moderation, had a reasonable latitude been left to the discretion of the congregations; above all, had means been provided by which the liturgy and the Articles might be adapted to the growth of the people, the Anglican Church might, at this moment, have been co-extensive with the English nation.

Serious difficulty only arose with the genuine adhesion of the Catholics. So long as they went to church as a form, and under protest, the services to which they listened there were indifferent to them. As soon as they had consented sincerely to dispense with their old ritual, they desired naturally to make the best of the new. They could not, in justice, be expected to see the sacraments slighted, the liturgy mutilated or altered, and all that they believed, denied and execrated by a Puritan enthusiast; and when they had abandoned the Pope once for all, retaining all other points of their creed unchanged, they had a right to demand the full benefit of the Catholic complexion of the services.

With forbearance and judgment, the problem need not have been insoluble; unfortunately, the Queen allowed herself to be influenced by her personal dislike of the Protestants. She was forced into a Protestant policy in her relations with the Continent. She was the more determined to mould the Church at home after her own pleasure. Without the Puritans, she would long before have changed her palace for a prison, and her sceptre for a distaff. Through all her trials they alone had been true as steel. In times of danger she had caressed them and acknowledged a common creed with them. But she believed probably that but for the peremptoriness of Calvinism the compromises for which she had toiled would have long since given quiet to Europe. She had accepted the help of it in Scotland and Holland, but she had accepted it with steady aversion, as an un-palatable necessity. Murray, Morton, Gowrie, and Angus, had felt one after another the value of her friendship, and had Philip II. consented to distinguish between the schismatic orthodoxy of England and the heresy of the rest of Europe, she would have seen the Prince of Orange perish unmoved, or have sent her own fleet to assist in coercing him into obedience.

The general submission of the country relieved her, so far as her own subjects were concerned, from the obligation of humouring further their spiritual unreasonableness. She wished to prove to the conforming Catholics that the Church of England was not the disorderly body which Jesuit calumniators affirmed it to be. She wished to make their conversion easy to them, and relieve their consciences by showing distinctly that it held Catholic doctrines, and as little sympathized with heresy as the parent stock of Rome. She was assured that the Puritans would be loyal to her. Their constancy had been tried, and there was no fear that ill-usage would alienate them. The bishops therefore were instructed to restore order. The spiritual courts, long in abeyance, were reopened, and the old tyrannical processes recommenced which had called out the great remonstrance which the House of Commons had addressed to her father. The bishops' assessors summoned ministers and laymen, ex officio, to answer any charge that private accusation or public fame had brought against them. The ecclesiastical judges showed again their familiar incapacity to understand the meaning of right and wrong, and the aged iniquity which Henry and Cromwell had crushed was once more set upon its feet.

A country which had defied and conquered the old Church in the days of its pride and power, with the Pope at its back and the mystery of excommunication still carrying undefined terrors with it, was not likely to submit quietly to its emasculated representative held in a chain by the Queen, drilled by her sceptre, and dancing to any tune that she pleased to dictate.

Elizabeth's Parliaments had been uniformly unfavourable to the exercise by the bishops of any kind of secular jurisdiction whatever. The reviving quarrel had been exasperated by libels, neither wise nor wholly just, but at the bottom with a basis of truth in them. The Queen made the bishops' cause her own. She held them up against the Puritan House of Commons; the Puritan libellers were prosecuted before an Ecclesiastical Commission, and Penry, a Welsh minister, the supposed author of 'Marprelate,' was put on his trial for felony. He had said what was no more than the truth—that the Queen being established in her throne by the Gospel, had suffered the Gospel to reach no further than the end of her sceptre. There was good reason why the extreme developments of the Gospel should in some degree be controlled by the sceptre; but it was a hard measure to indict the writer of such words for exciting hatred against the Crown. Yet Penry's trial was pressed to a conviction, and he was hanged. Udal, another minister, was condemned and died in prison. Both these men were sacrificed, as completely as any victim of Pagan superstition, to a mere idol. The plea of conscience had not availed the Catholics who were executed for treason. The plea of conscience was no more allowed to avail the Puritans. The theory of Papist and Protestant was held alike incompatible with the Queen's authority, and the same measure which was extended to one was extended to the others.

It was politic, so far as it affected Elizabeth's immediate interests. The part of the nation whose loyalty had been most ambiguous was undoubtedly conciliated by it. The High Church Anglican system being grafted upon the throne, began definitely to grow. Whitgift administered its laws, an excellent Hooker was found to construct its theology, and the recusants and schismatics—as the conforming English who still believed in transubstantiation were scornfully called at Rome—transferred themselves and their sentiments to the new body, to become the Church party of the next generation; while the pillory, the slit ears, the Bishop's prison, or, on continued obstinacy, the gallows, became the portion of the representatives of the Reformers. It was impossible to alienate them from a Sovereign who had delivered them from Popery. They bore their persecution while the Queen's life lasted, and as the English were a long-suffering people, for a generation after; and then came a cycle of revolutions, rising all of them from the Mezentian union of a dead and a living creed, till time and experience had lowered the theological temperature, and toleration of dissent, and afterwards of Romanism, became at last possible.

With toleration the reason ceased for the complex constitution of the Church formularies. So long as uniformity was insisted upon, it was but justice to retain Catholic elements in a liturgy generally Protestant; when Catholic chapels were reopened, the service might naturally have been expected to assume a more consistent character. Yet the anomaly has been permitted to survive, with a result which can be neither wholly regretted, nor wholly approved. The jurisdiction of the clerical courts was finally suppressed. The power of Anglicans and Protestants to oppress each other was restricted within the bounds of a law which sympathized with neither. Experience brought with it moderation, even in Churchmen; and the possession of a common Bible, the worship in a common sanctuary, the sharing in the many ceremonies which equally interested both parties, and offended neither, softened differences by degrees, which once could be extinguished only in blood. The opposing theories melted insensibly one into the other. The sharp lines of distinction ceased to exist; and for a hundred and forty years after the Revolution of 1688, the Church of England was able to fulfil with moderate success the wholesome functions of a religious establishment. Theological doctrinalism passed out of fashion; and the clergy, merged as they were in the body of the nation, and no longer endeavouring to elevate themselves into a separate order, were occupied healthily in impressing on their congregations the meaning of duty and moral responsibility to God.

The history is a chequered one, and the final development still waits to show itself. It cannot be said that the system has acted really well—the factors in the problem permitting at best but a limping solution. To induce men who believed it to be their highest duty to destroy each other, to live in peace together, and respect one another's opinions, passed the power of mortal wisdom to accomplish completely. But a comparison of the religious history of England during the last three centuries with that of the rest of Europe, may teach us to be tolerably satisfied with our own method. The wars of religion in France cost at least half a million lives, and the number of devilish crimes which, in the course of the struggle, were added to the sum of human wickedness surpasses estimation. The thirty years' war turned half Germany into a wilderness of ruin. In England, when it came to fighting at last, the acrid venom of theology had been tempered down, and neither Roundhead nor Cavalier dishonoured their cause and their country by the atrocities of a Tilly or a Guise.

Now, when the thoughts of men on these subjects have become so different, when it is no longer possible, even in imagination, to reproduce the state of feeling which occasioned the massacre of St Bartholomew, it is rash to suggest in detail what appear to us to have been errors and omissions. The want of wisdom shown in the persecution of the Nonconformists was demonstrated by the event. Puritanism was a living force in England; Catholicism was a dying superstition. Puritanism had saved Elizabeth's crown; Catholicism was a hotbed of disloyalty. The keenest political sagacity however may often be at fault in the calculation of tendencies, and the temptation to conciliate a powerful body, whose allegiance had been sorely tried, may easily have appeared irresistible. There is one point only on which it is possible to fix, where the framers of the constitution of the Church went manifestly wrong. For mistakes of judgment every allowance must be made; but a faith in truth and honesty is the first condition of a politician's greatness, and we have a right to expect from those who take the charge of the State's fortunes upon them, that they shall have no dealings with conscious imposture.

The position of bishops in the Church of England has been from the first anomalous. The Episcopate was violently separated from the Papacy, to which it would have preferred to remain attached, and to secure its obedience, it was made dependent on the Crown. The method of episcopal appointments, instituted by Henry VIII. as a temporary expedient and abolished under Edward as an unreality, was re-established by Elizabeth, not certainly because she believed that the invocation of the Holy Ghost was required for the completeness of an election which her own choice had already determined, not because the bishops obtained any gifts or graces in their consecration which she herself respected, but because the shadowy form of an election, with a religious ceremony following it, gave them the semblance of spiritual independence, the semblance without the substance, which qualified them to be the instruments of the system which she desired to enforce. They were tempted to presume on their phantom dignity, till the sword of a second Cromwell taught them the true value of their Apostolic descent; and we have a right to regret that the original theory of Cranmer was departed from—that being officers of the Crown, as much appointed by the Sovereign as the Lord Chancellor, the bishops should not have worn openly their real character and received their appointments immediately by letters patent without further ceremony.

To an Episcopacy so constituted the most extreme Presbyterian would not long have objected. The Presbyterian did not resent authority as such, but authority which assumed a divine origin when resting in reality on nothing but a congé d'élire. As an elder among elders, as a minister promoted to deserved superiority for purposes of order and government, the Bishop of the Church of England would have commanded a genuine reverence, and the collective Bench might have ruled in sincerity over a united Church, in which the Kirk of Scotland would at first have been gladly absorbed.

No national object was secured by the transparent fiction of the election and consecration. The invocation of the Holy Spirit either meant nothing, and was a taking of sacred names in vain, or it implied that the third person of the Trinity was, as a matter of course, to register the already declared decision of the English Sovereign. No additional respect was secured to the Prelacy from the Catholics. ‘Diablos que se llaman

Obispos,'—'the devils, who are called Bishops,' was the polite expression which Mendoza used of them. Elizabeth when they provoked her threatened to depose them, and when the Howards and the Talbots and the Stanleys, with their attendant satellites of knights and squires, surrendered their hopes of revolution, their reconciliation with the Church of England was not made more easy to them by the possible regularity of a questioned ceremony at Lambeth. The point where Protestants and Catholics approached each other was in the Lutheran theory of consubstantiation: the first Prayer-book of Edward VI., with lighted candles on the altar, would have been a thousand times more agreeable to conforming recusants than the clearest evidence for the bishops of an unblemished Apostolic pedigree, while in its effects it would have been infinitely more harmless.

But neither Elizabeth nor later politicians of Elizabeth's temperament desired the Church of England to become too genuine. It has been more convenient to leave an element of unsoundness at the heart of an institution which, if sincere, might be dangerously powerful. The wisest and best of its bishops have found their influence impaired, their position made equivocal, by the element of unreality which adheres to them. A feeling approaching to contempt has blended with the reverence attaching to their position, and has prevented them from carrying the weight in the councils of the nation which has been commanded by men of no greater intrinsic eminence in other professions. Pretensions which many of them would have gladly abandoned have connected their office with a smile. The nature of it has for the most part filled the Sees with men of second-rate abilities. The latest and most singular theory about them is that of the modern English Neo-Catholic, who disregards his bishop's advice, and despises his censures; but looks on him nevertheless as some high-bred worn-out animal, useless in himself, but infinitely valuable for some mysterious purpose of spiritual propagation.

'Too late' is written against a change at the present day. The Apostolical succession has become the first article of the creed of half the clergy, and religious forms are only malleable in the fervent heat of genuine belief. But to play with sacred things is never ventured with impunity. The retention of the consecration alone rendered possible the attitude of the Prelacy which cost Laud and Charles I. their heads. The revival of the magical theory of the priesthood, which depends upon it, is the chief cause of the hostility between the teaching of the Church and modern science. It has cut off the clergy from all healthy influence over intellect and practice. It has dwarfed religion into opinion or childish superstition, and now at last is betraying life and the world to a godless secularity.

To return to Elizabeth.

In fighting out her long quarrel with Spain and building her Church system out of the broken masonry of Popery, her concluding years passed away. The great men who had upheld the throne in the days of her peril dropped one by one into the grave. Walsingham died soon after the defeat of the Armada, ruined in fortune, and weary of his ungrateful service. Hunsdon, Knowles, Burghley, Drake, followed at brief intervals, and their mistress was left by herself, standing as it seemed on the pinnacle of earthly glory, yet in all the loneliness of greatness, and unable to enjoy the honours which Burghley's policy had won for her. The first place among the Protestant Powers, which had been so often offered her and so often refused, has been forced upon her in spite of herself. 'She was Head of the Name,' but it gave her no pleasure. She was the last of her race. No Tudor would sit again on the English throne. Her own sad prophecy was fulfilled, and she lived to see those whom she most trusted turning their eyes to the rising sun. Old age was coming upon her, bringing with it perhaps a consciousness of failing faculties; and solitary in the midst of splendour, and friendless among the circle of adorers who swore they lived but in her presence, she grew weary of a life which had ceased to interest her. Sickening of a vague disease, she sought no help from medicine, and finally refused to take food. She could not rest in her bed, but sat silent on cushions, staring into vacancy with fixed and stony eyes, and so at last she died.

Her character I have left to be gathered from her actions, from her letters, from the communications between herself and her ministers, and from the opinions expressed freely to one another in private by those ministers themselves. The many persons with whom she was brought into confidential relations during her long reign, noted down what she said to them, and her words have been brought up in judgment against her; and there have been extremely few men and women in this world whose lives would bear so close a scrutiny, or who could look forward to being subjected to it without shame and dismay. The mean thoughts which cross the minds and at one time or other escape from the lips of most of us, were observed and remembered when proceeding from the mouth of a Sovereign, and rise like accusing spirits in authentic frightfulness out of the private drawers of statesmen's cabinets. Common persons are sheltered by obscurity; the largest portion of their faults they forget themselves, and others do not care to recollect: while kings and queens are at once refused the ordinary allowances for human weakness, and pay for their great place in life by a trial before posterity more severe it is to be hoped than awaits us all at the final Judgment-bar.

This too ought to be borne in mind: that sovereigns, when circumstances become embarrassing, may not, like unvalued persons, stand aside and leave others to deal with them. Subjects are allowed to decline responsibility, to refuse to undertake work which they dislike, or to lay down at any time a burden which they find too heavy for them. Princes born to govern find their duties cling to them as their shadows. Abdication is often practically impossible. Every day they must do some act or form some decision from which consequences follow of infinite moment. They would gladly do nothing if they might, but it is not permitted to them. They are denied the alternative of inaction, which is so often the best safeguard against doing wrong.

Elizabeth's situation was from the very first extremely trying. She had few relations, none of any weight in the State, and those whom like Hunsdon and Sir Francis Knowles she took into her Cabinet, derived their greatness from herself. Her unlucky, it may be almost called culpable, attachment to Leicester made marriage unconquerably distasteful to her, and her disappointment gave an additional twist to her natural eccentricities. Circumstances more than choice threw her originally on the side of the Reformation, and when she told the Spanish ambassadors that she had been forced into the separation from the Papacy against her will, she probably spoke but the truth. She was identified in her birth with the cause of independence. The first battle had been fought over her cradle, and her right to be on the throne turned morally, if not in law, on the legitimacy of Queen Catherine's divorce. Her sister had persecuted her as the child of the woman who had caused her mother so much misery, and her friends therefore had naturally been those who were most her sister's enemies. She could not have submitted to the Pope without condemning her father, or admitting a taint upon her own birth, while in Mary of Scotland she had a rival ready to take advantage of any concession which she might be tempted to make.

For these reasons, and not from any sympathy with the views either of Luther or Calvin, she chose her party at her accession. She found herself compelled against her will to become the patron of heretics and rebels, in whose objects she had no interest, and in whose theology she had no belief. She resented the necessity while she submitted to it, and her vacillations are explained by the reluctance with which each successive step was forced upon her, on a road which she detested. It would have been easy for a Protestant to be decided. It would have been easy for a Catholic to be decided. To Elizabeth the speculations of so-called divines were but as ropes of sand and sea-slime leading to the moon, and the doctrines for which they were rending each other to pieces a dream of fools or enthusiasts. Unfortunately her keenness of insight was not combined with any profound concern for serious things. She saw through the emptiness of the forms in which religion presented itself to the world. She had none the more any larger or deeper conviction of her own. She was without the intellectual emotions which give human character its consistency and power. One moral quality she possessed in an eminent degree: she was supremely brave. For thirty years she was perpetually a mark for assassination, and her spirits were never affected, and she was never frightened into cruelty. She had a proper contempt also for idle luxury and indulgence. She lived simply, worked hard, and ruled her household with rigid economy. But her vanity was as insatiable as it was commonplace. No flattery was too tawdry to find a welcome with her, and as she had no repugnance to false words in others, she was equally liberal of them herself. Her entire nature was saturated with artifice. Except when speaking some round untruth Elizabeth never could be simple. Her letters and her speeches were as fantastic as her dress, and her meaning as involved as her policy. She was unnatural even in her prayers,¹ and she carried her affectations into the presence of the Almighty. She might doubt legitimately whether she ought to assist an Earl of Murray or a Prince of Orange when in arms against their Sovereign; but her scruples extended only to the fulfilment of her promises of support, when she had herself tempted them into insurrection. Obligations of honour were not only occasionally forgotten by her, but she did not seem to understand what honour meant.

¹ Here for instance is a prayer composed by her in the year 1597. 'Oh, God, Almaker, keeper, and guider, inurement of thy rare seen and seeld heard of goodness poured in so plentiful a sort upon us full oft, breeds now this boldness to crave with bowed knees and hearts of humility thy large hand of helping power, to assist with wonder our just cause, not founded on pride's motion or begun on malice stock, but, as thou best knowest, to whom nought is hid, grounded on just defence from wrongs hate and bloody desire of conquest, for since means thou hast imparted to save that thou hast given by enjoying* such a people as scorns their bloodshed, where surely ours is one. Fortify,

dear God, such hearts in such sort as their best part may be worst, that to the truest part meant worse with least loss to such a nation as despise their lives for their country's good; that all foreign lands may laud and admire the omnipotency of thy works, a fact alone for thee only to perform. So shall thy name be spread for wonders wrought, and the faithful encouraged to repose in thy unfellowed grace; and we that minded nought but right enchained in thy bonds for perpetual slavery, and live and die the sacrificers of our souls for such obtained favours. Warrant, dear Lord, all this with thy command.'—STRYPE, Annals, vol. iv. p. 440.

* Sic in Strype. Qu. ? 'employing.'

Vain as she was of her own sagacity, she never modified a course recommended to her by Burghley without injury both to the realm and to herself. She never chose an opposite course without plunging into embarrassments, from which his skill and Walsingham's were barely able to extricate her. The great results of her reign were the fruits of a policy which was not her own, and which she starved and mutilated when energy and completeness were most needed.

That she pushed no question to extremities, that, for instance, she refused to allow the succession to the crown to be determined, and permitted the Catholics to expect the accession of the Queen of Scots, has been interpreted by the result into wisdom. She gained time by it, and her hardest problems were those which time alone could resolve satisfactorily. But the fortune which stood her friend so often never served her better than in lengthening her life into old age. Had the Queen of Scots survived her, her legacy to England would have been a desperate and dreadful civil war. And her reluctance was no result of any farsighted or generous calculation. She wished only to reign in quiet till her death, and was contented to leave the next generation to settle its own difficulties. Her tenderness towards conspirators was as remarkable as it was hitherto unexampled; but her unwillingness to shed blood extended only to high-born traitors. Unlike her father, who ever struck the leaders and spared the followers, Elizabeth could rarely bring herself to sign the death-warrant of a nobleman; yet without compunction she could order

Yorkshire peasants to be hung in scores by martial law. Mercy was the quality with which she was most eager to be credited. She delighted in popularity with the multitude, and studied the conditions of it; but she uttered no word of blame, she rather thanked the perpetrators for good service done to the commonwealth, when Essex sent in his report of the women and children who were stabbed in the caves of Rathlin. She was remorseless when she ought to have been most forbearing, and lenient when she ought to have been stern; and she owed her safety and her success to the incapacity and the divisions of her enemies, rather than to wisdom and resolution of her own. Time was her friend, time and the weakness of Philip; and the fairest feature in her history, the one relation in which from first to last she showed sustained and generous feeling, is that which the perversity of history has selected as the blot on her escutcheon. Beyond and beside the political causes which influenced Elizabeth's attitude towards the Queen of Scots, true human pity, true kindness, a true desire to save her from herself, had a real place. From the day of Mary Stuart's marriage with Francis II. the English throne was the dream of her imagination, and the means to arrive at it her unceasing practical study. Any contemporary European sovereign, any English sovereign in an earlier age, would have deemed no means unjustifiable to remove so perilous a rival. How it would have fared with her after she came to England, the fate of Edward II., of Richard, of Henry VI., of the Princes in the Tower, and later yet, of the unhappy son of the unhappy Clarence, might tell. Whatever might have been the indirect advantage of Mary Stuart's prospective title, the danger from her presence in the realm must have infinitely exceeded it. She was 'the bosom serpent,' 'the thorn in the flesh,' which could not be plucked out; and after the Rebellion of the North, and the discovery of the Ridolfi conspiracy, neither Philip nor Alva expected that she would be permitted to survive. It seems as if Elizabeth, remembering her own danger in her sister's life-time, had studied to show an elaborate tenderness to a person who was in the same relation to herself. From the beginning to the end no trace can be found of personal animosity on the part of Elizabeth; on the part of Mary no trace of anything save the fiercest hatred.

But this, like all other questions connected with the Virgin Queen, should be rather studied in her actions than in the opinion of the historian who relates them. Actions and words are carved upon eternity. Opinions are but forms of cloud created by the prevailing currents of the moral air. Princes, who are credited on the wrong side with the evils which happen in their reigns, have a right in equity to the honour of the good. The greatest achievement in English history, the 'breaking the bonds of Rome,' and the establishment of spiritual independence, was completed without bloodshed under Elizabeth's auspices, and Elizabeth may have the glory of the work. Many problems growing out of it were left unsettled. Some were disposed of on the scaffold at Whitehall, some in the revolution of 1688; some yet survive to test the courage and the ingenuity of modern politicians.

But the worst legacy which princes or statesmen could bequeath to their country would be the resolution of all its perplexities, the establishment once and for ever of a finished system, which would neither require nor tolerate improvement.

THE END.

INDEX.

ABBAYS. See Monasteries
 Abbot of Barlings, iii. 242.
 Colchester, 230. Glastonbury, 240.
 Hanged, 247
 A'Becket, Thomas, shrine of, iii. 113,
 114 Abdulmelech, Emperor of Morocco, falls at Alcazar, x. 477
 Abel, a priest, iii. 296
 Aberdeen, the Queen of Scots at, vi.
 608 Abergavenny, Lord, iii. 128, 139 ;
 v. 323, 327, 332, 466
 Abergavenny, Lord, summons gentlemen of south-eastern counties to arms, vii. 179
 Abington, the conspirator, arrested,
 xii. 158. Tried and executed, 171—174
 Accounts, public, v. 121
 Accusation, Act of, i. 206—218
 Acts. See Statutes
 Adams, John, a tailor, iv. 204
 Adamson, Patrick, Archbishop of St
 Andrew's, his miserable end, xi.
 496 Adamson, Peter, his book on the succession, vii. 466
 Adare, Constable of, x. 568. Massacre at, 603
 Adare Abbey recovered by the Irish,
 x. 311
 des Adrets, Huguenot leader, his punishment of the Catholics, vi.
 578
 Adventurers of the West, iv. 328 ; v.
 130
 Adventurers, merchant, vi. 24 ; viii.
 6, 7. Their exploits, 7, 8, 10, 13
 African discovery, English voyages of, viii. 6, 7. Beginnings of the African slave-trade, 8. Portuguese voyages, 8

 Agard, Sergeant-major, his massacre in Wicklow, x. 254—257
 Aglionby, Mr, his speech in the House for liberty of conscience, ix.
 431 d'Aguilar, v. 403
 de Alava, Don Francis, Spanish ambassador in Paris, viii. 315, 408 ;
 ix. 300
 Albany, Duke of, ii. 29. Flies to France, iii. 349. Second disgrace of, 357, 358
 Albert of Bavaria, xi. 362
 Albert of Brandenburg, v. 67
 Alcazar, battle of, x. 477
 Alcock, mayor of Canterbury, iii.
 181
 Aldgate, house in, v. 371
 Aldington, in Kent, i. 311
 Alehouses in 1562, vii. 12 d'Alençon, Francis, Duc, proposed for Elizabeth's husband, ix. 366, 480 ; x. 19, 20, 78, 80, 81. His personal appearance, 370, 494. The letters from Don Lucidor, 170 note.
 His terror at the Bartholomew massacre, 370. Joins la Noue and the Huguenots, 373. Won back to the Court, 379. His views as to the Low Countries, 437, 438. His character and career, 467, 468.
 Sends messengers to Elizabeth,
 469. Invited to visit her, 474, 482.
 Leaves the States at her request, 481. Sends her a letter, 484. His demands, 489. Comes to England, 493. Suspension of the marriage treaty, 503. Again in England,
 xi. 103. The marriage again dis- cussed, 159. His hopes, 161. Offer of St Aldegonde, 166. Accepts the crown of the Low Countries, 168. Moves to Cambray, 176. Money sent to him by Elizabeth, 195, 196. His unexpected visit to England, 197. His interview with the Queen, 207. Kissed by her, 207. Presented as her future husband, 208. How treated by her, 211—214. Goes to Holland, 216. Installed Duke of Brabant, 217. His love-letter to Elizabeth, 222. Proposed marriage with Arabella Stuart, 292. His conduct in Holland, 346, 347. His death, 480.

- Alexander, Captain, at the taking of Bushing, vi. 61
- Alexander, Prince of Parma, x. 476. Regent of the Netherlands, 476. His work, 482. Besieges Cambray, 175. Takes Dunkirk and other towns, xi. 355. Procures assassination of the Prince of Orange, 482, 483. Besieges Antwerp, 565; xii. 11, 21. His letter to Elizabeth, 71. The Queen's reply, 72. His loyalty tempted, 75. Besieges Grave, 81. Establishes himself at Zutphen, 85, 88. Besieges Sluys, 302—304. Attempts to bribe Sir Roger Williams, 305. Remonstrates with Philip, 323. Sufferings of his army at Dunkirk, 323, 326. Receives a deputation from Ostend, 329. Commissioned to treat for peace with England, 329, 330. His letter to Philip, 330—335. Negotiations with the commissioners, 337. His estimate of the English, 352. Corresponds with Medina Sidonia, 407, 408. Refuses to come out of Dunkirk, 425. Besieges Bergen-op-Zoom, 466. Caught in his own trap, 466.
- Algarazi, Father Alfonso, xi. 44
- Alkmaar, repels Alva, x. 331
- Allen, John, Archbishop of Dublin, advice of, ii. 163—166. Murder of, 176
- Allen, Sir John (brother of the above), Master of the Rolls, ii. 181, 187, 189. His judgment of Lord Grey, iii. 421, 429. His evidence to be relied on, 427. Appointed to arbitrate in an Irish dispute, 431
- Allen, Chancellor, v. 72, 79
- Allen, Father, xi. 44, 50. Inveighs against Queen Elizabeth, 44. Answers Burghley, 114. His proposals, 363. His seminary priests, 405, 406. His intrigues at Rome, xii. 45. His letter to Philip as to the invasion of England, 282. Made a Cardinal, 382. Inveighs against England, 383—386. The Pope detains him at Rome, 470
- Alnwick Castle, ix. 146
- Alva, Ferdinand of Toledo, Duke of, v. 143, 145, 404, 455, 519. Advances on Rome, vi. 27, 42. On the restoration of Calais, vi. 136. His advice to King Philip, 162. At Cambray, 170. On Scotch difficulties, 322, 372. On a projected invasion of England by France, 437. On the marriage of the Queen of Scots, vii. 80. His letter to his master on her marriage with Darnley, vii. 268. Leads a Spanish army against the Reformers in the Netherlands, viii. 264. Appointed military governor of the Netherlands, 430. His character, 430. Enters Brussels, 431. Puts eighteen hundred persons to death, 432. Sends d'Arenberg against Count Louis, 432. Executes Egmont and Horn, 432. Defeats Louis at Jemmingen, 433. His policy with the Prince of Orange, 472. His expected treasure seized by Queen Elizabeth, 488. Sends M. d'Assonleville to remonstrate, ix. 15. Prepares for a landing on the English coast, 136. His contempt for the rising of the northern lords, 157. Efforts of the English Catholics to move him, 313—315. His advice to Mary Stuart, 380. Seeks a reconciliation with Elizabeth, 381. Continues pacific advances, 382. Receives Ridolfi, 444. His letter to his master, 446. Ordered to invade England, 505 and note. Refuses to move, x. 18, 35. Prepares to invade Scotland, 67, 68. Anxious to avoid a rupture with England, 96. His incapacity as an administrator, 96. Rebellion in his government, 102, 103. His measures, 103, 104. Besieges Mons, 107. Makes overtures to England, 109, 110. Flushing

- offered by Elizabeth to be betrayed into his hands, 110. His policy, 156. Makes fresh advances to England, 156, 158. Takes Mons, 158. His treatment of the garrison, 158. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, 159. Gives up Mechlin to sack, 163. His eagerness to come to terms with England, 165. His policy, 166. Insists upon the desertion of the Catholics, 168—174. Takes Haarlem, 331. In favour of an English alliance, 333. His plan for employment of English adventurers, 333. Recalled, 335. His opinion of Queen Elizabeth, 353. Defeats Don Antonio at Oporto, xi. 161
- Alva, Duchess of, v. 408
- Amboise, conspiracy of, vii. 336, 338 note
- Amboise, peace of, vii. 61. Broken, viii. 417
- Ampthill, i. 335, 383, 446, 469; ii. 524
- Amusements, English, in the sixteenth century, i. 68—76
- Anabaptism, iv. 419
- Anabaptists, burnt, ii. 257; x. 345
- de Anastro, Gaspar, proposes to assassinate the Prince of Orange, xi. 341
- Ancona, Cardinal of, i. 404 note
- Ancram Muir, battle of, iv. 107—109
- d'Andelot, commands a German army and joins Condé, vi. 594, 597. Behaviour of the Germans, 601, 602
- Andrew, a martyr, i. 478
- Angers, defeat of the Huguenots in, vi. 577
- Anglicans, the, iii. 176. High Church Anglicanism, ix. 347
- Angoulesme, Duke of, proposal to betroth him to the Princess Elizabeth, ii. 229
- Angus, Earl of, marries Margaret of Scotland, iii. 349. Exiled, 350. Suspensions that Margaret will join him, 388. His wife repents, on her death-bed, her conduct to him, 389. Released from prison, iv. 33. His energy and patriotism, 105. At the battle of Ancram Muir, 107—109
- Angus, Earl of, raises his clan for Morton, xi. 25. Goes into Northumberland, 34. The Queen communicates with him, 253. In Gowrie's plot, 270, 306. Applies to Elizabeth for help, 277. Again plots, 434. Proclaimed traitor, 441. Takes refuge in England, 442. Reinstated in the inheritance of the Douglasses, xi. 594
- Anjou, Duke of, proposal to invade England, ix. 232. A suitor for the Queen of Scots, 232, 333, 349. Elizabeth warned by Norris against him, 350 note. His character, 355. Suggested as husband of Queen Elizabeth, 356, 467, 470; x. 19. Negotiation broken off by the Duke, 476. Cecil on the marriage, 477, 478. Becomes King (see Henry III.)
- Annates, payment of, i. 351, 355, 356; ii. 85
- Anne of Austria, Queen of Spain, ix. 294 and note
- Anne of Cleves, iii. 248. Intended for a Count of Lorraine, 250. Her appearance, 251, 273. Lands in England, 272—276. The King's disappointment respecting her, 275. Married to Henry VIII., 278. Preparations for divorce, 315—324. Divorced, 325. Her ready acquiescence, 324. Refuses to attend mass, v. 269
- d'Annebault, Admiral of France, ii. 429; iii. 588; iv. 58, 131, 132, 136, 141, 159—169
- Anthem, National, possible origin of the, iv. 130.
- Anthony of Bourbon, King of Navarre. See Navarre.
- Antonio, Don, the Bastard, of Portugal, x. 478 note. Claims the crown of Portugal, xi. 160. Defeated by Alva, 161. Terceira declares for him, 180. Visits the French and English Courts, 182, 183. Fits out ships, 183, 191. Which are detained at Plymouth, 196. At St Michael's, 266. Escapes, 268
- Antrim, Lord Essex in, x. 527. Landing of Scots in, 582
- Antwerp, vessels of, seized, iv. 95, 110. Jews of, advance loans, 39, 517; v. 110, 313, 516; vi. 82, 118. Sacked and burned, x. 382. Attempt of the Duc d'Alençon on, xi. 349. Besieged by Parma, 565; xii. 11. Treaty for defence of, 22

Apparel, Act of, passed, i. 424, 425
 Ap Parry, iii. 430
 Appeals to Rome, Act of, passed, i. 426, 431. Confirmed by Henry VIII., 433
 Appleyard, John, half-brother of Anne Robsart, vi. 424 note, 426. His statement as to her death, 430 Apprentice system in the 16th century, i. 55. Oppressions of apprentices, 60
 Ap Rice, ecclesiastical lawyer, ii. 310. Letter of, ii. 478
 Aquila, Bishop of. See de Quadra.
 Arbroath, Lord of, on the jury at Bothwell's trial, viii. 121. Notion of marrying him to Mary Stuart, 290, 320, 322. Made commissioner by Mary, 368. At the pacification of Perth, ix. 66
 Archery in England, i. 63, 67
 Arches, Court of, reformed, i. 347
 Ardagh, massacre at, x. 289
 Ardens, the, xi. 395
 Arden, executed, xi. 397
 Ardes, Conference at, restores peace, iv. 171
 d'Aremberg, killed, viii. 432
 Argyle, Countess of (wife of the Earl), vii. 386, 497; viii. 302; x. 208, 212
 Argyle, Countess of, married to the Callogh O'Donnell, vii. 112, 115. Proposal of the O'Neil to transfer her from O'Donnell to himself, 116. Carried away by O'Neil, and compelled to live with him, 124. His treatment of her, 148. Offers to him to let her go, 159. Released, 576. Wife of Tirlagh O'Neil, x. 549. Threatens Ulster, 580 Argyle, Archibald, fifth Earl of, iii. 350, 363. A follower of Knox, vi. 221, 232. Signs an address to Queen Elizabeth, 241. His explanation and apology, 250. Cecil's opinion of him, 389. His exertions unrewarded, 414. His sister married to the Callogh O'Donnell, 112, 115. Sends O'Neil's letter to the English Council, 117. Accompanies Murray with 7000 men, 271. In arms, 318. His resentment at Elizabeth's conduct, 355. Joins Mary at Dunbar, 403. Threatens to join O'Neil, 417. Elizabeth tries to soothe him, 417. She offers terms, 418. Signs the bond for destroying Darnley, 496. His alliance with O'Neil, 541. Detached from the alliance, 560. Presides at Bothwell's trial, viii. 121. His punishment, 302. At Hamilton, 312. Has the nominal command of Mary's army, 322. His illness or incapacity, 322, 323. Refuses to acknowledge James's government, ix. 61. His secret correspondence with Queen Elizabeth, 240 and note. His death, x. 450 note Argyle, Colin, 6th Earl of, x. 450 note. Heads the confederacy against the Regent Morton, 450. Becomes one of the virtual rulers of Scotland, 451. Joins the French faction at Court, xi. 3

 Aristocracy, English, their discontent, ix. 10
 Armada, Drake waits for it at St Vincent's, xii. 294. The stores destroyed by Drake, 296. Preparations for it, 319. Delayed, 322. In the Channel, 349. Number of its vessels, and their names, 377, 378. Its victualling, 379. Its commanders, 380. Incompetency of its pilots, 381. Sails, 388. Arrives at the Lizard, 390. At Plymouth, 394. Engages the English, 395. Off Portland, 399—405. Bears away to the coast of France, 406. Arrives at Boulogne, 406. Anchors in Calais Roads, 406. Pursued by Howard, 406. Driven from its anchorage by fireships, 412—414. Battle off Gravelines, 417. Destruction of the, 417, 418. The scattered vessels pursued by Drake, 423, 426. They escape to the North Sea, 422. Their distress, 438—440. Make for Ireland, 441. Encounter storms on the coast, 446. Disaster at Thomond and the Blasket Islands, 446, 447. Its losses on the Irish coast, 450, 451. Fate of the Rata, 454. Remnant of the fleet, with Sitonia and Calderon, reach Spain, 460. Distress in Spain on account of its destruction, 461 et seq. False reports of its success, 462. Its destruction, how received by Philip, 463, 464

- Armagh, skirmish at, vii. 125. Cathedral destroyed, 559, 561
 del Armi, Ludovico, iv. 123, 127
 Armstrong, Hector (Hector of Harlaw), his treachery, ix. 169
 Arnold, Sir Nicholas, v. 362; vi. 1; vii. 162, 525. A commissioner to inquire into the state of the Pale, 161, 162. His modes of dealing with abuses, 162, 163. Cecil's correspondence with him, 163
 Arran, 2nd Earl of, iii. 350, 362, 363, 364. Declared Regent, 540. Encourages the Reformation, 548, 559, 561, 563, 564, 574. His waverings, 567, 569. Reconciled to Beton, 578. Attacked at Ancram Muir, iv. 107. Joins the French, iv. 320. Made Duke of Chatelherault, 321. Won over by d'Oysel, vi. 248. Asks pardon of Francis and Mary, 308. Returns penitent to Elizabeth, 327. Denies his handwriting, 337. At the death-bed of the Queen Regent, 365. Imprisons his son, 563, and protests his innocence of Arran's plot, 564
 Arran, 3rd Earl of, in England, vi. 217. Thought of as a husband for Queen Elizabeth, 236, 237, 245. His interview with Elizabeth at Hampton, 258. Returns to Scotland, 260, 273. Offered as a hostage to the King and Queen of France, 308. His marriage with Elizabeth pressed by the Scotch Estates, 411. The petition sent to London, 442. The marriage declined by the Queen, 444. Offers his hand to Mary Stuart, 444. Conspires with Bothwell to carry her off, 563. A lunatic, vii. 193; xi. 36, 227
 Arran, James Stewart, Earl of. See Stewart, James Arras, Granvelle, Bishop of. See Granvelle
 Arschof, Duke of, x. 425
 Arthur, Prince of Wales, his death, i. 116
 Articles, Lords of the, vii. 384 note
 Articles of Religion, Henry VIII. draws up the first, ii. 481
 Articles, the Six, in defence of the Catholic Faith, iii. ch. 16. Debates on, iii. 199. Determined on, 207. Called the 'Bloody Act,' 210. Articles detailed, 211—213. The machinery improved, 316. Revised and modified, iv. 9. Repealed, 305; v. 393
 Articles, Thirty-nine, Act respecting the, vii. 473; ix. 433
 Arundel, state of religion in, ix. 116 note
 Arundel, Earl of, deprived of office and fined, iv. 493. Objects to Edward's 'device,' v. 162. Consents to it, 171. Takes advantage of Northumberland's dilemma, 194. Stays in London, 196. Closely watched, 200. Addresses the Council, 205. Goes to Mary at Framlingham, 208. In favour of Elizabeth, 300. Two factions in the Council, 366. His character and position, vi. 152. His quarrel with Clinton, 325. And with Lord Robert Dudley, 525. His interview with the Queen, 590 note. Opposed to Cecil and the Reformers, viii. 385. Works upon Elizabeth, 504. Communicates with Don Guerau, ix. 16, 18. His part in a conspiracy against Cecil, 41, 42. His power in the eastern counties, 73. Arrested, 86, 96. Recalled by the Queen, 258. Renews his treason, 259, 426. Quarrels with Cecil, 285. Brings Bacon back to the Council, 286. His speech at the Council, 289. Arrested, x. 11
 Arundel, Master, iii. 591
 Arundel, Sir Humfrey, iv. 409, 426, 434, 436. Hanged, 437.
 Arundel, Sir Thomas, and the Nun of Kent, ii. 56; v. 33, 39, 45
 Arundel, John, of Trerice, iii. 64
 Arundel, Philip Howard, Earl of. See Howard
 Asbold, Edmund, iii. 438
 Ascue, Sir William, joins the insurgents, ii. 517. See Pilgrimage of Grace
 Ascue, Anne, iv. 204. Brought before Bonner, 205. Second arrest and torture, 207. Burnt, 209
 Ashkety, x. 562, 564 note, 576
 Ashley, Mrs, favourite of Elizabeth, iv. 380, 389. Sent to the Fleet, v. 531.
 Ashton, Christopher, vi. 1—4. In France, 21

- Aske, Christopher and John, gallant rescue by, ii. 552
- Aske family, ii. 533
- Aske, Robert, made the rebel leader, ii. 534. Takes York, 545. And Pomfret, 549. Receives Lord Shrewsbury's herald, 561. His communications with the Regent of Flanders, 572. His measures of organization, 580. Again collects an army, 586, 588, 591. Will go to London, 595. Writes an account of the rebellion for the King, 596. Disclaims the rising of Bigod, iii. 11. Sent to the Tower, 22. His conduct discussed, 25. His trial and last petition, 29, 33. The King's provision for the family of, 34. His death, 38, 39
- Assassination, ix. 502, 503
- Assembly, General, vii. 301; viii. 302. Votes away the bishops, x. 451. Struggle with James VI. and Lennox, xi. 255—274
- d'Assonleville, M., sent by Alva to England, ix. 15, 16. His answer, 29
- Astley Park, v. 342
- Athlone, castle of, v. 73. Burned, x. 288
- Athol, Earl of, accompanies the Queen to the Border, vii. 337. One of the leaders of the conspiracy against Morton, x. 450. Becomes one of the virtual rulers of the kingdom, 451. His suspicious death, xi. 3
- d'Aubigny, Count. See Stuart, Esme
- Aucher, Sir Anthony, iv. 453
- Aucher, Mr. vi. 61
- Audeley, Sir Thomas, Lord Chancellor (afterwards Lord Audeley), on the Commission to try Anne Boleyn, ii. 378. At her execution, 397. His speech, 404—407. His speech on Anne of Cleves, iii. 317. His speech in 1542, 475
- Audley End, Queen Elizabeth at, x. 455
- Augsburg, Confession of, v. 70
- Augustine, James, ix. 341 note
- d'Aumale, Duc, accompanies Mary Stuart to Scotland, vi. 511. Fails to take Rouen, 577. Fatally wounded at Dreux, 602. His death, vii. 49
- d'Aumale, Duc, his part in the attack on Coligny, x. 128. Desired to leave Paris, 130. At the massacre of St Bartholomew, 133. His treatment of Sir W. Wade, xi. 560. Besieges and takes Boulogne, 348, 349
- Averey, John, ii. 379
- d'Avila, Don Christobel de, hanged, xii. 438
- d'Avila, Don Sancho, gains the battle of Mook Heath, x. 337. Commands at Antwerp, 381
- Awnsham, Richard, ii. 379
- de Ayala, Don John, his mission to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 216
- Aylmer, ii. 197; iii. 430; v. 288
- BABINGTON, his conspiracy, xii. 124—129. Warrant against him, 136. Queen Mary's letter to him, 144. His interview with Walsingham, 155. Arrested, 158. Tried and executed, 171—174
- Babthorpe, Sir Nicholas, ii. 546
- Bacon, Anthony, vi. 150
- Bacon, Sir Nicholas, becomes Lord Keeper, vi. 122. Notice of him, 150. Delivers the speech from the Throne, 154. At the controversy at Westminster, 185. Against a war with France, 289. Advocates an alliance with the Huguenot leaders, 461. Opposes the meeting of the Queens of England and Scotland, 572. Delivers speech from the Throne at the opening of Parliament in 1563, vii. 393. Reads the address on the succession, 456. His speech to Parliament, 483, 484. Opposed to the Norfolk marriage, ix. 75. His speech in Council, 286, 287. His opinion of the proposed restoration of the Queen of Scots, 308. His speech against it, 374. And on the opening of the Parliament of 1571, 428. His death, x. 488. His opinion of Elizabeth's proposed French marriage, 489
- Bacon, Lady, wife of the above, vi. 150
- Bacqueville, M., x. 469, 473
- Baga de Secretis, account of Anne Boleyn's trial in, ii. 388
- Bagenall, Sir Ralph, against reconciliation with Rome, v. 453
- Baily, Charles, Ridolfi's messenger, ix. 451. Arrested, 452. In the

- Marshalsea, 455, 456. Racked, 460, 461. Confesses, 462
- Bainham, James, tortured and martyred, i. 561—564
- Baker, Sir John, v. 163; vi. 82
- Baldewyn, Sir John, ii. 378
- Bale, John, his plays, iv. 300. Compares Northumberland to Moses, v. 100. Made Bishop of Ossory, 101. His character, vi. 301
- Balfour, Colonel, x. 334
- Balfour, Sir James, signs the bond for the destruction of Darnley, vii. 496. Charged with the murder, viii. 108. Murder of his servant, 117. Confesses his share in the murder, and pardoned, 199, 200. Charged with having contrived the whole conspiracy, 294. Reward of his treachery to Bothwell, 302. His part in Morton's arrest, xi. 20. His evidence against Morton, 37
- Ballard, John, the Jesuit, xi. 43. The original instigator of Babington's plot, xii. 126. Obtains sanction of Gregory XIII., 126. Travels under name of Captain Fortescue, 126. Consults Mendoza, 128. Details of his plot, 129. Communicates it to Charles Paget, 130. To Gifford, 136. Warrant against him, 136. Arrested, 155. Tried and executed, 171—174
- Balliol College, MS. ballads in, iii. 50
- Balnavis of Dalhill, iii. 554; vi. 219. In London, 283. At the conference of Berwick, 326. His resolution, 338
- Balnavis, Henry, iv. 272
- Balthazar Gorard, assassinates the Prince of Orange, xi. 482, 483
- Baltinglass, Viscount. See Eustace Bangor, petition of the clergy of, iii. 186
- Banister, the Duke of Norfolk's agent, x. 5. Racked, 9
- Barbarossa, Turkish admiral, his ravages, iii. 612
- Barham, Serjeant, his statement as to the casket letters, viii. 519 note
- Barker, the Duke of Norfolk's secretary, x. 5, 9, 50
- Barlings, Abbot of, iii. 242
- Barlow, William, Bishop of St David's, ii. 341. Resigns his See of Bath, v. 252. Summoned to Lambeth, vi. 301
- Barncastle, ix. 130. Taken by the Earl of Westmoreland, 146
- Barnes, Dr, i. 509; iii. 309. Before Wolsey, i. 518. Accuses Lambert of heresy, iii. 152, 153, 279. Found guilty of heresy and burnt, 333, 341
- Barnwell, the Irishman, engaged in Babington's plot, xii. 129, 153. Arrested, 158. Tried and executed, 171—174
- Basing House, Queen Elizabeth at, vi. 413; ix. 80. Cecil at, vi. 414
- Bath, Bishop of, iii. 315
- Battle, state of religion in, ix. 116 note
- Baynard's Castle, escape of the Council to, v. 205
- Baynes, Bishop, at Elizabeth's first Parliament, vi. 150
- Baynton, Sir Edward, ii. 363, 372
- Bayonne, Bishop of. See Dubellay
- Beale, Mr, xi. 235, 238, 239. His mission to the Queen of Scots, 452—454. Conveys her sentence to Fotheringay, xii. 219, 242—245. Present at her death, 251
- Beaumont, Master of the Rolls, iv. 509
- de Beaumont, M., sent to Scotland, viii. 306. At Hamilton, 312. Follows the Queen to the Solway, 328
- Becon, his 'Jewel of Joy' quoted, iv. 360. His opinion of the Gospellers, v. 19
- Beda, Dr, i. 268, 270
- Bedford, See Russell
- Bedingfield, Sir Edmund, ii. 351
- Bedingfield, Sir Henry, v. 193
- Bedyll, Cromwell's secretary, ii. 210, 236, 254. Tortured, vi. 13. Hanged, 14
- Beer, price of, in the sixteenth century, i. 24 and note
- Beggars, licenses granted to, Acts respecting, i. 77, 79, 81—88; ii. 344, 345. Fish's 'Supplication of,' i. 3, 84, 103, 105, 561
- Bekesbourne, vii. 179
- Belemian, Nicholas, iv. 204
- Belièvre, M. de, interposes to save Mary's life, xii. 205. His reception in London, 207. Refused an interview by the Queen, 207. At length received, he remonstrates with Elizabeth, 207—209. His request refused, 210—214. Sends a deputation to the Queen, 215.

- Delivers the answer of the French King on Mary's sentence, 215. His final interview with Elizabeth, 216. Returns to Paris, 217
- Bellenden, Sir Lewis, declines to undertake Mary's commission, xi. 575
- Bellingham, Sir Edward, iv. 385. Made deputy of Ireland, v. 73. His skilful rule, 75; vii. 105. His death, v. 82
- Bellingham, Edward, iii. 623
- Bembridge, the martyr, vi. 85
- Bembridge Down, defeat of the French at, iv. 135
- Benedices, right of presentation to, i. 481, 482. Impropration of, v. 465
- Benevolence levied, iv. 99
- Bennet, Dr, his letters to Henry VIII., i. 403—405. The King's faithful secretary, ii. 3. His death, 19
- Bergen-op-Zoom, siege of, xii. 466
- Berghen, Marquis, opposes Spanish oppression, viii. 428
- Berkeley, Sir Maurice, v. 354. Taken prisoner at Edinburgh, vi. 360
- Berkeleys, the, iv. 130
- Berners, iii. 419
- Berney, Kenelm, x. 28. Undertakes to kill Lord Burghley, 31. Sent to the Tower, 32. Executed, 52
- Berwick, conference at, vi. 326. Defences of, 398. Conference at, to settle the succession, vii. 220, 226
- Beton, James, Archbishop of St Andrew's, iii. 350
- Beton, David, nephew of the above, iii. 303. Succeeds to the archbishopric, 391. Persecutes, 405. As cardinal thwarts Henry VIII., 465. His plans to murder a hundred gentlemen, 527. His forgery and arrest, 540. In Blackness Castle, 543. His character, 550. Lays Scotland under an interdict, 551. Returns to St Andrew's, 550, 550, 560. He and his clergy declare for war against England, 500, 572, 573. Carries off the Queen to Stirling, 575. The Regent's opinion of him, 578. Henry's conditions, 582. Summons a Parliament, 584. His cruelties, iv. 15—18. Uses Lennox, 19. Conspiracy to kill him, 28—30. His triumph, 170. Orders a priest to kill Wishart, 177, 180. His vicious life, 180. His death, 181—184
- Beton, Archbishop of Glasgow, Mary Stuart's ambassador in Paris, vii. 209, 245. His complicity in Ballard's plot, xii. 119. In communication with the Queen of Scots, 139
- Beverley, Constance, iii. 140
- Bewley, iii. 228
- Beza, Theodore, vi. 534. Suspected of being concerned in the murder of Guise, 48
- Bible, the, burnt at Paul's Cross, i. 521. First order for placing it in churches, ii. 490. Translations of it, 491—493. Miles Coverdale's version, 493—497. Misuse of it, iii. 185. Use of it allowed in Scotland, 554. The 'Great Bible,' or Cranmer's and Taverner's, iv. 2. Restrictions to the use of it, 4. Its influence, 187
- Bigod, Sir Francis, iii. 8. Raises an insurrection, 9—11. Sent to the Tower, 10, 26. Executed, 34
- Bill de Heretico Comburendo, v. 393
- Bill, Dr, at Paul's Cross, vi. 123
- Bilney, martyr and friend of Latimer, i. 560
- Bingham, Captain (afterwards Sir Richard), at Dingle, x. 573. Off Smerwick, 574. Ordered to seize Dutch ships, xi. 357. Defeats the Highlanders at Moy, xii. 96, 97. Kills the Spanish prisoners, 448, 453
- Bird, Bishop of Chester, deprived of his See, v. 252
- Bishop, Thomas, Mary Stuart's agent in England, viii. 106
- Bishoprics, intended extension of, iii. 206
- Bishops, their defence, i. 223—241. Eight summoned before Henry VIII., 249. Mode of electing, 482. Opposition to Tyndall, ii. 492. Refuse to translate the Bible, 493. The Bishop's Book, iii. 60. Their severity, 209. Their power restricted, iv. 9. To be appointed by the Crown, 307. Failures of, 496. Advice of, 567. Six new, made, v. 371. Their arbitrary courts restored, 467. Their reception by Queen Elizabeth, vi. 122. Pro- posals for compelling them to submit to the Crown, 125. Their thin attendance at Elizabeth's first Parliament, 148. Resolution of the Catholic bishops, 164. Their speeches in Parliament against the Supremacy Bill, 177. Two Catholic prelates sent to the Tower, 188. Their treatment there, 201 note. The oath of supremacy offered to the bishops, 203, 204. Who refuse to take it, 206. Deprived of their Sees, and imprisoned, 207. Tenure of Protestant and Catholic prelates contrasted, 300, 301. The Bishops' Bill passed, vii. 445—447. The Queen's speech to them, 459, 460. State of their dioceses in 1569, ix. 116, 117. Cartwright's opinions of bishops, 346. Demand the death of the Queen of Scots, x. 85. Growing bitterness against them, 364 note. The Queen's treatment of them, 410. Her speech again to them, xi. 66 note. Their quarrel with the Commons, 81. Their tyranny and avarice, 473, 546. The Queen's treatment of them, xii. 489, 495. Their anomalous position, 499. Their election and consecration, 500.

- Bishops of Toledo. See Toledo
- Bishops, Irish, vii. 527
- Black, Adam, murdered, vii. 393, 394
- Black Book, the, against monasteries, ii. 332
- Black Death, at Derry, vii. 571, 573
- Blackadder, Laird of, viii. 181. Executed, 182
- Blackhall, Mayor of Exeter, iv. 426
- Blackness surrendered by the French, vi. 359
- Blage, Sir George, rescued by Henry VIII., iv. 211. His depositions, 217
- Blois, tragedy of, xii. 350, 474
- Blount, Sir Thomas, his correspondence with Lord Robert Dudley, vi. 424
- Blunt, Sir Thomas, iii. 237
- Bocher, Joan, iv. 407. Burnt, 526
- Bocking, Dr. i. 316. And the Nun of Kent, ii. 53. His death, 95 note
- Bodenham, examined by the Council, xii. 71
- Body, William, iv. 339
- Boisdauphin, French ambassador, v. 147, 154
- Boleyn, Sir Thomas, Earl of Wiltshire, Anne Boleyn's father, goes to Bologna, i. 253. His instructions, 258. On the prisoners' trials, ii. 378. Is not at his children's trial, 386, 388
- Boleyn, Anne, i. 154. Acknowledged as Henry VIII.'s intended wife, 166. Her evil education, 181. Portraits of her, 182. Her connection with Lord Percy, 183; ii. 356. Letter to Mr Melton on, i. 184. Her character by Sir Thomas Wyatt, 185. Her love of eating, 185, 186. Her position, 383. Hunting, 383. Goes to Boulogne, 389. Her marriage, 411, 452. Her coronation, 450—459. Her beauty, 455. On Fisher and More, ii. 117. Declines in favour, 357, 358. Secret inquiries, 359. Her arrest and examination, 361, 362, 367. Her aunt, Lady Boleyn, 365. Her letter to the King, 372, 375. Her trial, 380, 388. Kentish jury, 379. Found guilty, 389. List of Peers by whom tried, 388. Her confession, 395. Her conversation with Kingston, 397. Her last words, 398. Her execution, 399.
- Bologna, Cardinal governor of, on the divorce of Henry VIII., i. 139. Conference at, 254
- Bolton Castle, the Queen of Scots at, viii. 370 et seq.
- Bond of Association for the protection of Queen Elizabeth, xi. 515, 545
- Boniface IX., Pope, i. 487, 490
- Bonner, Dr Edmund, with the Pope at Bologna, i. 402, 410; ii. 15. At Marseilles, 31. His interview with the Pope, 31—36. His profligacy at Nice, iii. 97. Becomes Bishop of London, 454. Opposes church visitors, iv. 299. Is required to preach a special sermon, 424. Fails and is imprisoned, 425. In the Marshalsea, 491, 504. Comes out in triumph, v. 228. Inquiries about the clergy, 429, 486, 489. Prisoners before him, 498. Hunter and Tomkins, 504, 506. His coal house, 560. A lady's letter to, 560. At Oxford, 576. Insults Cranmer, 577. Pole checks his zeal in persecuting, vi. 18. Com-

- mission appointed, 34. Burns Protestants at Brentford, 86. Singled out for the aversion of Queen Elizabeth, 107. How received by the Queen, 122. In her first Parliament, 150. Brought up for trial, vii. 43. Returned to the Marshalsea, 44
- Borders, Scotch, ravaged, iii. 527; ix. 264
- Borghese, de Quadra's secretary, his revelations to Cecil, vi. 553, 554
- Borghesi, Don Guerau's secretary, x. 29, 34.
- Borough, Lord, ii. 517
- Borthwick Castle, the Queen of Scots and Bothwell at, viii. 161
- Bossu, Count, Alva's stadtholder, his treachery at Rotterdam, x. 100, 101
- Bothwell, Earl of, seizes money sent from England to the Scots, vi. 279, 280. Conspires with Arran to carry Mary Stuart off, 563. Escapes from Edinburgh Castle, and imprisoned in Berwick, vii. 185. Randolph's character of him, 186. Imprisoned in the Tower, 186. Liberated, 187. Summoned to Edinburgh, but escapes, 271. Rejoins Mary at Edinburgh, 328. In favour with her, 334. Accompanies her to the Border, 337. Escapes from Holyrood, 392. Attends the Queen at Dunbar, 402. Rewarded, 405. The Queen's affection for him, 436. His character and career, 437. Wounded, 488. Signs the bond for the destruction of Darnley, 496. Proposes the murder, 499. Accused in an anonymous placard, viii. 78, 79, 104. Unanimously considered to be one of Darnley's murderers, 98. To be tried for the murder, 100. Destined to be husband of Mary Stuart, 100. His wife, 100. Castles given to him by the Queen, 104. Divorced from his wife, 104, 151. Makes advances to Murray, 109. Preparations for his trial, 113. Bond between him and the Queen to marry, 114, 115. His trial, 120. The jury, 121. Acquitted, 124, 125. Supper at Ainslie's Tavern, 128. His abduction of the Queen, 142. Intends to destroy Prince James, 146. Created Duke of Orkney, 152. Married to the Queen, 153, 154. Takes the Queen to Borthwick Castle, 161. Offers trial by single combat—his challenge accepted by Tullibardine and Morton, 172, 173. His flight, 174. The casket letters, 202, 295, 300. Escapes to the Orkneys and to Denmark, 260. His imprisonment and death, 260.
- Botolph, Sir Gregory, iii. 332
- Boulogne taken by Henry VIII., iv. 63. The Dauphin's army for its recovery, 66. Charles's dread of its possession by England, 68. The Dauphin's attack, 77. Besieged by M. de Biez, 103, 146. Fortified by Somerset, 269. Expenses of, 498. Evacuated by England, 503
- Bourbon, Duke of, takes Rome, i. 100
- Bourchier, Sir Ralph, x. 303
- Bourges, the Huguenots defeated in, vi. 577
- Bourke, created Lord Clanrickarde, iii. 444
- Bourne, preaches at Paul's Cross, v. 235
- Bourne, Sir John, secretary, v. 366, 373, 469
- Boweses, the, ii. 562
- Bowes, Sir George, ix. 123. At Barncastle, 130. Loses it, 146. His punishment of the insurgents, 180
- Bowes, Sir Robert, uncle of John Knox's wife, ii. 567, 571
- Bowes, Sir Robert, iv. 323; xi. 9, 14, 15, 280, 326, 328
- Boxgrave, church of, ix. 116 note
- Boxley, imposture of the bowing rood of, displayed, i. 568; iii. 102—104
- Boyard, iv. 159, 171
- Boyd, Lord, signs the address of the Scotch Protestants to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 241. At Burton, ix. 35
- Boyer, mayor of Bodmin, iv. 409. Hanged, 438
- Brabazon, Colonel, his desolation of Connaught, x. 602
- Bradford, John, in King Philip's household, v. 536. His account of Philip's designs and character, 539
- Bradford, the martyr, v. 488
- Brading, iv. 134
- Brancetor, a traitor, iii. 266
- Brandon, Sir Charles, Duke of Suf-

- folk, i. 114. In power, 166. Marries the Princess Mary, 181. At Anne Boleyn's trial and death, ii. 388, 397. Made commander in chief, 524. Enters Lincoln, 531. His death, iv. 215
- Braxholme, destroyed, ix. 265
- Bray, Sir Edward, v. 331
- Bray, Lord, vi. 14
- Bray, abbey of, ii. 306
- Brederode, Lord of, iii. 88
- Brederode, Admiral, ix. 485, 486
- Brehon law in Ireland, ii. 137; vii. 103. Account of the Brehons, 106
- Brereton, Sir William, ii. 182, 183. Sent to the Tower, 360. Beheaded, 393
- Brereton, Sir Andrew, in Ireland, v. 79, 87. Quarrels with Tyrone, 88.
- Brethren, Association of Christian, i. 504
- Brett, v. 350, 354, 362
- Bricquemart, M. de, his mission to England, vii. 64, 65
- Bridges, John, iii. 102
- Brigitta, the holy, her vision of Ireland, ii. 124
- Brigittine Nuns, xi. 87
- Brille, town of, taken by de la Mark, x. 100
- de Brissac, xi. 267
- Britain, Great, proposal for the union of England and Scotland under the name of, vi. 284
- Brittany, Tremayne sent by Queen Elizabeth into, vi. 333
- Bromley, Sir Thomas, v. 163, 165. Becomes Keeper of the Great Seal, x. 489. Opposed to the Alençon marriage, 489, 499. His speech to the Queen on the subject, 500. Present from Drake, xi. 158
- Brookes, Bishop of Gloucester, v. 542. Presides at Cranmer's trial, 542, 543
- Brown, Archbishop, iii. 417, 439
- Browne, Sir Anthony, iii. 273, 276. Receives Philip, v. 406. As Lord Montague, receives Pole, 442, 446
- Browne, Anthony, 2nd Viscount Montague. See Montague
- Bruges, conference at, viii. 50
- Bruno, John, at the Calais conference, iv. 161, 162
- Brunswick, Henry, Duke of, iii. 604; iv. 42, 44
- Brussels, conference at, iv. 159
- Bryan, Sir F., i. 154, 446; ii. 385, 524
- Bryant, the Jesuit, tortured, xi. 73. Tried, 100. Executed, 106
- Brydges, Sir John, lieutenant of the Tower, v. 346, 358. Created Lord Chandos of Sudley, 371. Arrival of Elizabeth at the Tower, 383. Concerning Wyatt, 388. A bigoted Catholic, 466. Present at Cranmer's execution, 588
- Buccaneers, first specimens of the, vi. 24, 25
- Buceleuch, Lady (Margaret Scott), viii. 78 note, 105, 150
- Buceleugh, Laird of, iii. 365
- Bucer, Martin, iv. 335. His letters quoted, 507. His bad opinion of England, 558. His body exhumed and burnt, vi. 36
- Buchanan, George, at York, viii. 388. Publication of his 'Detectio,' x. 40
- Buckhurst, Lord. See Sackville
- Buckingham, Duke of, i. 114
- Buckmaster, Dr, his letter, and Sunday at Windsor, i. 281
- Bugden, arrest of friars at, ii. 50
- Bullinger, Henry, letters to, quoted, iii. 26; iv. 222, 385
- Bulmer, Sir John and Lady, iii. 23, 29, 34, 35
- Bulmer, Sir Ralph, iii. 29
- Bulmers, the, ii. 562
- Bumby, Laird of, iii. 373
- de Buren, Count, iv. 49, 75
- Burgh, Lady, iii. 303
- Burghley, Lord. See Cecil
- Burgoynes, writes to Calvin, v. 20
- Burke, Earl of Clanrickard, submits to the English, x. 248. His son Shan, 311. Punishment of his two sons, 542, 543. Surrenders and is imprisoned, 544. Dies, 617
- Burke, MacWilliam, x. 532. Defeats the Geraldines, 561
- Burke, Oliver, pressed to death, x. 594
- Burke, Shan, his antipathy to the English, x. 311. Punished by Malby, x. 543. His immorality, 617. Murdered by his brother, 617
- Burke, Theobald, kills Fitzmaurice, x. 561. Killed, 561
- Burke, Ulick, x. 542. Punished, 543. Called on to head a rebellion, 563. Murders his brother, and becomes Earl of Clanrickard, 617

 Burkes, their feud with the Geraldines, x. 561. Rise against the English, 582. Defeated by Malby, 586
 Burnt Island, occupied by the French, vi. 314. Who are dislodged by Admiral Winter, 315
 Burroughs, Admiral, opposes Drake's attack on Cadiz, xii. 292. And again at St Vincent, 294. Deposed and put in arrest by Drake, 294
 Bushing, fort of, taken by Lord Grey, vi. 61
 Butler, Sir Edmund, x. 235. Detained in Dublin, 249, 250
 Butler, Sir Edward, x. 235, 236. His dependents murdered, 243. Challenges the English man to man, 244. His revenge, 249. Detained in Dublin, 250
 Butler, Lord James, ii. 197; iii. 407
 Butlers, their wars with the Geraldines, vii. 164. Faithful to the English, x. 228. Revenge on Carew's dependents, 235. Destroy the Scots of Munster, 290
 Buttevant, x. 572
 Buys, Paul, x. 360, 361
 Byllington, Thomas, ii. 379
 Bryon, de, High Admiral of France, ii. 229; iii. 501, 505

CABOT, JOHN, his voyage, viii.

- 3
 Cabot, Sebastian, with his father, viii. 3
 Calais, dissolution of the conference at, iv. 84. The Pale attacked, 150. Second conference at, 160. Arrival of Pole at, v. 441. Plots to betray it, vi. 28, 29. Expenses of, 58. Warnings about, 59. Besieged and taken from England, 64—70. Its value, 75. Anxiety of the French to keep it, 135, 393. Instructions of the French King as to it, 140, 169. Elizabeth insists on its restoration, 169, 393, 598. Arrangement of the Congress of Cambray, 176. Refusal of the French to entertain the question of restoration, 393. Sir Thomas Smith's proposal for its recovery, vii. 25. Its formal surrender demanded by France, 92.

- Refusal of France to give it up, viii. 147. The Armada off, xii. 406, 412
 Calderon, Coco, xii. 424, 439, 460
 Calverley, in a passage of arms before Terouenne, iii. 611
 Calvin, John, iv. 340—342; v. 47, 105
 Calvinists, their views of the Prayer Book of 1559, vi. 193, 194. In France, viii. 417. Distinction made by the Catholics between Lutheranism and Calvinism, 436 note. Calvinism at Northampton, ix. 343, 344
 Cambray, besieged by the Prince of Parma, x. 175
 Cambray, congress of, vi. 170
 Cambridge, Act as to Begging Scholars of, i. 84. Deserted, iv. 514. Queen Elizabeth's visit to, vii. 203. Its sympathy with Puritanism, xi. 49
 Campbell, Archibald, iii. 389
 Campbell, Sir John, of Lundy, iii. 578
 Campeggio, Cardinal, i. 146, 164; ii. 86, 205. Deprived of his See of Salisbury, ii. 437
 Campian, Edmund, the Jesuit, xi. 50. His mission to England, 55, 56. Reaches London, 63. Preaches near Smithfield, 64. His success, 65, 75. Challenges the English divines, 68. Publishes his 'Ten Reasons,' 86. His career, 86 et seq. Examined before the Queen, 92. Tortured, 94. His disputation, 99. His trial and execution, 100—107
 Canterbury, interference with the election at, iii. 191
 Caraffa, Cardinal, elected Pope as Paul IV., v. 519. See Paul IV.
 Caraffa, nephew of the last, vi. 53
 Carberry Hill, the Queen of Scots and the Lords meet at, viii. 171
 Cardan, Jerome, his horoscope and the error it has led to, iii. 222
 Carden, Sir Thomas, iv. 7
 Cardigan, our Lady's taper of, iii. 101
 Cardmaker, a preacher, v. 488. Burnt, 524
 Carew, Sir Gawin, his evidence against Surrey, iv. 218. Arrested, v. 355

- Carew, Sir George, ii. 56; iii. 67. Lost in the 'Mary Rose,' iv. 133
- Carew, Sir Nicholas, his account of Italy, i. 254. Tried for treason, iii. 146
- Carew, Sir Peter, a schoolboy, i. 48; iii. 611. Commands the 'Venetian,' iv. 128. Risings in the West, 411, 414, 436. Joins Queen Mary, v. 317. Conspires, 319—321. Flies, 322. In the French service, 372—375. Goes to Italy, 404. On a commission to end the war in Scotland, vi. 375. Restores discipline in the army in Scotland, 388. Ordered to repress piracy, viii. 46. At the Duke of Norfolk's trial, x. 42. In Ireland, 234. His cruelties, 243, 244, 251. Joins Essex, 305. Leaves him, 308
- Carew, Sir Peter, the younger, killed at Glenmalur, x. 580
- Carew, Lady, search at her house, vi. 576 note
- Carews, the, iv. 130; v. 321. Of Mohun's Ottery, 320 note. 322. Offer to settle in Ireland, x. 230.
- Carey, George, proposal to marry him to Mary Stuart, viii. 402, 447
- Carey, Sir Henry, created Lord Hunsdon, vi. 147. Holds the lists at Greenwich, 277. Elizabeth's regard for him, 590. Takes the Garter to Charles IX., vii. 177. Opposed to the Norfolk marriage, ix. 75. Sent to Scotland, 86, 103. Sent to join Sussex in the North, 135. His views of the conduct of the Queen, 173. Defeats Dacres, 214, 215. The Queen's letter to him, 216. On the Border, 264. His letter on the danger of the Queen, x. 53. In Scotland, 63. Has charge of the Duke of Northumberland, 116. Intercedes for the Duke's life, 117. Sanctions Lord Essex's Irish schemes, 303. Ordered to Edinburgh, xi. 18. Sent as ambassador to Scotland, 491. Threatened by Elizabeth, 492. His interview with Arran, 494. Deceived by Arran, 494—497. Sent on embassy to James, xii. 275. His death, 503
- Carey, Sir Robert, his letter to his father, xi. 492. Sent on an embassy to Scotland, xii. 265
- Carlingford, Shan O'Neil's raid on, vii. 161
- Carlisle, Statute of, i. 483. State of the diocese of, in 1561, vii. 19
- Carlos, Don, son of Philip II., v. 309. To marry a sister of Francis II., vi. 371. And subsequently the Queen of Scots, 503, 533, 543; vii. 52. Consent of his father, 77. The project cools, 95. His character, 96
- Carmichael, iv. 182
- Carrickfergus, the Earl of Essex lands at, x. 306
- Carrigafoyle, capture of, x. 569, 570
- Carrigogonnel, taken, iii. 412
- Carrows, account of the, vii. 109
- Carter, marshal of Munster, murdered, x. 559
- Carthage captured by Drake, xii. 37
- Cartwright, Thomas, at Cambridge, ix. 345. Expelled, 347
- Cashel, Archbishop of, offers the crown of Ireland to Spain, x. 237, 263. His fortunes in Spain, 264. His letter to the Pope, 264, 265. Sent over the frontier, 343
- Casket letters, the, viii. 202, 295, 300 note, 366. Proposed attempt of Lord Westmoreland to seize them, 292. Produced in evidence by the Regent, 463. Serjeant Barham's statement, 519 note
- Cassilis, Sir Gregory, i. 127, 135, 143, 163, 264, 385. His interview with Pope Clement, 400, 402, 407. Writes to Cromwell about Paul, ii. 232. And concerning news from England, 279. His interview with Pope Paul III. respecting Anne Boleyn, iii. 435
- Cassilis, Kennedy, Earl of, iii. 368, 531, 566, 578, 583; iv. 31, 108; viii. 121. Taken at Langside, 325. In Dumbarton, ix. 418
- Casimir, Duke, invades Lorraine, x. 373. In the Netherlands, 426. Message from Elizabeth, 459
- Castlemartyr taken by the Irish, x. 310. Restored, 521
- Castlemayne recovered by the Irish, x. 311. Returned, 521
- Castle Island, x. 572
- Castletown, English expelled from, x. 310
- Castro, Alphonso de, chaplain of King Philip, v. 497

Catechism, English Church, author of the, vii. 29 note

Catherine of Arragon, i. 107, 108. Betrothed, 117. Her marriage, 118. Her character, 120, 333. Her position, 151, 153, 333. Her divorce, 161, 252, 261, 273, 391, 405, 406, 430. 447—449. The insurrection party gathers round her, 336. Her letter to the Emperor, 387 (and ii. 49). Her residence at Ampthill, 335, 446. Called the 'Lady Catherine,' 446. Refuses to appear before Cranmer's court at Dunstable, 446. Sentence given against her, 447. She thinks of leaving England, 464. Urged by the Emperor to remain, 464. Ordered by proclamation no longer to be called Queen, but Princess Dowager, 466, 467. Her reception of Lord Mountjoy and the Commissioners, 470. Her conduct at this first interview, 470—474. Her position discussed, ii. 44. Implicated in the conspiracy of the Nun of Kent, 56, 58. Her death at Kimbolton, 350—352. Her last letter to Henry VIII., 352. Her will, 355. Buried at Peterborough, 353. Effects of her death abroad, 424. The Act of Divorce repealed, v. 287.

Catherine de Medici, her marriage, i. 382, 419; ii. 29. With the Guises, iv. 542. Becomes Regent of France, vi. 446. Agrees to the Council of Trent, 478. Her conduct to the orthodox preachers, 535. Sir H. Sidney sent by Queen Elizabeth to her, 550. Present at the siege of Rouen, 584. Makes an effort for peace with Condé, 597. Proposes a marriage between Charles IX. and Queen Elizabeth, vii. 230, 237, 238, 288, 289. Drawn into the Catholic League, 368. Sends M. de Villeroy to the Scotch lords, viii. 186. Her offers to the Earl of Murray, 220. Representations of Chatelherault to, as to Scotch affairs, 290. Declines Elizabeth's proposals, 291. Inclines to Mary Stuart, 306. Her policy of toleration in religion, 416, 417. Seizes English ships, ix. 14. Suggests Alençon instead of Anjou for Elizabeth, 366, 370. Refuses assistance to Mary Stuart's friends, 525. Discussion on the treaty with England, x. 75. Her panic at the conduct of Elizabeth, 112. Determines to abandon the Huguenots, 124, 125. Works upon the King's terrors, 132, 133. The massacre of St Bartholomew, her work, 140. Her difficulties, 155, 156. Makes advances to the Flemish Protestants, 329. Undertakes to treat with the Huguenots, 373. Favours her son Alençon's marriage with Elizabeth, 482. Befriends Don Antonio, xi. 266. Proposes a union of England and France against Spain, 478. Recognizes the claims of the King of Navarre, 480. Advises Henry III. to hear the States deputies, 551. Receives a letter from Elizabeth, 557.

Cathie, Catherine, wife of Peter Martyr, her body exhumed and flung out, vi. 37

Catholic party, meditated treachery of, towards England, iv. 156. In the majority at this time, 125

Catholic faith, restoration of, demanded by the Western insurgents, iv. 416. Distinction between Catholics and Papists, v. 213. Position of Catholic gentlemen, 304. Difference of principles between Catholic and Protestant, vi. 128. Catholic complaints of the result of the elections, 148. Protest of the bishops against doctrinal changes, 165. The theological controversy in Westminster Abbey, 185. The bishops deprived and imprisoned, 206, 207. Catholics if neglected by Philip will apply to France, 332, 333. Their desire to elevate Lord Darnley to the throne, 340. Resentment of English Catholics against King Philip, 403. Search for their conventicles, 486. Catholic clergymen pilloried for sorcery, 497. Dissatisfaction of the Scotch clergy, 531. Randolph's account of their doings, 531 note. Distress and anger of the English Catholics, 540. Disloyalty of the Catholic bishops, 572. The laws against them more strictly enforced, 576. The Mass protected in some places, vii. 19—21. Dis-

- appointment of the clergy, 22. Refused permission by the Pope to attend the English service, 23, 24. Their persecution clamoured for, 29. Penal laws against them proposed in Parliament, 35, 36. And passed, 43. Their conspiracies to murder Elizabeth, 177. Their despair at Philip's friendliness with Elizabeth, 181. Bill for the re-imposition of the Thirty-nine Articles, 473. Effect of the murder of Darnley on them, 523. Catholic re-action in England, viii. 272. Their hopes from the quarrel with Spain, 490. Preparations of the Catholic nobility to rebel, ix. 70. Investigation into the conspiracy, 104, 105. Outbreak of the insurrection, 125. Proclamation of the leaders, 127 note. End of the rebellion, 153. Punishment of the insurgents, 175, 184, 185. State of Catholicism in England, 221. The Catholic nobles replaced in the Council, 259. Catholic convention at Linlithgow, 261. Symptoms of disaffection among the Catholic nobles, 295. A Catholic conspiracy, 392, 394. The Catholic peers determine to petition Spain for assistance, 395. Conspiracy to seize the Queen, 425, 426. Defeated through Norfolk's cowardice, 427. King Philip refuses to help the refugees, x. 34—37. Catholic re-action in Europe, 120. The St Bartholomew massacre, 133—142. Indignation in England against the Catholics, 145. Rage of the Catholics with King Philip, 161, 162. Letter from one to the Duchess of Feria, 166, 167. Fears and jealousies of the Catholics, 166—169. A Catholic plot against England, 510. Catholic revival in Ireland, 536. Victory of the Catholics in Scotland, xi. 42. Tolerant policy of Elizabeth, 47. How affected by the Treason Act, 79—81. See Elizabeth
- Catholics of France, their wars with the Huguenots, vi. 577 et seq. Formation of the Catholic League, vii. 368. Explosion of fanaticism in Paris, x. 74, 75
- Catholic League in Europe formed, vii. 368
- Catlin, Lord Chief Justice, vi. 486 note
- Cavalcanti, Guido, in England, vi. 138, 140. In France, ix. 368
- Cavendish, Richard, x. 45
- Cavendish, quoted, i. 587
- Cawdor, the trooper, shoots the Regent Lennox, ix. 536. Executed, 537
- Cecil, Mrs, mother of Lord Burghley, x. 213 note
- Cecil, Thomas, ix. 135, 152. Goes to the siege of Edinburgh, x. 207. His return, 213
- Cecil, Sir Thomas, appointed governor of Brill, xii. 28
- Cecil, Sir William (afterwards Lord Burghley), iv. 468. On the dangers of England, 538. With Somerset, v. 38. With Northumberland, 140, 148. Signs Edward's device, 169. Brings the Council together, 199. In favour with Mary, 212. In the commission to recall Pole, 438. Mary's chief secretary, vi. 94. Prepares the proclamation of the accession of Elizabeth, vi. 104. Chosen secretary to Elizabeth, 118. His action on her accession, 118. Her words to him at Hatfield, 121. The Spanish ambassador's account of him, 179. His advice to the Scotch Protestants, 251—253. Sends Sir R. Sadler to the North, with money, 257. His views as to the French in Scotland, 294. His sketch of measures for the national defences, 341. Goes to Scotland to end the war, 375. Conditions which he intended to demand, 377. At the conference of Edinburgh, 387. Letter to the Queen, 389. Failure of the negotiations, 394. Arranges all difficulties with Monluc, 395. Receives fresh orders from the Queen, 396. His answer, 396. Return of Cecil to Court, 404. His unpopularity there, 404, 413. His letter to Throgmorton on Scotch affairs, 414. Proposes to retire from public life, 415. His communication to de Quadra, 417, 419. His comparison of the points to be considered in two suitors for the Queen's hand, 424 note. His advice to Sir N. Throgmorton, 450. Uses 'byeways' to prevent the Dudley marriage, 457. Urges a league with the Huguenot leaders, 459. Helped by Lord Paget, 460. His negotiations with de Quadra, 481. In disgrace at Court, 524. Supposed to have been the secret mover of the Lady Catherine Grey's marriage, 524. Maitland not true to him, 576. His notes of 'England's peril if Condé be overthrown,' 576, 577. His angry debate with de Quadra, 591, 592. Generally detested by the people, vii. 12. Endeavours to get rid of de Quadra, 27, 42. Inveighs against Philip, 35. His speech on a penal law against the Catholics, 42. His plan for the succession, 54. His inquiry into Irish disorders, 161. Reopens negotiations for the Austrian marriage, 184. His enmity with Lord Robert Dudley, 197. King Philip's opinion of Cecil, 202, 203. His advice to the Protestant Bishops, 216. His answer to the final demands of the Scots, 231. His correspondence on the Austrian marriage, 238. His answer to Catherine de Medici's offers, 239. Protests of the Bishops against the Queen's injunctions, 257. Letter from Archbishop Parker, 261. His proposals as to the marriage of the Queen of Scots, 270. His views of the perils of the Darnley marriage, 281—284. And of Scotch affairs, 330. Bedford's and Murray's remonstrances, 338, 339. A sketch of the Rizzio conspiracy sent to him, 405. His spy at Holyrood, 419. His table of contrasts between the Archduke and Leicester, 426 note. His notes on the question of succession, 450 note. His advice to Sidney, 567. His Protectionist views, viii. 11. His remarks on the English fisheries, 12—14. His means to 'encourage mariners,' 14. His fast, 15. His protestations to the Queen regarding Scotch affairs, 232. The Queen's speech to him, 238. His answer, 240. His measures, 275. His 'goodwill' to the Austrian marriage, 276. His advice as to Scotch affairs, 305, 319. His view of the position of the Queen of Scots, 335. Sends a sharp note to the northern gentlemen, 341. On the Queen's uneasiness as to her relations with Spain, 439. Differs from the Hampton Court Conference as to the foreign policy of England, 475. His dismissal proposed to be demanded by the Spanish ambassador, 493. Don Guerau's account of him, 493, 494. Desires to assist the persecuted Netherlands, 495. His sketch of the condition of England at the beginning of 1569, ix. 4. Policy which he recommends to the Queen, 8. Cecil the great obstacle to the schemes of Arundel and Norfolk, 13. Imprisons the Spanish in London, 17. Advocates war with Spain, 17. Party headed by Norfolk for his overthrow, 19. His answer to Don Guerau, 39. Conspiracy of Arundel and Norfolk against him, 42. Plan to destroy him, 49. Separates Norfolk from the Catholic lords, 51. His questions to be submitted to the Queen of Scots, 56. Suspects Norfolk, 74. His advice as to Norfolk, 92. His notes on the difficulties respecting the Queen of Scots, 99. His papers, 102. Examination of the Catholic conspirators, 103. Draws up the Queen's manifesto to her subjects, 223. Draws up instructions as to Scotch affairs, 249, 250. Quarrel with Arundel, 285. His opinion on the proposed restoration of the Queen of Scots, 307. Sent to Chatsworth to negotiate with her, 332, 348—352. His view respecting Cartwright, 347. His review of the situation of the Queen, 358 et seq. Favours the Anjou marriage, 358—361. Created Lord Burghley, 427. His spies, 454. His paper on the Queen's marriage, 476—478. Discovers the Ridolfi secret, x. 4—11. Conspiracy to murder him, 28, 31. Sends the conspirators to the Tower, 32. Information sent to him by one of them, 31 note. Becomes dangerously ill, 87. His letter to Coligny, 114. His opinion of the St Bartholomew massacre, 152. His proposals to de Guaras, 164.

Urges the Queen to interfere in Scotland, 185. His rewards for his public services, 320. His advice as to the war in the Netherlands, 240. Draws out a plan of the situation, 359 and note. Attempt of Mendoza to bribe him, 439. His displeasure at the Queen's conduct, 442. On the Alençon marriage, 487, 499. His faith in England, 497. His advice to the Queen, 505. His orders to Ormond as to the rebellion in Ireland, 567. His censure of the English cruelties, 604. Half trusted by the Queen in Scotch matters, xi. 9 note. Publishes the 'Execution of Justice,' 113, 114 and note. Answered by Allen, 114. Supports Mendoza's demands, 153. Drake's present to him, 158. Answers Elizabeth as to the Alençon marriage, 106. His advice to her, 163. Reasons with her, 191. Agrees with Mendoza on disposal of Drake's plunder and a Spanish alliance, 211. Reasons with the Queen on this alliance, 218, 220. His remarks on Elizabeth's perjury, 225. Elizabeth consults him and her Council respecting the support of the Scotch Lords, 309. His opinion of the Queen's policy, 338. Defends her severity to the Catholics, 406. His statement respecting England, 467. Directs the public policy, 470. His letter respecting the clergy, 472. His despair of Elizabeth, 491. Bond of Union in defence of her, 515. How estimated by Mary, 525. Herle's letter to him, xii. 14 note. His eldest son appointed governor of Brill, 28. Acquainted with Champagny's intrigues, 41. Remonstrates with Elizabeth as to treatment of the States, 67. Deprived of his Lord-Lieutenancy by Elizabeth, 169. His interview with Mary, 185. One of the commissioners for Mary's trial, 188. Replies to Mary's denials, 193. His concern in Mary's death, 197—256. Disgraced by the Queen, 268. His opinion of Elizabeth's treatment of the States, 307. Laments her parsimony, 344. De l'Hôpital's letter to him, 345. Arrival of the Armada, and successes of Lord Howard. See Howard, Lord, of Effingham. His death, 503. Cellini, Benvenuto, his description of the English, i. 20. Quoted, 255. Celtic chiefs, v. 71. Cercamp, conference at, vi. 90, 135. Prorogued, 136. Cervino, Marcellus, elected Pope, as Marcellus II., v. 513. Chaloner, Francis, vii. 92. Chaloner, Sir R., ii. 567. Chaloner, Sir T., warns Queen Elizabeth, vi. 284. Notice of him, 285 note. His conversations with the Bishop of Arras and de Feria, 260, 285, 286. His letters on the state of affairs, 313. His letter to the English sailors, viii. 27. His impatience at his residence at Madrid. 44 note. His illness and death, 45 note. Chamberlain, Sir George, imprisoned in the Tower, 553. Chamberlain, Sir Leonard, iv. 498. Chamberlain, Sir Thomas, English ambassador at Brussels, iv. 562; v. 6. Sent on a special embassy to Madrid, vi. 320. His warning to Philip II., viii. 29. de Champagny, M., x. 360, 382. His negotiations with Elizabeth, xii. 39—43, 53. Champernowne, Sir Arthur, v. 320, 322. His letter to Cecil, viii. 484, 485. Share in the Earl of Essex's settlement in Ulster, x. 303. Champernowne, Henry, viii. 485. Channey, Maurice, a Charterhouse monk, ii. 238—240, 243, 248—254. Chantries, iv. 193. Chappelle, French admiral, v. 399. Chappuys, on Cromwell, quoted, i. 588. Chappuys, the Imperial ambassador, iv. 152, 153. Charing Cross, fight at, v. 352. Charles V. supports Catherine of Arragon, i. 146; and Desmond, 156, 159. Crowned, 254. Misery caused by him in Italy, 254. His dubious allegiance to the Papacy, 256, 258, 377. His letter on Anne Boleyn, 387. Meets the Pope, 403. His intrigues with France, 419. Answers Henry VIII., 463. Advises Queen Catherine, 464. Plans for her, ii. 80. Sends to Desmond, 169. His anxiety about Paul III., 226. His offers to France, 227. His successes in Africa, 418. He offers Milan to France, 421—424. Denounces Francis I., 429. Invades Provence, 432, 433. His professions to Henry VIII., iii. 84. His treachery, 91—93, 117, 120. His intentions against England, 157. His fleet, 160, 165. Dislikes Anne of Cleves' marriage, 262. Visits Paris, 263, 270. His interview with Wyatt, 268. His quarrel with Henry VIII. ends, 314. On Anne of Cleves' divorce, 329. On the Milan difficulty, 452. His misfortunes in Africa, 496. His position in A.D. 1542, 499—536. His treaty with Henry, 594—600. His interview with the Pope, 605. At Augsburg, 613. At Spire, 615. Storms Duren, 617. Reviews the English at Landrécy, 620, 621, 623. Makes advances to the Lutherans, iv. 10. Francis' appeal, 38. Recognizes the Confession of Augsburg, 44. Plans for a campaign, 46. Henry warns him against going to Paris, 48. Besieges St Dizier, 52, 58. Moves forward to Paris, 59. Retreats, 64. Signs the peace of Crépy, 65. Remarks on, 67—70. His professions to Dr Wotton, 80. Receives Gardiner and Lord Hertford, 85—87, 92. His correspondence with Pole and the Scots, 109. His disputes with Henry VIII. on the arrest of Flemings, 110. With Paget, 115—118. At the Diet of Worms, 124. Alters his tone to Henry VIII., 155, 160, 169. On the Council of Trent, 258. Differs with the Pope, 330, 456. Negotiates with England, 457. Wishes to make the empire hereditary, 533. Edict against the Protestants, 533, 536. Interferes about the Princess Mary, 562, 565. At Augsburg, 573. With Dr Wotton, v. 5. Goes to Insbruck, 65. His policy to Maurice, 67. Is nearly captured, 70. Decline of power, 70. Shall Henry join him against France? 116. Description of him by Morryson, 118. At the siege of Metz, 143. Likely to die, 143. Interview with Morryson and Dudley, 145. Watches Northumberland, 148. Destines Mary for Philip, 173. Advises moderation to Mary, 214, 215, 219. Recommends a general pardon, 222. Directs Renard, 265. Sends a draft of the marriage, 309. Encourages the Queen, 313. Sends Mary a brief, 325. Advises the death of Elizabeth and Courtenay, 364. Pensions the English, 366. Account of him in 1554, 411. Defeats the French at Namur, 413. With Pole, 436, 439. His intended abdication, 532. Dies, vi. 90. His character and hatred of heresy, viii. 425. His last injunctions to his son Philip, 426. Charles IX., King of France, succeeds to the throne, vi. 443. At the siege of Rouen, 584. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, vii. 64. She sends him the Garter, 178. Proposal to marry him to Elizabeth, 230, 237, 238, 288, 289. Sir Thomas Smith's description of him, 243. Again offered to Elizabeth, viii. 267. His marriage, ix. 368 note. Invites England to join him against Spain, 481. Negotiations for a treaty with England, x. 75—81. Conclusion of the treaty, 81. Offers to join Elizabeth in a war with Spain, 108. Distrust of Elizabeth at the French Court, 112. His liberal policy denounced by the clergy, 123. His character, 127. Influence of Coligny, 127. His indignation at the attempt on Coligny's life, 129. His terrors worked upon by his mother, 131, 132. Scene in his closet, 133. The massacre of St Bartholomew, 133. His miserable death, 180. Charles, the Archduke, proposed as a husband for Queen Elizabeth, vi. 244; vii. 184. She gives hopes of marrying him, vi. 265, 266. Invited to England, 266. Count Helfesteyn's mission to England, on the subject, 329, 332. Anxiety in England for the marriage, 332 note. Proposed for the Queen of Scots, vii. 51. Refusal of his father to let him be trifled with again, 184. Death of his father, 207. Con-

- times the Queen's suitor, 208, 290, 291, 325, 425; viii. 266. His stipulations, 270. Declines to come to England, 281
 Charnock, the conspirator, arrested, xii. 158. Tried and executed, 171—175
 Charterhouse, the, viii. 437. Monks of, ii. 236. Their lives and miracles, 238. Are on Queen Catherine's side, 239. Take the oath of allegiance, 241. Prepare for death, 244. Sent to the Tower, 249. Their execution, 251, 253. Cruel treatment of the survivors, 254
 Charteris, Andrew, iii. 404
 Chartley Manor, Queen of Scots at, xii. 113
 Chartres, Vidame of, comes with offers from the Huguenots, vi. 580. Suggests the Anjou marriage, ix. 356. Escapes from the Bartholomew massacre, x. 137
 Chasteauneuf, French ambassador, intercedes for Nau, xii. 179. His interview with Elizabeth, 180. Interferes to prevent Mary's trial, 205. Accused of complicity in a plot to assassinate Elizabeth, 228. Examined before the Council, 230
 Châtelar and Mary, Queen of Scots, story of, vii. 46, 47
 Chatelherault, Duke of. See Arran, Earl of Châtillon, French ambassador to Henry VIII., i. 431; iii. 158
 Châtillon, Coligny, Cardinal of, Archbishop of Beauvais, sent to London by Condé, viii. 445; ix. 10. His Calvinism, 156
 Chator, Christopher, iii. 149, 290
 Chatsworth, the Queen of Scots at, ix. 292
 Chedsey, Dr, iv. 529
 Cheke, Sir John, Edward VI.'s tutor, iv. 374; v. 185, 199, 208
 Cheke, Mr, in Ireland, x. 586. Killed at Smerwick, 587
 Chelley, of Calais, iii. 611
 Cheny, v. 288
 Chester, Colonel, x. 334
 Chevalier, Joseph, iv. 102
 Cheyne, Sir Thomas, iii. 163; iv. 492; v. 169, 199, 324, 331, 345, 366
 Cheyneys, the, iv. 130
 Chichester, state of the diocese of, in 1559, ix. 116 note
 Chichester, Bishop of. See Sampson
 Chichester, Sir John, v. 320, 322; vi. 5. On the subsidy in 1559, 202 note
 Chichesters, the, iv. 130. Offer to settle in Ireland, x. 230
 Chisholm, William, Bishop of Dunblane, sent to Paris, viii. 158. Undertakes to kill Maitland, xii. 472
 Cholmley, remarkable prophecy of, iv. 517
 Cholmondeley, Sir Richard, suspected, vii. 275
 Cholmondley, Sir Roger, iii. 489
 Christ Church, founded by Wolsey, i. 523
 Christ's Hospital founded, v. 58
 Christian religion, viii. 411, 412. As a principle and as a speculative system, 413
 Christian III., King of Denmark, v. 67, 333, 512
 Christina of Denmark, Dowager Duchess of Milan, proposal to marry her to Henry VIII., iii. 88—91. Failure of the negotiations, 93
 Christopherson, Master of Trinity and Bishop of Chichester, vi. 36. His sermon and death, 123
 Church, the, visitors of the, iv. 297. Patronage of, abused, 507. Neglected services, 508; v. 108. Profaned buildings of, iv. 508. Plate, &c., of, robbed, v. 120. Lands of the, 419. Debate on the, in the House of Lords, 468. They are secured to lay owners, 475. Bull of Pope Paul IV. on, 562. Revision of the Prayer Book, vi. 131, 192—194. Theory of the Church of England, 192. Disorders in the Church in 1564, vii. 206. The Queen's determination to restore order, 248. See Clergy
 Cinque Ports, condition of the, in 1564, vii. 178
 Clancarty, Earl of, submits to Sidney, x. 531. And to Ormond, 574
 Clanrickard, Earl of. See Burke
 Clanrickard, Earl of (son of the above). See Burke, Ulick
 Clare, proceedings in, x. 261. Raid of Sir W. Pelham in, 569, 570
 Clarence, Lady, v. 529
 Clark, John, an Oxford student, i. 523. His death, 546

- Claxton, Richard, sentenced and pardoned, ix. 184.
- Cleisby, Astolph, his trial, ix. 185.
- Clement VII., Pope, i. 137. His difficulties as to Henry VIII.'s divorce, 140, 142. His inhibition, 251. His hatred of the Emperor, 254. Opposes Henry, 257. And the Emperor, 261. Warned by Parliament, 328. On annates, 357. His policy, 379. His journey to Bologna, 402. Interview with Charles, 403—408. His insincerity, 409. His conduct explained, ii. 4. His passion, 15, 34. Threatens to boil Bonner, 15. His alliance with Francis I., 30, 36. His conduct canvassed, 37, 107. Excommunicates Henry VIII., 104, 105. His death and character, i. 255; ii. 122, 123.
- le Clerc, Jacques, or Pié de Pálo, the privateer, viii. 33.
- Clergy, their salaries under the Plantagenets and Tudors, i. 40, 41. Inventory of furniture in a parsonage in Kent, 41 note. Neglect of their duty to the poor, 77. Satire on, by Roy, 101. State of, 96, 102. Depravity of, 195, 197, 220. Act of Accusation against, 208—219. Reply to, 223—241. Discipline Act, 244. Suffer in Premunire, 293—296. Henry VIII. will not pardon, 300. Levying of the fine on, 338—341. 'Benefit' of, 346. Abuse of law of murder among, 347. Their bold language, 368. Finally submit, ii. 84. On oaths, 119, 121. Their conduct, 201, 204. Orders of, for preaching, 204. Their powers in the confessional, 208. Their sullen temper, 475. Marriage of, iii. 186. Their debate on Anne of Cleves, 318. The Scotch, 381. See Convention. Hatred with which ecclesiastical courts were regarded by the laity, vi. 112. Proposals for bridling the clergy, 126. Their acceptance of the Reformation, 203, 204. Marriage of the clergy generally disapproved, vii. 13. The deans and canons and their wives, 14, 15. Destitute condition of the parishes, 16. Temper of the clergy in the North and West, 19. Difficulties of the Bishops, 20. Disorders in the Church, 206. Determination of the Queen to restore order, 248. Discipline, 249. Marriage of the clergy, 250. Quarrel between the Queen and the Bishops, 251. Refusal of the clergy to submit, 259. 'Imps of Antichrist,' viii. 262. Bill allowing the marriage of the clergy, ix. 435. Their condition in 1584, xi. 471—475.
- Clerk, Bishop of Bath and Wells, i. 441.
- Cleves, Anne of. See Anne of Cleves.
- Cleves, Duke of, his displeasure, iii. 325. His answer, 328. Vengeance of Charles V. on him, 618. Death of his mother the Duchess, 618. His submission, 619.
- Clifford, Earl of Cumberland, ii. 542. Protects the Mass, vii. 19, 21. Objects to the elevation of Norfolk, ix. 11. Comes to London to witness Cecil's downfall, 51. Ready to rebel, 70. 'A crazed man,' 122.
- Clifford, Sir Thomas, iii. 2, 16, 378.
- Clinton, Edward Lord, commands the fleet, iv. 372. Governor of Boulogne, 461; v. 333. Admiral in place of Howard, vi. 87. His expedition to Brittany, 88. The Princess Elizabeth at his house, 98. Quarrels with the Earl of Arundel, vi. 325. Advises the prosecution of the war in Scotland, 370. Advocates war with Spain, ix. 17. Marches against the rebels, 148. Takes command of the Channel Fleet, 285. Becomes Earl of Lincoln and goes to Paris to ratify the treaty with France, x. 105.
- Clogher, the English army at, vii. 562.
- Coal trade, iv. 522.
- Cobham, Sir Henry, sent to Vienna, ix. 356; and to Madrid, 443, 487. His reception, 493. Sent again, x. 345. His instructions, 351. Philip's answer to him, 356. Leaves Madrid, 358. Sent to Brussels, 363. His interview with Henry III. on the Alençon marriage, xi. 220. Walsingham's advice to him, 288. Letters between them, 290 note.
- Cobham, Lord. See Oldcastle, Sir John.

- Cobham, George, Lord, iv. 497; v. 195, 323. His house, Cowling Castle, stormed by Wyatt, 332. Arrested, 362. His sons, 348, 352, 353, 362, 381. Released, 384, Receives Pole, 443
- Cobham, William, Lord, his report of the proceedings at Cercamp, vi. 136 note. Sends treasonable letters to the Bishop of Ross, ix. 453; x. 11. Sent to the Low Countries, x. 441. Recalled, 482. One of the commissioners to the States, xii. 309, 328
- Cobham, Thomas, his exploit, viii. 30. Tried for piracy, 31. Escapes his fate, 32. Begg his brother not to injure the Duke of Norfolk, ix. 453
- Cobhams, their robbery of the Spanish courier, vi. 553
- Cockburn, Captain, his mission, vii. 334
- Coffin, iv. 437
- Coinage, the Lords of the Council allowed the privilege of, iv. 487. Reformed by Queen Elizabeth, vii. 2. Why reform needed, 2—4. Elizabeth's proposal, 4. Amount of base coin in circulation, 5, 6. Stanley's suggestions, 6, 7. Proclamation on the subject, 7, 8. Amount of base money called in and recoined, 8
- Colchester, Abbot of, iii. 239
- Cole, Arthur, of Magdalen, i. 525
- Cole, Dr, Provost of Eton, his sermon, v. 589; vi. 185. At the theological controversy in Westminster Abbey, 185, 186
- Coligny, Admiral of France, vi. 51, 448. Seizes a convoy with the English ambassador, Throgmorton, 582. Takes the field with Condé, 597. At the battle of Dreux, 600—603. Rallies the Huguenot army at Jarnac, ix. 39. Money sent to him, 69. Again in the field, 238. Received by the Queen-mother, x. 20. Cecil's letter to him, 114. His urgency for war with Alva, 124. Warned against returning to Paris, 125. Wounded, 129. Murdered, 114, 135
- Colonnas, the, vi. 26
- Colville, Sir John, xi. 309, 322, 331
- Commendone, Cardinal, sent by Julius III. to London; v. 261, 262. Returns to Rome, 284
- Commerce, English, in 1570, ix. 335
- Communion Service in the Prayer Book of 1559, vi. 193 and note. Bill for enforced attendance at, ix. 436, 479
- Companies, London. See Trade.
- Condé, Louis, Prince of, imprisoned, vi. 436. Sentenced to death, but liberated, 442, 443. Takes the field, 546, 547. Character of his soldiers, 547. Reinforces Rouen, 577. Deserted by his troops, 579. Offers Havre and Dieppe to Queen Elizabeth, 579. Alliance between them, 581. Want of sincerity on both sides, 582, 583. Fails to conclude peace, 597, 598. Taken prisoner at the battle of Dreux, 602. Offers of the Queen-mother to him, vii. 61. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, 61. Offers terms to her for the evacuation of Havre, 62, 68. Wishes to continue the war with England, 172. The Queen's anger against him, 176. Establishes himself at Rochelle, viii. 418. Sends Châtillon to London, 445. His reverses, 471. His growing exhaustion, ix. 5. English rovers under his flag, 31. Killed at Jarnac, 39
- Condé, Henry, Prince of, son of the last, in Paris, x. 129. Stands by the wounded Admiral, 130. Ready to march on Paris, 373. His advice on the Alençon marriage, 489
- Conduit in Gracechurch Street, v. 426
- Confederate Lords, Scotch, imprison the Queen of Scots at Lochleven, viii. 181. The defence, 182. Catherine de Medici's message to them, 186
- Confession of Faith of the Scotch Reformers, vi. 408, 409
- Confessional, abuses of the, ii. 316
- Congé d'élire, ii. 85
- Congregation. See Protestants, Scotch
- Coniers, Robert, tried but pardoned, ix. 184
- Connaught, Sir E. Fitton in, x. 248, 260, 541. Revolt in, 518. Desolation of, 602
- Consecration Bill, vii. 447
- Consistory Courts, i. 190. Their

- tyranny, 193, 194. Their corruption, 346. Their espionage, 365
- Constable, Sir Marmaduke, ii. 522; iv. 449
- Constable, Sir Robert, ii. 581, 585, 595; iii. 12. Arrested, 22. His conduct discussed, 25. Executed, 37
- Constable, Sir Robert, a spy, ix. 135, 147. Employed to entrap Westmoreland, 186—188
- Constables of Flamborough, ii. 562
- Consubstantiation, doctrine of, ground of approach between Lutherans and Catholics, xii. 501
- Contarini, iii. 41
- Convocation of Canterbury, surrender of its legislative power, i. 358, 359. On the divorce, 438. Decides against the Pope, 440. Its meeting at St Paul's, ii. 470. Sermon before, 471. Its complaints of heresy, 476, 479. Passes Henry VIII.'s articles, 487. Their petition for power refused, iv. 308. Their proceedings in 1563, vii. 58, 59
- Convocation of York, its character, ii. 508. On the King's marriage, iii. 322
- Convocation, the Irish, iii. 414
- Coo, Christopher, iii. 67
- Cook, Robert, iii. 296
- Cooke, Sir Anthony, vi. 150, 162 note
- Cork, Sir W. Drury in, x. 541. Threatened by Desmond, 565. Escapes, 568
- Cornwall, conspiracy in, for Lord Exeter, iii. 133—135
- Cornwallis, Sir Thomas, iv. 446; v. 334, 352, 366; vi. 59, 122. Arrested, ix. 296. Liberated, 300
- Corporations, property of the remaining ecclesiastical, given to the Crown, iv. 312
- Corrichie Burn, battle of, vi. 610
- Corruption in England, iv. 511. Instance of it, v. 512
- Cosby, Captain, killed at Glenmalure, x. 580
- Cottisford, Dr. i. 531
- Cotton, Captain, the pirate, viii. 38; x. 358 note
- Council, Privy, in 1539, iii. 179
- Council of Trent, opened, iv. 260. Consternation in, 262. Retreat of, to Bologna, 266, 455. Recommences, v. 65. In danger, 69. And is prorogued, 69. Reassembles, vi. 476, 477. Opposed by the Huguenots and the Princes of the Smalcaldic League, 478. Conditions under which England will recognize it, 482
- Council, the English, complaints of Somerset in, iv. 465, 467. Betrays Northumberland, v. 194, 199, 208. Escape of, to Baynard's Castle, 205. Quarrels in, 234, 267. Will permit no levy of troops, 328. Irresolution of, at Wyatt's conspiracy, 345. Two factions in, 366. Outbreak in, 397. Remonstrates with Paul IV., vi. 47, 48. Changes in, on the accession of Elizabeth, vi. 121, 122. Determine to persevere in the war in Scotland, 370. Reasons recommending the Arran marriage, 441. Debate on the reception of a nuncio, 488. The reception declined, 490. Oppose the proposed interview between the Queens' of England and Scotland, 566. Scene between Cecil and de Quadra, 592. Determination of the Council as to the Queen of Scots' marriage, vii. 269. Their view of the dangers from the marriage, 284. Their advice, 287. Assembles in London to deliberate upon the marriage, 331, 332. Their perplexity at the reception to be given to the Queen of Scots, viii. 334. Their determination, 360. Factions in the Council, 495. List of the Council, in February, 1569, ix. 18 note. Vote in favour of Mary Stuart's succession, 77. Meeting on Scotch affairs, 286. Perplexity of the Council at the war in the Netherlands, x. 361. Consider the demands of Alençon, 490. Their advice to the Queen, 497. See Elizabeth
- Council, Irish, their disagreements with the Earl of Sussex, vii. 149, 150
- Council, Scottish, Darnley before the, vii. 442. Propose to bring the Queen of Scots to trial, viii. 225. Their difficulties, 297
- Country gentlemen, incomes and duties of, in the time of the Tudors, i. 40, 46

- Courrières, M. de, iv. 48, 79; v. 177, 320
- Courtenay, Marquis of Exeter, i. 114; ii. 388. Goes against the Northern rebels, 555. At Lord Darcy's trial, iii. 132. To be declared heir to the throne in Cornwall, 135, 136, 139. Sent to the Tower with his wife, 140. Is tried and condemned, 143. Degraded and executed, 147. His wife pardoned, 197
- Courtenay, Lord, son of the above, to marry Mary, v. 213. Released from the Tower, 220. How treated by Mary, 237, 270. Restored in blood, 286. His projects, 300. His conspiracy, 318. Sent back to the Tower, 361. Dies at Venice, vi. 22
- Courtenay, Sir William, vi. 5
- Courtenays, the, iv. 130. Offer to settle in Ireland, x. 230
- Courtesans in Alva's army, viii. 431
- Cousins, Mrs, ii. 365
- Coutances, Bishop of, at Bekebourne, vii. 179. In London, 180
- Coverdale, Miles, his version of the Bible, ii. 493, 497. Preaches at St Mary's Clist, iv. 431, 553. Becomes Bishop of Exeter, 431. In prison, v. 395. Released, 512. At Parker's consecration, vi. 302
- Cowley, Abraham, quoted, ii. 135
- Cowley, Walter, v. 82
- Cowper Muir, retreat of the Regent from, vi. 233, 234
- Coxe, Dr, Dean of Christ Church, iv. 193. Tutor to Edward VI., v. 106. At Frankfort, vi. 220. Bishop of Ely, viii. 500. His second marriage, 500. His land given to Hatton, x. 321 and note
- Craigmillar Bond, the, vii. 496; viii. 295. Destroyed, 295
- Crane, v. 41, 43
- Cranmer, Thomas, Bishop of London, i. 253. Sent to the Emperor, 253, 263. His book on the divorce, 278, 283, 410. Becomes Archbishop of Canterbury, 438, 442. At Dunstable, 446. Issues the sentence of divorce, 447. Tries to save More, ii. 113, 115. On church property, 335, 341. His opinion of Anne Boleyn, 356. His letters about her, 367—370. On Thomas à Becket's shrine, iii. 113. His creed, 177.
- Opposes the Six Articles, 199, 213, 261. Meets Anne of Cleves, 272. Intercedes for Cromwell, 311, 334. Desires to defend the coast of Kent, iv. 130. The alteration of the mass, 212. Summoned to Henry's death-bed, 228. Nominated in the King's will, 235. Eats meat in Lent, 276. Imprisons Gardiner, 302. Opposes the grant of Church property, 313. Prepares the Prayer Book, 382; v. 52. At Hampton Court, iv. 468. Letter from the Council, 481. At Gardiner's trial, 553. The vestment controversy, 556, 558. The Emperor's message, 566. His purity, v. 52. Proposes a Protestant synod, 104. Fresh commission appointed, 106. His reformed canon law, 138. Is the last to sign Letters Patent, 167, 169, 170. Signs the letter to Northumberland, 208. Will not fly, 254. Offers to defend the Communion Service, 255. Is sent to the Tower, 256. Tried and condemned, 295. Delay, 295. Sent to Oxford, 369. His trial, 542—549. His appeal to Mary, 574. His mock trial at Rome, 576. Second trial at Oxford, 576. Pole's letter to him, 578. Wavers, 583. Recants, 584. His humiliating confession, 585, 586. Cole's sermon on him, 589—591. His prayer, 592. His address, 593—597. His death, 599.
- Crawford, Earl of, kills Glamys the Chancellor, x. 451
- Crawford, of Jordanhill, captures Dumbarton Castle, ix. 414. At the taking of Edinburgh Castle, x. 208
- Craye, iii. 260, 290
- Creagh, Archbishop of Armagh, vii. 531. Sentenced to death, but escapes, x. 223, 224
- Crediton, Barns of, iv. 412
- Crépy, peace of, signed, iv. 65
- Crichton, his intrigues, xi. 241, 253. Captured, 513
- Crispin, Dr, iv. 418
- Crofts, Sir James, iv. 498. Surveys the South of Ireland, v. 89. Appointed Deputy, 91. Religion and the Irish currency, 92, 93. Conspires against Queen Mary, 317. Sent to the Tower, 343. Asks

- for mercy, 356. His account of Scotch affairs, vi. 236. His interview with John Knox at Berwick, 250. Assists Arran over the Border, 274. Accompanies the English army into Scotland, 343. Goes with a safe-conduct to Edinburgh Castle, 346. Near the edge of treason, 357. The Duke of Norfolk's letter to him, 358 note. Frauds in his division, 364. His conduct at the assault of Leith, 365, 366. Deprived of his command, and sent to London, 371. In Parliament, ix. 432. Rewards for his public services, x. 320. Controller of the household, 320, 361. Bribed by Spain, 320, 439; xii. 38. His treachery, xi. 180, 181 note. His intrigues, xii. 68, 74. Influence over Elizabeth, 298, 307, 366. Sent to the Prince of Parma, 309, 328. Rebuked by the Queen, 342
- Croke, Dr, his opinion of Italy, i. 264
- Crome, Dr, iii. 177; iv. 200
- Cromer, Archbishop of Armagh, ii. 173
- Cromwell, Thomas, his hospitality, i. 45. His learning, 47. Letter to him from his son's tutor, 48, 49. His early life, 583. His faithfulness to Wolsey, 586. Enters Henry VIII.'s service, 588. His will, 590—597. Writes to Fisher, ii. 52. Leader in the Parliament of 1529, 82. Communicates with Fisher and More, 90. Warns and advises Fisher, 93. His sorrow for More, 114. His letter to Cranmer, 116. Tries Charterhouse monks, 249—254. As to More, 283—286. His scheme for a Fœdus Evangelicum, 297. Issues a commission for the visitation of religious houses, 310. At the trial of the Queen's accomplices, 378. At the Queen's execution, 397. His commission for education, 489. On the King's policy to the Northern rebels, 592. His letter on Pole's book, iii. 43—48. Letter to him from the Queen Regent, 89. On Darcy's arraignment, 132. Hated by the peers, 215. Letter from Willoughby, 238. His papers, 246. His dangerous position, 253. His breach with the King, 255. Prepares for his fall, 257. Patron of heretics, 259. At Greenwich, 275. Protects the Protestants, 279. Failure of his foreign policy, 288. Opens Parliament, 291. Created Earl of Essex, 292. His day nearly over, 296. His conversation with Wriothesley, 299. Causes of hatred to him, 302. Arrested, 304, 306. Accusations against him, 307—309. His letters to the King, 335. His last words and prayer, 337. His death, 336. His character, 339. Effect of his fall in Europe, 445.
- Cromwell, Richard, nephew of Thomas, ii. 524
- du Croq, French ambassador to Mary Stuart, vii. 441, 443. His promises to the Lords, viii. 144, 146. Offers to mediate between the Queen and the Lords, 169. His interview with the Queen, 169—171. Knox's remarks to him on the massacre, x. 180
- Cumberland, Earl of. See Clifford, ii. 542. Protects the Mass, vii. 19, 21. Objects to Norfolk's elevation, ix. 11
- Cumnor, Anne Robsart's death at, vi. 424 note, 424, 425. Inquest at, 426
- Cuniga, Don Juan de, his interview with the Pope, ix. 384
- Cunningham, Robert, at Bothwell's trial, viii. 123
- Curle, describes Mary's mode of correspondence, xii. 140, 142 note. Arrested, 160. Examined, 170
- Currency, debasement of the, iv. 173, 252. Distress caused by it, 350, 351. Humphrey Holt's address on the, 488. Crown debts to be paid by the debasement of the currency, 518. Church plate coined into bad money, 524. Base silver brought to its true value, v. 9. Existing coins reduced in value, 13, 14. State of the Irish coinage, 84. Suffering caused by it, 93—96. Restoration of the Irish currency, 97. Reform of the English coinage, vii. 2—9, 45
- Curzon, Baron, iii. 188

DACRE, Sir CHRISTOPHER,
 iii. 17
 Dacres, of the South, Lord, executed,
 iii. 460—462
 Dacres, of Naworth, Leonard, 'of the crooked back,' his suit with the Duke of Norfolk, viii. 491; ix. 51. The Catholics attach themselves to him, 70. Ready to rebel, 70. His plan to carry off the Queen of Scots, 77. Leads the Earl of Cumberland's tenants, 123. Returns to London, and obtains the Queen's favour, 133. Assures
 Elizabeth of his fidelity, 134.
 The falseness of his profession,
 149. His infidelity discovered, and his arrest ordered, 210. At Naworth Castle, 211. Plans for his arrest, 211—214. Defeated on the Gelt river, 214—216. Joins the fugitive lords on the Border,
 242. With the Duke of Alva, x.
 35 and note. Works on Lord
 Seton, 63
 Dalaber, Anthony, scholar of Alban Hall, story of, i. 526—538. Imprisoned, 538. Recants, 546
 Dale, Dr Valentine, a commissioner to the States of Holland, xii. 309 Dalton, Mr, his speech in Parliament,
 vii. 466. Arrested, 467
 Daly, Robert, vii. 527
 Danby, Sir Christopher, ii. 560
 Danbys, the, ii. 562
 Daniel, John, and the Dudley conspiracy, vi. 5, 6, 15
 Daniel, Terence, becomes Archbishop of Armagh, vii. 161, 531
 Darbyshire, Father, on the Armada,
 xii. 355
 Darcy, Lord, of Templehurst, ii. 500, 501. His character, 539. In Pomfret Castle, 546. With Aske and Constable, 580. At Templehurst, 582, 586. At Doncaster, 588. Refuses to go to London, 594. Denounces Bigod, iii. 11. Sent to the Tower, 22. Tried, and foretells Cromwell's death, 30, 31. His petition and execution, 33, 34
 Darcy, Lord, holds Pomfret, ix. 130
 Darcy, Sir Arthur, iv. 294
 Darnley, Henry Stuart, Lord, thought of as husband for the Queen of Scots, vi. 474, 521, 522, 541—543;
 vii. 187, 224. Difficulties in the way, 192. At Elizabeth's Court, 196, 197, 213. Allowed to return to Scotland, 237, 244. Introduced to Queen Mary, 245. His friends and advisers, Rizzio and Lord Robert Stuart, 245, 248.

 Determination of Mary to marry him, 266. Her demonstrations of affection during his illness, 271.
 Preparations for the marriage, 272.
 Created Earl of Ross, 275, 276.
 Randolph's description of him, 279.
 Ordered to return to England, 297,
 304. His horoscope, 298 note.
 Refuses to return, 309. Marries
 Queen Mary and proclaimed King,
 311. Discord between them, 370.
 His demand for the crown matrimonial, 371, 375. Charges the Queen with infidelity, 376. Joins a conspiracy against Rizzio, 377.
 His position, 436. Mary's treatment of him, 438—440. His terror and folly, 441. His intended flight to England, 441. Before the Council, 442. His visit to Mary after her illness, 490. Absence at the Prince's baptism, 498. His terror and illness, 498, 499. Carried to Kirk-a-Field, 513. His last night, 520. His funeral, viii.
 81. History of the conspiracy against him, 100. Ballad on his murder, 164 note. Threatened investigation into his murder, 360, 382. Opening of the commission at York, 392. And again at Westminster, 453
 Dartington, iii. 622
 Davell, Henry, murdered, x. 559 and
note
 Davison, Secretary, x. 437. Recalled from the Low Countries, 482. Sent again, xi. 423. Sent to the Scotch Lords, 438. Sent on embassy to Holland, 549. His reception by Elizabeth, xii. 59. Presents warrant for Mary's execution, 236.
 His interview with Elizabeth, 236
 —239. Committed to the Tower,
 263. Elizabeth proposes to prosecute him, 269. His trial, 270.
 Opinions of his judges, 271
 Day, Bishop, restored, v. 228, 251
 Day, Provost of Eton, vii. 30
 Dderfel Gadern, miraculous image of, iii. 108

- Delaware, Lord, vi. 14
 Delvin, Baron of, imprisoned, x.
 594. Plot to liberate him, 601
 Denison, Miles, iii. 237
 Denmark, King of. See Christian III.
 Denny, Sir Anthony, iv. 445
 Dennys, Sir Thomas, v. 322
 Denys, Sir William, iv. 328
 Derby, Earl of. See Stanley
 Derham, Francis, iii. 466
 Derick, vi. 11. His death, 14
 Dering, Father, ii. 55
 De Roulx, Imperial general, v. 118
 Derry, first settlement of, vii. 563, 564. Condition of the garrison of,
 568. Pestilence at, 571, 573. The settlement ruined, 574
 Desmond, James, Earl of, i. 156; ii.
 155. In league with Francis I.,
 156. Applies to Charles V., 157,
 169. And to the Pope, iii. 125,
 427. Rebels, 434. Restores religious houses, vi. 30 Desmond, Garrett, Earl of, suspected, vii. 118. Quarrels with Ormond, 164; x. 228. Refuses to join O'Neil, vii. 559, 560. Sent a prisoner to London, x. 228. Allowed to return to Ireland, 292, 299.
 Escapes from Dublin Castle, 310.
 His promises when in England,
 518. Submits, and is pardoned,
 520, 521. Attends on Sidney, 531.
 Called on by Fitz-Maurice to join him, 556. Continues loyal, 558, 559. Rebels, 564, 565. Ashketyn burnt, 564. Offers of Pelham to him, 570. His escape from the Castle of the Island, 572. Without a roof to shelter him, 584. Escapes from Smerwick, 589. In the wilds, 592, 603, 613. His despair and cruelties, 598, 603. His son in England, 603. His escape, 604.
 Refuses to submit, 610. Ormond's campaign against him, 611. Betrayed and killed, 615
 Desmond, Countess of, x. 310. Offers of Queen Elizabeth to her, 570.
 Sues for her husband's pardon, 609.
 Leaves him, 613
 Desmond, Sir James of, x. 558 note.
 Falls back upon Dingle, 562. Executed, 576
 Desmond, Sir John of, x. 558 note.
 Murders two officers, 559. Retires to Dingle, 562. Escapes from Kil-mallock, 577. Joins Lord Baltinglass, 579. Killed, 602
 Desmonds, become outlaws in the forest, x. 592
 Deventer, betrayed, xii. 235
 Devereux, Mr., iv. 217
 Devereux, Walter, Earl of Essex, x.
 301. Undertakes to occupy part of Ulster, 301—304. Lands at Carrickfergus, 306. His failure,
 308, 309. His distress, 309, 312.
 His wife, 492. Appointed governor of Ulster, 517. Reduces the O'Neis and Desmond, 519—521. His campaign in the North, 526. Orders the murders at Rathlin, 527. His death, 544, 545
 Devonshire, rebellion in, against the Prayer Book, iv. 409, 410. Insurrection in, against Mary, v.
 301 Diaz, Francesco, in Plymouth harbour, viii. 481
 Dieppe, offered by Condé to Elizabeth, vi. 579. Occupied by English soldiers, 593. Relinquished, 596
 Diet of Augsburg, iv. 329, 532
 Dighton, Sir Robert, ii. 516
 Dijon, bailiff of, iv. 58
 Dinant, siege of, v. 412
 Dingle, Sir W. Pelham at, x. 573, 574. An Italian and Spanish force at, 582
 Discovery, English voyages of, viii.
 3. John Cabot, 3. William Hawkins, 6. Sebastian Cabot, 7. African discovery, 7. Sir John Hawkins,
 55—66, 476, 479; ix. 508.
 Dobbs, Sir Richard, v. 58
 Donegal, vii. 564
 Doriner, Sir William, vi. 117
 Dorset, Marchioness of, iii. 74
 Dorset, Marquis of. See Grey
 Dorthe, M., iii. 602, 606
 Doughty, John, sails with Drake, x.
 424; xi. 124. Executed, 126 and
 note
 Douglas, Archibald, xii. 177, 204, 264
 Douglas, George, viii. 293. Sent from Lochleven, 304. His services to her, 306. Accompanies her in her escape, 310. Crosses into England with her, 332. In Paris, 377.
 Captured, xi. 275
 Douglasses, the, iii. 548; iv. 105
 Douglas, George, at the murder of

- Rizzio, vii. 386, 388. Excepted from pardon, 498
- Douglas, Lady Margaret, Countess of Lennox, niece of Henry VIII., i. 115; ii. 401. Marries Lord Lennox, iv. 104; vi. 475. Wishes to marry her son, Lord Darnley, to Mary Stuart, 474, 476, 521, 541. Account of her, 475. Imprisoned, 542. Her legitimacy doubted, 542, 543. Demands release, 573. Her husband allowed to return to Scotland, vii. 207. Sends her jewels to him, 215, 219. Again imprisoned by Elizabeth, 269. Released, viii. 91. Her clamours at the murder of her son, 91, 114. Her letter to Cecil, ix. 324 and note. Her history, x. 398. Her death, 455
- Douglas, Sir William, of Lochleven, viii. 308, 309. At Langside, 324. Holds Northumberland prisoner, 170, 171. Refuses to detain him longer, ix. 352. His correspondence for the release of Northumberland, x. 68. Sells the Earl to England, 72
- Dovercourt, miraculous rood of, i. 568. Burnt, 569
- Downs, action with the Flemings in, the, iii. 68
- Drake, Francis, his voyage with Hawkins, viii. 477. His exploits, x. 332, 420, 554. His early life, x. 121. His appearance, 122. The Pelican, 123, 124. Doughty executed, 125, 126. Passes Straits of Magellan, 128. The Spaniards plundered, 129—138. Pelican repaired, 138. Discovers gold at S. Francisco, 147. Sails for the Celebes, 148. Passes through Sunda Straits, 149. Excommunicates Fletcher, his chaplain, 149. Arrives at Plymouth, 149. Received by Elizabeth and her Court, 150. Sent back to Plymouth to land his plunder, 153. Knighted, 157. His presents to Queen Elizabeth and others, 158. Joins Antonio's expedition, 180. Fits out a squadron against Spain, and anchors off Vigo, xii. 31—33. Creates a panic in the town, 33. Captures St Iago, 35. Carries St Domingo by assault, 36. Anecdote of him, 36. Captures Carthage, 37. Shakes the confidence of Spain, 37. Returns homeward, 37. List of his squadron, 291. Attacks Cadiz, 292. Waits for the Armada outside Lisbon, 294. Sends a challenge to Santa Cruz, 296. Sails for Coruña, 296. Takes a carack at the Azores, 297. Returns home, 297. Machinations of Crofts, the Controller, 298. Orders wine and arrowroot for his sick seamen, and offends the Queen, 375. His plan to supply the necessities of his ships, 376. Engages the Spanish fleet, 395, 417—421. Chases the Spanish fleet, 423. His letter to Walsingham, 426. Advises the Queen not to hazard the kingdom, 430. Distress of the English fleet, 431. Rumour of his capture, 462. His name execrated by the Spaniards, 463
- Drama, English, taste for the, i. 70.
- Mystery Plays, 70. Masque at Greenwich described, 72—76
- Draycote, Sir Philip, ii. 581
- Dress before the Reformation, i. 15. Extravagance of, iv. 360
- Dreux, battle of, vi. 601, 602. Results of, 603
- Drumlanrig, iii. 568
- Drury, Sir Drew, associated with Paulet, xii. 238
- Drury, Sir William, v. 193; viii. 118. Offers to challenge Bothwell, 126. On Bothwell's seizure of Mary Stuart, 141 note, 142. His account of her escape, 308 note. Marshal of the army in Scotland, ix. 282. Recalled to Berwick, 290. Surveys Dumbarton, 413. Sent to Edinburgh, 524, 528. His reception, 528. His debts, 530. At Edinburgh, x. 68. At the conference at the Castle, 68. His personal danger, 73. Recalled, 73. Asks for instructions, 200. Ordered to conduct the siege of Edinburgh, 204. Appointed president of Munster, 540. His execution of justice, 541, 547. Appointed lord justice, 560 and note. Driven into Kilmallock, with loss, 563. Returns to Cork to die, 563.
- Dubellay, Bishop of Bayonne and Paris, i. 132. His remarkable letters, 127, 147, 383, 431. His mission to England, ii. 78, 103, 106. With

- the German Protestants, 290.
Desires peace with England, iii.
588. At Hardelow Castle, iv. 57.
Tries to arrange a peace with Henry, 62. Conference at Calais,
79. Seeks an interview with Paget,
83.
Dubellay, Martin, brother of the above, quoted, iv. 68, 133
Dudleys, the, iv. 130; v. 193
Dudley, Arthur, the impostor, x. 318
note
Dudley, Edward, iv. 447
Dudley, Sir John, iii. 67. Created Lord Lisle, 542, 549; iv. 26. Commands the fleet, iv. 128, 131. His letter to the King, 138. Called 'God's own Knight,' 169. At Ardes, 171. Henry's will, 235.
Created Earl of Warwick, 252.
At Pinkie Cleugh, 292. His character, 447. Executor of the King's will, 468. Letter from the Protector, 476. Adheres to the Protestants, 493. Letter from Paget,
500. Ultra Protestant, 538, 547.
His difficulties about the Emperor, 566, 571. Is enriched from the bishopric of Durham, v. 18. Rules the worst phase of the Reformation, 19—21. Illtreats Sir R. Vane,
32. Made Duke of Northumberland, 38. Plans to seize Somerset, 38, 46, 60. His letter to Crofts,
92. Has cause for uneasiness,
126. With John Knox, 136. His anger with Cranmer, 138. His critical position, 140, 141, 148, 151.
Has complete power, 153. Plots against Mary, 158. Persuades
Edward VI. to set her aside, 160.
Accused of poisoning Edward, 172.
Appeals to France, 173. Announces to Lady Jane Grey that she is Queen, 183, 184. Receives Mary's letter, 190. In difficulties,
194. Raises troops against her,
196. At Cambridge, 201. Proclaims Mary there, 210. Arrested by Arundel, 211. Brought prisoner to London, 221. His trial, 238.
His dread of death, 241. Professes himself a Catholic, 243. His execution and character, 245—247.
Dudley, Lord Warwick, son of the above, v. 156, 187. His trial, 239.
Is respited, 245. Commands the army in possession of Havre, vi.
584, 596. Notice from the French to evacuate Havre, v.i. 62. Besieged, 67. His difficulties, 69—
71. Surrenders, 72. Returns to England, 73. Proposed as a husband for the Queen of Scots, 183.
Desires to go against the northern rebels, ix. 145. Marches north, 148
Dudley, Lord Robert, married to Anne Robsart, iv. 526; vi. 199.
Pursues Mary, v. 191. Notice of him, vi. 199, 200. Queen Elizabeth enamoured of him, 200. His part in the affair of the proposed Austrian marriage, 264. Charged with having given instructions to poison his wife, 271. Holds the lists at Greenwich, 277. His anger with Norfolk, 283. 'The King that is to be,' 311. De Quadra's character of him, 336. His growing presumption, 340. Alleged conspiracy to murder the Queen and him, 371. Monopoly in the export of woollen cloths granted to him, 414. Endeavours to deprive Cecil of his place, 417. Relations of Dudley with the Queen, 417, 418, 421. Death of his wife, 416 note, 419, 420, 428—433. Hated by the nobility, 431, 440. His marriage with the Queen protested against by Throgmorton, 440.
Secret advances made by Sir H.
Sidney and himself to the Spanish ambassador, 458, 471—473. Undertakes that England will send representatives to the Council of Trent, 474, 476, 477. Conditions under which Philip II. will consent to his marriage with the Queen,
484. His imprudent exultation,
485. His water party on the Thames, 497. His conversation with the Queen and de Quadra, 497. Quarrels with Lord Arundel,
525. His correspondence with the French and Spaniards, 536, 537,
550. In favour of the succession of Lord Huntingdon, 589. Nominated Protector by Elizabeth on what seemed her death-bed, 590.
Proposed by Elizabeth as a husband for the Queen of Scots, vii.
53, 183, 269. His enmity with

- Cecil, 197. Professes devotion to Spain and Rome, 198. Created Earl of Leicester, 213. The Queen's opinion of him, 217. His conversation with de Silva, 218, 219. His quarrel with the Duke of Norfolk, 263 note. The Queen decides to give him up, 425. Still hopes to marry the Queen, viii. 265. Becomes Puritan, 273. Threatened by Lord Sussex, 282. His hatred of Cecil, ix. 20 note. His activity in the Norfolk marriage, 26, 80, 83. Ready to rebel, 71. Anticipates Elizabeth's fall, 258. His self-sacrifice, 362; x. 21. Pretends to wish for the Anjou marriage, 21 and note. Urges the Queen to interfere in Scotland, 185. Said to covet Lambeth Palace, 411. To be the leader of an army for the Netherlands, 418, 420, 462. Takes shares in Drake's adventure, 423. His disappointment at the result of the States' business, 427, 442, 444, 460. Secretly married to Lettice Knowles, 492, 544. Shares in Drake's venture, xi. 19. Attempts to bribe Mendoza, 157. Questions the Queen as to the Alençon marriage, 208. His proposition, 209. The Queen quarrels with him, 218. Reasons with her, 219. Designs Arabella Stuart for his son, 292, 328. And King James for one of his step-daughters, 328. Commands the English contingent, xii. 23, 29. His letters to Walsingham, 25, 30. Lands at Flushing, 42. His reception by the States, 56. Disasters of his army, 55—58. Confirmed in his position at the States, 72. Disgraced by Elizabeth, 54—64. Executes Hemart, governor of Grave, 81. Writes to the Queen, 81. Proposes the recovery of Zutphen, 85. Enters Gelderland, 86. Returns to England, 88. His maladministration in Holland, 288. The States invite his return, 289. Sent back to the States, 301. Ordered to abstain from hostilities, 302. Attempts the relief of Sluys, 303. Wretched plight of his army, 306. Commands the English army, 392. Intended title for him, 437. His death, 437. Murder of Lady R. Dudley, 437. The Queen's love for him, 437.
- Dudley, Lady Catherine, married to Lord Hastings, v. 156
- Dudley, Lord Guilford, marries Lady Jane Grey, v. 156. To be King, 191. Condemned, 295
- Dudley, Lord Ambrose, iv. 526; v. 295
- Dudley conspiracy, vi. 3—14. Conspirators well received in Paris, 21
- Dudley, Sir Andrew, at Luxemburg, v. 144. Flies to Paris for an army, 203. Tried and sentenced, 240. Respited, 242
- Dudley, Sir Henry, v. 195; vi. 1; vii. 196
- Dumbarton, held for the Queen of Scots, ix. 61, 282. Description of it, 412. Captured by Crawford, 414—416. In d'Aubigny's charge, xi. 12. The Regent Morton confined in, 25
- Dunbar, French troops at, vi. 234, 246. Their skirmish with the English there, 343
- Dunblane, Bishop of, undertakes to kill Maitland, xii. 472
- Dundrennan Abbey, viii. 328
- Dunfermline, Abbot of, his mission to Queen Elizabeth, x. 454. Her rejection of his proposals, 457, 458
- Dungannon, Baron. See Kelly
- Dunkirk, xi. 355
- Dunn, the conspirator, arrested, xii. 158. Tried and executed, 170—175
- Duns Scotus, fate of; at Oxford, ii. 314
- Durham, scene in the cathedral of, ix. 126. Riots in, 213
- Durie, John, x. 178; xi. 257, 273
- Dutton, Sir Piers, ii. 322
- Dyer, Sir Edward, sent to the Netherlands, xi. 422
- Dymmock, Sir Edward, ii. 516
- Dymock quoted, iv. 160
- EBBES, RICHARD, his letter to Cromwell, ii. 417. Letter concerning Spain, iii. 161
- Ecclesiastical Courts restored, v. 467. How regarded by the laity, vi. 112. Their enormities, ix. 341 and note. See Consistory Courts
- Ecclesfechan destroyed, ix. 266

- Edgecombe, Lady, iii. 298
 Edgecombe, Sir Richard, of Cotteyll, v. 322
 Edinburgh evacuated by the Protestants, vi. 249. Sally of the French from Leith into, 28c. The Reformers driven out from, 281. The Castle held by Erskine for the Reformers, 288. For the Parliament against d'Oysel, 309 and note. Protects the Queen Regent, 320, 344. Proposal to seize the Castle, 344. Queen Regent dies there, 385—387. Conference of English and French commissioners at, 387, 390. Korah, Dathan, and Abiram, burnt in effigy at, 520. Protestant riots at, 527. Outrage on a priest, vii. 264. Excitement at the murder of Darnley, viii. 78, 79. And at the capture of the Queen, 176. The Castle held by Maitland and Grange, ix. 524. The Castle Conference, x. 68. Conflicts between Queen's-men and King's-men, 73. Drury's siege of the Castle, 204—209. The Castle seized by Lindsay and Ruthven, 454. State of the city in May, 1580, xi. 9. The Castle in d'Aubigny's charge, 12
 Edinburgh, treaty of, vi. 395. Refusal of the Queen of Scots to ratify it, 503. The recognition of the Queen of Scots a condition of its ratification, 525. Mission of Sir P. Mewtas as to, 528
 Education, progress of, among the higher classes, i. 47. What boys learnt in the 16th century, 49. Enforced on the poor, 54
 Edward III., his sumptuary laws, i. 15
 Edward, Prince of Wales, born, iii. 73. Precautions in his nursery, 78. Brought to the Tower, iv. 247. Offers Anne of Cleves to Seymour of Sudeley, 370. Carried by night to Windsor, 473. Intercedes for Somerset, 475. Proposed alliance with Princess Elizabeth of France, 498; v. 1, 2. His journal quoted, iv. 509, 517, 518; v. 12. His letter to Princess Mary, 24. Confides in Warwick, 37. His character, 101, 102. Falls ill, 142, 149, 157. Medical attendants, 155. His 'Device' for the 'Succession,' 160, 161. Refers it to the Judges, 163, 165. Letters Patent of, signed, 167. His entreaties to Cranmer, 170. Is supposed to be poisoned, 172, 231. His death, 175. Mass said for him, 233. Waste and plunder during his minority, vi. 108
 Eglinton, Lord, his escape from Langside, viii. 325. Presses for toleration, x. 197 Egmont, Count, v. 143, 310. Ambassador to England, 314. Offers to defend Mary, 336, 365. Marries her by proxy, 367. Accompanies Philip, 404. Defeats the French at Gravelines, vi. 88. At the Conference at Bruges, viii. 50. Opposes Spanish policy, 428. Arrested by Alva, 431. Executed, 432 d'Elbœuf, Marquis, vi. 243. Commissioned as lieutenant-general of Scotland and England, 281. Starts with a fleet from Dieppe, 312. The fleet destroyed by a storm, 312. Accompanies Mary Stuart to Scotland, 511
 Elector of Saxe, John Frederick, at war with Charles V., iv. 261. Taken prisoner at Muhlberg, 280. His answer on the Interim, 336. Is persecuted, 337. Set free, v. 70
 Elector Palatine, v. 67
 Eliot, Leicester's agent, xi. 89
 Elizabeth, Princess, birth of, ii. 27. Is declared illegitimate, 400; v. 166. To be betrothed to the Duke of Angoulesme, ii. 229. To marry Lord Arran's son, iii. 564. At Chelsea, iv. 372. At Hatfield, 380. Enters London with Mary, v. 224. Notice of her, 226. Does not attend mass, 269, 270. Mary wishes to set her aside, 299. Leaves Court, 302. Designs against her, 325. Her narrow escape, 329. Conspiracy to make her Queen, 344. Sent for to London, 356. Her entry, 363, 364. Her danger, 376. Sent to the Tower, 378. Her letter to Mary, 379. Arrival at the Tower, 382, 383. Cannot be executed, 392. Taken to Woodstock, 399, 428. Plans for marrying her, 440. Her claims, 473.

To be sent to Flanders, 499. At Woodstock, 527. Received at Hampton Court by Lord William Howard, 528. Her appearance, 530. Goes to Ashridge, 531. And to Greenwich, 534. Bradford's mention of her, 537. Sent away from the Court, 561. Receives the Count de Feria, vi. 93. Letter from Pole to her, 95. Her accession to the throne, 103. Unanimity of all parties at the change, 105. Philip II. expects she will act as he dictates, 107. Difficulties of her position, 108. Embarrassments of her finances, 108. State of parties, 111—114. Her creed, 115. Her address to the peers at Hatfield, 119. Her words to Cecil, 121. Her reception of the bishops at Highgate, 122. Professes to have been overruled by Protestants, 127. Her religious views, 127. Resolve of the Council, 130. Question of her marriage, 133. Philibert of Savoy and Philip II. suggested, 133, 134. The conference of Cercamp, 135. Proposals of France for a secret peace, 137. Philip's offer of his hand to Elizabeth, 141—144. How she received the offer, 144, 145. Her coronation, 145—147. Opening of Parliament, 147. Scanty attendance of the peers and bishops, 148. Meets her subjects in Parliament, 149—153. The speech from the throne, 154. Requested by the Commons to marry, 159. Her reply, 160. The Supremacy Bill, 163. Her refusal of Philip, 166. Insists upon the restoration of Calais, 169. Supreme authority in the Church given to her, 184, 189. Her explanations to de Feria of the doctrines of the Church, 195. Proposal of an Austrian marriage, 197—199. Reported to be enamoured of Lord Robert Dudley, 199—200. In the Chapel Royal, 211, 212. The King of Sweden a suitor for her hand, 212. Her requirements in a husband, 213. Philip's warning, 216. Proposal to marry her to the Earl of Arran, 236, 237, 245. Promises aid to the Scotch Protestants, 239.

Receives a letter of rebuke from John Knox, 246, 247. Distrusts the Scots, 250. Her letter to the Queen Regent of Scotland, 255. Sends Sir Ralph Sadler to the borders, 256. Her interviews with Arran, 257, 258. Gives hopes that she will marry the Archduke, 265, 266. Her interview with de Quadra on the subject, 265, 266. Invites the Archduke to England, 267. Anger of the Protestants, 268. Increasing remark on her relations with Lord Robert Dudley, 269. Quarrels of her suitors, 270. Her interview with the Spanish ambassador, 271. Threatens France, 277, 278. Her preparations for war, 278. Submits her position to the Council, 282. Invited by the Scotch Reformers to be their sovereign, 284. Warned by Chaloner, 284. Opinions of the Spanish ministers as to her prospects, 286, 287. Views of her Council as to war, 289—292. Their advice to her, 293. Her determination to persevere, 294, 295. Sends a fleet to the Forth, 295. Her welcome to the Flemish refugees, 297. Her uncertainty as to the temper of the Scots, 305. Fears to move, 306. Promises the French not to interfere in Scotch affairs, 307, 308. Message of the Queen Regent of Scotland to her, 318. Turns to Spain for help, 320. Her message to Philip, 321. Exercises daily with the train bands, 324. Her conversations with de Sèvre, 326. Settlement of the terms on which she will allow her troops to march into Scotland, 326, 327. Makes a formal alliance with the Scotch Protestants, 327, 328. Fears to be deserted by Spain, 330. Expectation that the Pope will declare her illegitimate, 330, 331. Her naval preparations, 331. Sends Tremayne into Brittany, 333. Entreated by Philip II. not to interfere in Scotland, 338. Difficulty of trusting the troops of the northern counties, 339. The prosecution of the war advised by the Council, 341, 342. Irritation caused by her uncertain policy, 347. Menaces of Philip, 348. Her answer to these threats, 351. And answer of the Council, 353. Refuses to recall her troops from Scotland, 353. Her angry reply to the French ambassador, de Sèvre, 354, 355. Orders the war to be prosecuted, 356. Distrusted by the Scots, 357. Her self-confidence and irresolution, 358, 369. Her annoyance at the news of the failure at Leith, 369. Determination of the English Council to persevere, 370. Another conspiracy to murder her and Lord Robert Dudley, 371. Her conversation with de Quadra as to the reception of a Papal nuncio, 379, 383. Her demands from the French, 391, 392. Conclusion of the treaty of Edinburgh, 395. Sends fresh orders to Cecil, 396. General results of the war, 399. Her crown and independence secured, 399. Her merits and demerits, 400, 401. Quarrels with the conditions of the peace, 404. Anxiety of the Scots for the Arran marriage, 405. Elizabeth's anger at the Scotch Confession of Faith, 409. Requested in form by the Scotch Estates to marry Arran, 411. Advantages of the marriage, 412. Her treatment of Cecil, 412, 413. Goes on progress, 413. Makes up her mind to marry, and again not, 417. Her relations with Lord Robert Dudley, 417, 421. Death of Lady Dudley, 416—430. General expectation that Elizabeth will marry Dudley, 431. Her hesitation, 433. General anxiety to see her married, 433, 434. Lord Sussex's opinion as to her marriage, 435. A lovers' quarrel, 435. Joy caused by the prospect in Paris, 438. Protest of Throgmorton to Cecil against her marriage with Dudley, 439, 448. Delays her answer to the Scottish Commissioners, 442. Declines the Earl of Arran, 444. Implored by Throgmorton to seize the opportunity offered to England, 447, 448. Secret advances to Spain made for the Dudley marriage by Sir H. Sidney, 452—456. Elizabeth advised by Paget to make an alliance with the Huguenot leaders, 460. Sends a letter to the Queen of Scots, 462. Allows Lord Dudley to continue his negotiations with the Spanish ambassador, 471. Her conversations with de Quadra as to her marriage, 472, 473. Will she receive a nuncio from the Pope? 476, 477. Admits a community of religious interests with the Scotch Protestants, 478. Real state of her mind, 479. Conditions under which she will recognize the Council of Trent, 481. Philip prepared to favour the Dudley marriage, 484. Her answer to the Lords as to her marriage, 487. Her interview with de Quadra, as to the non-reception of the nuncio, 490, 491. At a water-party on the Thames, 477. Lord James Stuart's letter to her, inviting her to recognize the Queen of Scots as her heir-presumptive, 501. Dangers to which this recognition would expose her, 502. Precautions against poison, 502. Refuses to allow Mary Stuart to pass through England, 505. Her letter to the Scotch Estates, 506. Contrasted with Mary, 510. Uncertainty of the Scotch Protestants about her, 512. Her anger with Lady Catherine Grey and Lord Hertford, 523. Refuses to declare the Queen of Scots her heir-presumptive, 526. Courteous messages between her and Mary, 528—530. De Quadra's conversation about the Dudley marriage, 537. Her anger with Lady Lennox, 541—543. Entreated by Throgmorton to help the Huguenots, 548, 549. Other interviews with de Quadra, 555, 556—558. Would secure toleration in France, 561. Desires an interview with Queen of Scots, 566, 567. Opposition of Sir N. Bacon, 567. Resolves to abandon the meeting, 574. Offered Havre and Dieppe by the Huguenots, 579. Her hesitation and its consequences, 580. Concludes an alliance with Condé, 581. Want of sincerity on both sides, 582, 583. Declaration of her objects, 586. Conspiracy of the Poles against her, 587. Attacked by small-pox, 588. Recovers, 590. Reinforces the English in Havre, 596. Her answer to the Prince of Condé, 598. Insists on the restoration of Calais, 598. Her letter to the Queen of Scots, 610, 611 note. Her reformation of the coinage, vii. 2—9. Her remarks on the state of the parish churches, 17. Her uncertain conduct as to religion, 21. Advised to attempt the recovery of Calais, 25. Her resolution about the Scottish succession, 26. Opens Parliament, 31. Debate in Parliament on the succession, 33—35. Her letter to Sir T. Smith on the civil war in France, 38. Petitioned by Parliament, 39. Her answer, 41. Proposes Lord Robert Dudley to the Queen of Scots, 53. Her speech to Parliament, 56. Menacing attitude of King Philip, 59. Her message to Condé, 61. Elizabeth refuses to evacuate Havre, 62. Her interviews with M. de Bricquemaut and Paul de Foix, 64, 65. Again rejects the French proposals, 69. But finally consents to surrender the town, 72. Her proclamation commending the defenders, 73. Conditions on which she will recognize the Queen of Scots, 85. The right of Elizabeth to interfere in the Scotch marriage, 86, 87. Her high spirits in danger, 92. Refuses King Philip's offer of mediation between England and France, 93. Again addresses the Queen of Scots, 94. Relations between England and Spain, 96. Shan O'Neil's letter to her, 120, 121. Her vexation at the losses in Tyrone, 129. Reinforces the army in Ireland, 130. Sends O'Neil a safe-conduct, 130, 134. His appearance before her, 136. Makes an agreement with him, and allows him to return, 141, 142. Defeat of her troops in Ireland, 152. Her resolution as to that country, 153. Empowers Sir T. Cusack to make terms with O'Neil, 154. Her indignation at an attempt to poison O'Neil, 156. Her war with France, 166, 167. And negotiations for peace, 169—

174. Peace of Troyes concluded, 176. Friendliness of King Philip, 181. He sends an ambassador to Elizabeth, 181. Her attitude towards the Queen of Scots, 182. Offers her Lord Robert Dudley in marriage, 183, 188. Liberates Bothwell, 187. Her reception of the new Spanish ambassador, de Silva, 196—200. Goes on progress, 203. At Cambridge, 203, 204. Offended by the students, 205. Again makes advances to the Archduke, 207. Her interview with Sir James Melville, 211. Creates Dudley Earl of Leicester, 213. Her high opinion of Leicester, 217. Her conversations with de Silva, 217, 218, 243. Proposed marriage between her and the King of France, 230, 238. Allows Darnley to return to Scotland, 237, 244. Her answer to Catherine de Medici, 238. Postpones the settlement of the succession, 247. Determines to restore order in the Church, 248. Insists on the observance of the Act of Uniformity, 253. Revives the ceremonies of the Carnival, 255. Goes to St Paul's cross, 256. Guest's sermon before her, 260. She affects Catholic usages, 260. The Leicester scandals revived, 263. Her excitement at news of the Darnley marriage, 269. Sends Throgmorton to Scotland, 270. His report, 277, 278. Question of her own marriage revived, 287, 291, 295, 325, 424. Her conversations with de Foix, 289, 290. Her embarrassments, 293. Demands the extradition of Lennox and Darnley, 297. Invites the Scotch Protestants to rebel, 299, 303. Sends Tamworth to the Queen of Scots, 313. Mary's demands, 316. Elizabeth's irresolution, 320. Abandons Murray, 323. Her private feelings on her marriage, 326. Her message to the Scotch Lords, 336. Bedford and Murray's remonstrance, 338, 339. Receives Murray in form, 344. Denies her encouragement of the rebellion, 345. Murray's private protest, 349. Her letters to the Queen of Scots, 350, 379, 380. Her instructions to Randolph, 351, 352. Probable consequences of her conduct, 353—358. Begins to recover herself, 366, 379. General character of her policy, 408—410. Takes Mary Stuart's side, 413. Mary's letter, 414. Required to surrender the fugitive lords, 416. Remonstrates with Mary, 422. Her receipt of the news of the birth of James Stuart, 428. At Oxford, 432. Returns to Windsor, 435. Promises to marry, 449. Her conversations with de Silva as to the succession, 452. Sends separately for the Lords, 455. Complains of the conduct of Leicester, 456. Her reply to the address, 458. Her quarrel with the Commons, 462—464. Their remonstrance, 465. One of their members arrested, 467. Elizabeth yields to their demands, 468. Her answer to them on the Subsidy Bill, 470. Advised by de Silva to dissolve Parliament, 475. Seems to have resolved on marriage, 479. Forbids the discussion of the Scottish title, 479. Proposed bond between her and Mary Stuart, 481. Her speech to Parliament, 484—486. Sends Bedford to James's baptism, 497. Sends Sidney as deputy to Ireland, 536. Quarrels with him, 548, 555, 566. Consents to a war with O'Neil, 549, 558. Letter from the Duchess of Parma, viii. 38. Excludes Flemings from English ports, 42. Her answer to the Duchess, 42. Attempts to repress piracy, 46. Her receipt of the news of the murder of Darnley, 93. Her contempt for Lady C. Grey, 93. Writes to the Queen of Scots, 96, 133, 134. Asks her to delay Bothwell's trial, 118. Demands the surrender of Calais, but is refused, 147. Declares against the Confederate Lords, 189. Her letter to Mary Stuart on her marriage with Bothwell, 191—193. Sends Throgmorton to the Confederate Lords, 194. Matland's opinion of her, 214. Threatens to invade Scotland, 217. Effect of her interference in Scotch affairs at this time, 231. Her speech to Cecil, 239. Her displeasure at events in Scotland, 254. Creates a faction for the Queen of Scots, 256. Her troubles and vexations, 261. Question of her marriage again, 265. The Archduke Charles, 266—272. Leicester's hopes, 265. Elizabeth sends Lord Sussex to Vienna, 266. Supposed to be in earnest, 267. Suspension of the negotiations, 269. His conditions, 270. Refusal of the Archduke to come to England, 281. End of the negotiations, 283. Her proposals as to Scotland, 291. Escape of the Queen of Scots, 309. Invited to help her, 315. Proposes to mediate, 316. Defeat of Mary at Langside, 325. Protects Mary against her enemies, 329, 330. Proposes to entertain her as her rank deserves, 335. But changes her mind, 340. Sends Scrope and Knowles to take charge of her, 341. Prohibits further hostilities, 347. Refuses Lord Fleming a passport to France, 347. Declines to see Mary, 349, 364. Her terms for reinstating Mary, 371. Institutes an inquiry into Darnley's murder, 384. Her instructions to the Commissioners, 391. Her vacillation again, 404, 405. Feelings at the bottom of her Church policy, 434. Her Lutheran tendencies, 434. Her reception in the streets of London, 437. Goes to St Alban's, 439. Uneasy at her relations with Spain, 439. At Hatfield, 442. Receives the Cardinal of Chatillon, 445. Hears of a proposed marriage between Mary Stuart and Norfolk, 445. Summons peers to Hampton Court, 450. Her interviews with the Bishop of Ross, 461, 462, 465. Advises the Queen of Scots to confirm her abdication, 467. Her conversation with La Mothe on toleration, 473. Retains the Spanish treasure, 487, 488. Probability of a war with Spain, 489. Her explanation of the seizure of the treasure, 496. Her interview with Lord Arundel, 504. Her perplexity, 507. Close of the inquiry into the Darnley murder, 511. Sir F. Knowles' opinion of her conduct, 511. Her letter to Mary Stuart, 514. Resumé of her proceedings, 524—526. Her position in 1569, ix. 6. Cecil's policy, 8. Her vacillation as to the Spanish treasure, 15, 16. Scene at the palace, 20 note. Offered peace or war by France, 32. Her arrangements with Murray as to Mary Stuart, 33. Her irritation against Cecil, 38. Desires to be quit of the Queen of Scots, 52, 55. Determines to restore her, 64. Her message to Murray, 67. Threatens to marry, 76. Goes to Richmond, 78. Her interview with Norfolk, 79. Goes to Basing House, 80. Forbids Norfolk's marriage, 83. Cecil's advice as to Norfolk, 92. She sends Norfolk to the Tower, 93. Her fresh uncertainties about the Queen of Scots, 97. Her surprise at the insurrection in the North, 133. Raises an army, 143. Her conversation with the French ambassador on the condition of Christendom, 155, 156. Demands the extradition of the rebels, 171, 173. Lord Hunsdon's opinion as to her conduct, 173, 174. Her punishment of the insurgents, 175, 178—180. Her treatment of the Earl of Sussex, 178. Her grief at the news of the murder of the Regent of Scotland, 208. Sends Randolph back to Edinburgh, 209. Her letter to Lord Hunsdon, 216, 217. Her good fortune, 220. Her manifesto to the people of England, 223. Sense in which she was Head of the Church, 225. Determination of the Pope to excommunicate and depose her, 227, 228, 279. A party of assassins engaged to murder her, 232. Her sketch of Mary Stuart's history, 235. Her causes for uneasiness, 238, 239. Her intentions towards the Queen of Scots, 240. Her message to the Scotch lords, 247. Unwilling to support the Scotch Protestants, 251. Maitland's letter to her, 256. Demands of the Linlithgow Convention, 261, 262. Letter from the Earl of Sussex to her, 269 note. Her embarrassment, 274, 291. Writes to Sussex, 274. The Pope's Bull nailed on the Bishop of London's door, 282. The Queen's temper, 296. Determined to reinstate the Queen of Scots, 322. The conditions, 326. Her letter to Mary, 332. Her marriage again, 358. Anjou suggested for her, 356. Cecil's review of the situation, 358. Her conversation with the French ambassador, 358—361. Alençon proposed to be substituted for Anjou, 366. Causes of her unwillingness to encounter a Parliament, 422, 423. Question of the succession again, 422, 423. Defeat of a conspiracy to seize her person, 425, 426. Act for the protection of the Queen, 438. Her ungracious termination of the session, 442. Sends Sir H. Cobham to Philip II., 443, 487. The Anjou marriage again, 467—480; x. 19. Her insincerity, ix. 472, 473. The Anjou marriage broken off by the Duke, 476. Invited to join France against Spain, 481. Cobham's return, 494. Resolution to have her murdered, 498. Vitelli offers to kill her, 502. Sends Sir W. Drury to Edinburgh, 524, 529. Worked upon by Maitland, 526; x. 73. Sends the Duke of Norfolk to the Tower, x. 7. Arrests other peers, 11. Her advisers, 24. Allows the publication of a narrative of the Queen of Scots' crimes, 41. Her unwillingness to consent to the Duke of Norfolk's execution, 50. Signs the warrant for his death, but respites him, 52. Extreme danger of her position, 53. Her answer to the Queen of Scots' intercession for Norfolk, 57. Her vacillation as to Scotland, 64—66. The Duke of Northumberland given up to her, 72. The Alençon marriage again, 76, 81, 95, 105. Her indecision, 78, 95. Conclusion of a treaty with France, 81. Calls a fresh Parliament, 83. Deputation from the Bishops and the Commons as to the Queen of Scots, 85—89. Seemingly consents to cut Mary off from the succession, 93, 94. Requested by Charles IX. to join him in a war against Spain, 108. Her promises to the Duke of Alva's commissioner, 110. Distrusted at the French Court, 112, 124. Sends money to the Prince of Orange, 148. Prepares for war, 148, 149. Her interview with the French ambassador, 151. Philip's letter to her, 159. She resolves to accept the Spanish advances, 161. Godmother to a French princess, 170. Makes a treaty with Philip, 175. Urged by Leicester and Cecil to interfere in Scotland, 185. Consents to assist in reducing Edinburgh Castle, 204. Allows the Earl of Desmond to return to Ireland, 299. Sends the Earl of Essex to Ulster, 302, 303. The unfortunate result, 314. Development of her character, 316, 317. Her favourites, 317, 318. Her personal appearance, 319. Her conduct of the public service, 320. Her religion, 323. Sends money to the Prince of Orange, 330. Peace offered by King Philip, 341. Promises Mendoza to reconsider her secession from the Church, 344. Her instructions to Cobham, 351. Threatens the Prince of Orange, 358. Writes to him, 360. Her determination as to the war in the Netherlands, 362. Interferes with the liberty of debate of the Commons, 363. Her treatment of St Aldegonde, 366. Her anger with the Prince of Orange, 367. Meditates a change of policy, 368, 378. The Duc d'Alençon a suitor for her hand, 372, 374. Supplies him with money, 375. But declines to do more, 377. Her decision as to the Netherlands, 386. Effects of her work, 388. Will not see treason, 401, 402. Her letter to the Shrewsburies, 402 note. Her correspondence with the Regent Morton, 405—408. Her treatment of the bishops, 410. Fluctuations in her policy, 415. Her severities to recusants, 416. Her league with the States, 420. Takes shares in Drake's adventure, 423. Breaks her promises to the States, 425. Gives audience to Mendoza, 431. Her threats, 433. Receives the Count de Retz, 436. Refuses to recognize the regency of Morton, 436. Repudiates her bonds given to the States, 441. Displeasure of her ministers, 442. Her offers to Alençon, 443. Her displeasure with Walsingham, 445. Her treatment of the Regent Morton, 446. On progress, 455. Rejects the Scotch proposals, 457. Will give no money to the King of Scots, 458. Again changes her policy, 462. Receives the Burgundian crown jewels, 465. Closes her direct dealings with the Netherlands, 465. Her last matrimonial adventure, 468. Receives messengers from Alençon, 469. Invites him to visit her, 474. Receives a letter from Alençon, 485. Feeling in the country respecting the marriage, 487, 497. Discovers that Leicester and Hatton are secretly married, 492, 493. Agrees to Alençon's visit to England, 493. Her interview with him, 493, 494. Philip Sidney's opposition to the marriage, 495. Stubbs's pamphlet, 495. Advice of the Council, 497. Her anger with them, 500, 501. Her rage with Stubbs and his printer and publisher, 502. The marriage treaty suspended for two months, 504. And then allowed to drop, 504. Effects of her economy in Ireland, 515, 516. Appoints Essex governor of Ulster, 517. Her evil policy as to Ireland, 539, 540. Sends Ormond to put down rebellion, 566. Ready to concede everything, 583. Refuses to let the Irish be persecuted, 596. Determines to try milder methods with the Irish, 606. Her alarm at events in Scotland, xi. 7. Tempts Morton to commit treason, 13. Deserts him, 14—18. Her obligation to assist him, 22. Sends men to the North, 23. Threatens King James, 24, 25. But nothing done, 26. Efforts of her Council to save her from herself, 31. Finally determines not to interfere, 34. Plot of the Jesuits against her, 43, 44. Her assassination sanctioned by the Pope, 45, 46. Her tolerant policy towards the Catholics, 47. A new construction of the Pope's Bull, 57, 59. Her appeal to the people, 60 note. Her speech to the bishops, 66 note. Her quarrel with the House of Commons, 78. Position of the Catholics, 82—86. Her examination of Campian, 92. Treatment of the Jesuits, 108. Her treaty with Alençon revived, 117. Patronizes Drake, 119. Complaint of Philip, 140. Invites Mendoza to a bear-bait, 141. Her conversation with him, 142. Drake's return, 150. Her reception of him, 150. Mendoza demands restoration of the plunder, 151. Her refusal, 151, 152. Burghley supports Mendoza's demand, 153. Commissions Tre-mayne to register the booty, 153. She knights Drake, 157. Determines to restore nothing, 157. Renews the Alençon negotiation, 159. Her uneasiness, 159. Burghley's advice, 164. Promises to marry, 168, 169. Mendoza's incredulity, 171. Marriage treaty, 175—178. Endeavours to escape, 179. Sanctions the expedition to Terceira, 180—191. Sends Walsingham to Paris, 184—187. Walsingham's letter, 189. Burghley reasons with her, 191. Misgivings of Walsingham, 193. Sends Alençon money, 195. Her treatment of Don Antonio, 196. Mendoza's remonstrances, 199. Kisses Alençon at Greenwich, 207. Presents him as her future husband to the Court, 208. Again hesitates to marry, 211. Her treatment of Alençon at parting, 216. Alençon's love-letter, 222. Alternative prospects of the marriage, 224. Her influence in Scotland gone, 227. Disposition of James, 228. Mission of Captain Errington, 234. Negotiations with the Queen of Scots, 235. Refuses help to Angus and Ruthven, 278, 280. Mary appeals to her, 285. Arrival of La Mothe Fénelon, 288. His interview with her, and advice as to custody of Mary, 288, 289. Proposed alliance between France, England, and Mary, 290. Grants permission to Fénelon to proceed to Edinburgh, 293. Arrival of the second ambassador, de Mainville, 293. Receives Lennox in London, 296. Deceives him, 298. Cobham's letter to her on Lennox, 307. Burghley's and Walsingham's remonstrances, 308. Consults Burghley and her Council as to supporting the Scotch lords, 309. Sends Beale to Mary, 312. Commissioners from Angus and Ruthven sent to her, 309, 322. Conditions on which Scotland will be her ally, 323. Declines Scotch proposals, 329. Will not part with money, 330. Beale again sent to Mary, 331, 372. Continuation of treaty with Mary, 334—336. Burghley's opinion of her policy, 338. Her alarm at the danger of Orange, 345. Blames Norris, and orders his recall, 352, 353, 357. Directs Bingham to seize ships of the States, 357, 403. Her negotiation with James, 373. Sends Walsingham to Scotland, 382. Story of the Navarre diamonds, 389. Her sharp practice, 390. Plots to assassinate her, 394 et seq. Renews negotiations with the States, and suspends hostilities, 403. Difference of opinion in the English Council, 404. Severe measures against the Jesuits and seminary priests, 406. Expulsion of the Spanish ambassador, 407—410. Violent scene with the Council, 412. Parry's plot, 415. Renews negotiations with Aldegonde and Prince of Orange, 420—424. Fails to help the Scotch lords, 433. Dismisses Lord Shrewsbury from charge of Mary, and substitutes Sadler and Neville, 447, 448. Sends Wade to Mary to reopen a new treaty, 448. The treaty dropped, 454. Her character by Cecil, 467. Prosperity of England under, 467—470. Her Council, 470. Her choice of Bishops, 473. Her pretended mourning for Alençon, 480. Compared to Holofernes, 481. Her danger, and measures for safety, 484. Temporizes with France, 485. Her conference with Mauvissière, 485. Her intrigues at the Scotch Court, 489. Persecutes the non-conformists, 493. Deceives Arran, 497. Releases the Earl of Shrewsbury from his charge of Mary, 503. Plays fast and loose with both Mary and James, 498, 503. Plots against her, 506. Bond of Union in defence of her, 515, 545. Gray's embassy, 522. Negotiations for the release of Mary, 524. Calls a new Parliament, 532. Plots of Parry and Neville, 539—544. Compliments the House, 546. Dismisses Parliament, 547. Her perplexity as to the tripartite alliance, 548. Sends Secretary Davison to Holland, 549. Sends the Garter to Henry III., 552, 554. Henry's estimate of her, 549, 554. Baffled in her policy, 556. Demands the arrest of Morgan, 556, 559, 560. Her letter to Catherine, 557. Her offers to Henry, 559, 562. Her ambassador ill-treated, 560. Writes to Henry, 562 note. Sextus V. dreams of converting her, 564. Pressed by the Huguenots to declare herself, 567, 568. Offers a loan to Henry of Navarre, 568. Letter of Mary to her, and her reply, 574. Demands the arrest of Arran, 586. Her indecision in Scotch affairs, 588. Recalls Wotton, 593. Her letter to James, 595. Her treatment of Arundel, 598. Her religious opinions, xii. 6. Her views regarding Flushing and the States, 10. Declines the sovereignty of the States, 18. Treaty for the defence of Antwerp, 20. Commissions Leicester to command the army for Holland, 24—29. Rebukes Sir J. Norris, 26. Appoints governors for Flushing and Brill, 28. Paralyzes Leicester, 54. Despatches Heneage to the States, 57. Her treatment of Davison, 59. Her resentment towards Lady Leicester, 25, 79. Disgraces Leicester, 58—64. Remonstrance of Cecil and Walsingham, 67. Takes Grafigny into her confidence, 69. Confirms Leicester in his office at the States, 72, 83. Writes to Parma and the States, 72. Sends Wilkes to the Hague, 83. Recalls Leicester, 88. Her success in Ireland, 89. Colonizes the country, 92. Scotch invasion of Ireland and defeat, 94

—98. Her position in 1586, 99. Consents to Walsingham's plot to intercept Mary Stuart's correspondence, 109. Babington's conspiracy, 124. The league with James completed, 133. Her conduct to Mary justified, 148. Disclosure of the conspiracy and consequent arrests, 155—158. Her letter to Paulet, approving of his conduct, 163. Her agitation at the disclosures of the plot, 166. Her hesitation, 167, 168. Issues a commission to try Mary, 169, 180. Trial and execution of the other conspirators, 170—175. Chasteauneuf's interview with her, 180. Her fears respecting James, 181. Proceedings of the Commissioners on Mary's trial, 182 et seq. Proceedings in Parliament against Mary, 197. Estimate of her character, 199—202. The Queen's indecision as to Mary's sentence, 202, 203. Refuses Believre an interview, 207. At length receives Believre, 207—211. Rejects his petition, 211. Mary sentenced, 214. Receives an ultimatum from Henry III., 215. Dismisses Believre, 217. Proposes conditions to James's ambassadors, 218. Her treatment of Walsingham, 225—228. Chasteauneuf's supposed plot, 228. Her interview with Davison, 236. Signs Mary's warrant, 236. Blames Paulet for refusing to kill Mary, 238, 243. Mary's death, 245—256. Elizabeth's reception of the news, 262. Commits Davison to the Tower, 263. Sends Sir R. Carey to James, 265. Her letter to him excusing herself, 265 note. Sends her defence to France, 267. Proceeds against Davison, 270. Gains nothing by the prosecution, 274. Sends Lord Hunsdon to Scotland, 275. Proceedings at Rome against her, 277. Crofts, the controller, gains her ear against Drake, 298. Her treachery, to the States, 298—311. Orders Leicester to abstain from fighting, 302. Burghley's opinion of her conduct, 307. Attempts to bribe Parma, 308. Sends commissioners to the States, 309. Aldegonde's appeal to her, 311.

- Refuses to aid the Huguenots, 344.
 Mission of M. de l'Hôpital, 345.
 Her navy, 356—362. Commands Howard to take the ships into the Channel, 364. Countermmands her orders, and disperses the fleet, 366. Again commands her fleet to sail, 368. Appoints Leicester to the land command, 392. Her treatment of Howard, and the fleet, 430. Accuses Howard of peculation, 433. Her treatment of Hawkins, 434. Bestows the chancellorship on Hatton, 437. Her relations with the Church, 488. Her contempt for the Anglican bishops, 489. Her position analogous to that of Henry IV., 491. Persecutes the Puritans, 495, 496. Her death, 503. Her character, 503—510.
- Elizabeth of France, Philip II.'s offer of his hand to, vi. 184. Married to him, 190.
- Ellerkar, Sir Ralph, his hunting party, ii. 533. Carries the petition of the rebels to the King, 571.
- Ellice, Captain, x. 334.
- Elphinstone, Nicholas, viii. 303, 319; ix. 191, 193.
- Elstowe, a preacher, i. 373.
- Ely, Bishop of. See Cox; Thirlby.
- Enclosures Commission, iv. 364, 406.
- Enclosures, Act of, i. 349.
- England, social state of, in the 16th century, i. 1 et seq. Food and physical strength of the people of, 19, 20. Changes in the art of war, vi. 109. Social changes, 109. Growth of a middle class, 110. Lord Paget's opinion of the peril of England, 110, 167. State of parties in 1559, 208. Tendencies towards a union between England and Scotland, 217. Social condition of the country in 1560, vii. 9—11. Cecil's inquiries into the state of the people, 11. State of religion, morality, and the clergy, 13—17. Acts of Parliament of 1563 for the reorganization of society, 44, 45. State of parties in 1564, 173. Sketch of the struggle which transferred the dominion of the sea from Spain to England, viii. 1 et seq. Development of an intellectual revolution, 4. Increase of foreign trade and decay of English ports, 10—13. Review of the position of the realm by Sir W. Cecil, 11. The Queen's manifesto to the people of England, ix. 223. English commerce in 1570, 335. The Duke of Alba ordered to invade England, 505 and note. Parties in England in 1574, x. 340, 341. Critical position in 1578, 430. Prosperity in 1579, 478, 479. A Catholic plot against England, 508, 509. Intended invasion of, from Scotland, xi. 247, 252. State of, in 1584, 467—470, 534. Its trade with foreign countries, 468. Its prosperity, 470. Pirates in the English Channel, 470. Threatened invasion of, 570; xii. 45. State of, in 1585, 1. In 1586, 45 et seq. In 1588, 475 et seq.
- Englefield, Sir Francis, leaves the Council, vi. 122. On the proposed Spanish expedition to England, x. 95 note. With Don John of Austria, 413. His life at Brussels, xi. 394.
- Englefield, Sir Thomas, ii. 378; vi. 13, 82.
- Englund, John, ii. 379.
- Erasmus on the learning of the laity contrasted with that of the clergy, quoted, i. 47.
- Errington, Captain, x. 186; xi. 7, 234.
- Ersline, Sir Alexander, takes charge of James VI., x. 454.
- Ersline, Sir Arthur, vii. 400, 401.
- Ersline, Lord, governor of Edinburgh Castle, vi. 248. Refuses to admit the French, 275. Fires on the French, 280. Holds the Castle for the Reformers, 288. Refuses to submit to any authority but that of the Parliament, 309 note. Gives protection to the Queen Regent, 320.
- Escobedo, secretary of Philip II., sent to the Netherlands, x. 381. Betrays his trust, 382. Put to death, 428.
- Essex, Earl of, Thomas Cromwell created, iii. 292. See Cromwell.
- Essex, Walter Devereux, Earl of. See Devereux.
- Essex, Lady (wife of Walter Devereux), x. 397, 492, 544.
- d'Estampes, Duchess, iii. 501. Her intrigues at Paris, iv. 163, 219

 Estrapade, the, i. 422
 Eton, French hostages at, vii. 169
 d'Eulx, Chevalier, his death, iv. 138
 Eustace, Rowland, Viscount Baiting-glass, x. 578. Rebels, 578. Joined by Sir John of Desmond and Sanders, 579. Defeats the English at Glenmalur, 580. Escapes from Smerwick, 589. Goes to the Continent, 593
 Eustace, Walter, his declaration, x. 612 note
 Eustaces, the, massacres of, x. 256. Killed, 594
 Evers, Sir Ralph, ii. 543; iii. 573
 Evers, Lord, his ravages, iv. 34, 104. Desecrates the tombs at Melrose, 106. Killed, 108
 Exeter, siege of, iv. 426, 427
 Exeter, Marchioness of, ii. 56, 68
 Exeter, Marquis of. See Courtenay

FAGIUS, Paul, exhumation of the body of, vi. 36
 Fairfaxes, the, ii. 562; viii. 334
 Faldonside. See Ker
 Farming system, in the sixteenth century, i. 5. Distress caused by alterations of the, iv. 353
 Farnese, Cardinal, iv. 38. Elected Pope as Paul III., ii. 225. See Paul III.
 Farnese, Octavio, Duke of Parma, grandson of Pope Paul III., iv. 456, 568, 572
 Fastcastle taken by Sussex, ix. 266
 Fasting, to benefit fisheries, iv. 383
 Feckenham, Abbot of Westminster, v. 285. Attempts to shake the faith of Lady Jane Grey, 357, 358. Installed Abbot, vi. 30. At Elizabeth's first Parliament, 150. At the theological controversy at Westminster, 188
 Felton arrested and executed, ix. 309
 Fénelon, La Mothe. See la Mothe
 Fenington Bridge, skirmish at, iv. 429
 Fepton, Sir Edward, x. 573. Surveys Smerwick, 574
 Fenton, Sir Geoffrey, his account of the losses of the Armada on the Irish coast, xii. 451, 453
 Ferdinand of Austria, King of the Romans (afterwards Emperor), defeated by the Turks, iii. 494, 515, 620. Maurice demands his liberation, v. 67. Proposal to marry his son Charles to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 244, 245, 264, 267, 328, 332. Ferdinand's letter to Queen Elizabeth, vii. 79 note. Refuses to allow his son to be trifled with, 184. His death, 207 de Feria, Duke, v. 404; vi. 94. His marriage, 117. His expectations at the accession of Elizabeth, 117. Recommends armed interference in England, 122, 139. His conversations with Elizabeth, 178, 179, 190, 195, 196. Leaves England, 198. Warns Chaloner, 260. His message to Queen Elizabeth, 286. His letter on the state of England, ix. 439. His death, 506

 Feria, Jane Dormer, Duchess of, letter from a Catholic refugee to, x. 166
 Feron, Robert, priest, ii. 213, 251
 Ferrara, Ambassador of, iii. 510
 Ferrara, Cardinal of, in France, vi. 535 note
 Ferrars, George, iii. 487
 Ferrars, Robert, Bishop of St David's, v. 252, 395. Accusations made against him, 509. His trial, 512. Martyred, 512
 Ferrier, Alex., iii. 401
 Feudal system, the, i. 11. Its unfavourable aspects, 17
 Field, John, his story, i. 556
 Fife, French troops march to, vi. 309
 Filmer, Henry, burnt, iv.
 Finances, state of, vi. 108
 Finch, Sir Thomas, disarms Harpsfield's household, vi. 201
 Findlatter, Laird of, story of, vi. 605 note
 First Fruits, angry debate on, v. 567, 570. Bill passed, vi. 158
 Fish, supply and prices of, in the 16th century, i. 23 note
 Fish, Simon, his 'Supplication of Beggars,' i. 84 note, 103, 105
 Fisher, John, Bishop of Rochester, his speech against the Clergy Discipline Act, i. 247, 249. His upright character, 301. Attempt to poison him, 302. His book against the King, 374. Burns Bibles, 522. His conduct about

- the Nun of Kent, ii. 90, 92. Persists in his defence, 94. Sentenced but not punished, 96. Refuses to swear to the Act of Succession, 113, 115. Sent to the Tower, 118. Named cardinal, 264. His execution hurried, 266
- Fisheries, English, decay of, viii. 13
- Fitton, Sir Edward, becomes president of Connaught, x. 248, 262. His adventures in Clare, 261. His failure, 541
- Fitzgeralds. See Geraldines
- Fitzgerald, Lord Thomas, son of the ninth Earl of Kildare, called 'Silken Thomas,' ii. 169. Vice-deputy of Ireland, 169. Rebels, 171. His treachery, 180. His overtures to Charles, 186. Deserted, 194. His surrender, 197. Hanged at Tyburn, 200
- Fitzgerald, Lady, put to death, x. 611
- Fitzgerald, Lady Eleanor, marries the O'Donnell, iii. 428
- Fitzgerald of Decies, plundered by Desmond, x. 598
- Fitzgerald of Imokelly, x. 603, 604. Pardoncd, 613
- Fitzherbert, Sir Anthony, ii. 378
- Fitzjames, Sir John, iii. 226
- Fitzmaurice, James, calls the Irish to arms, x. 240. Murders English settlers, 240, 241. Escapes to Kilkenny, 251. Threatens Sir J. Perrot, 286. Sought in vain, 286. Invades Limerick with Scots, 289. Defeated by Perrot, 290. Terms made with him, 290. In Spain, 551. Obtains money and powers from the Pope, 552. Sails from Spain, and lands at Dingle, 554, 555. Calls on the Earl of Desmond to join him, 556. Killed, 561. His widow and children, 569
- Fitzmaurice, Lady, x. 575
- Fitzroy. See Richmond
- Fitzwalter, v. 387
- Fitzwarren, Lord, iii. 226; v. 212
- Fitzwilliam, George, ix. 510, 511
- Fitzwilliam, Sir William, i. 166; ii. 362, 378, 524. Created Earl of Southampton, iii. 80, 142. Commands the fleet, 162. Canvasses the southern counties, 190. Meets Anne of Cleves, 271. At the arrest of Cromwell, 305 note. Infirm and incapable as Irish Deputy, xii. 443.
- Fitzwilliam, Sir William, left in command in Dublin, vii. 117. En-trapped by O'Neil, 126. His engagement and defeat, 127. Goes to London and returns with money and reinforcements, 130. Deputy of Ireland, x. 278. His difficulties, 297, 298. His piteous complaints, 524. His account of the losses of the Armada, xii. 451
- Fitzwilliam, Mr., a priest, v. 80
- Flammock, Michael, of St Kevern's, iii. 134
- Flanders. See Netherlands
- Fleetwood, Sir Thomas, vii. 8; ix. 431. His letter to Lord Burghley, xi. 470 note
- Fleming, Earl of, iii. 531, 564
- Fleming, Lord, viii. 322, 326, 332, 345, 347. Wishes to bribe Cecil, 362. Holds Dumbarton in Mary Stuart's name, ix. 61, 412, 413. Loses the castle, 416
- Fleming, Lady, ix. 417
- Flemings in England, i. 127. Thousands of families of, in England, vi. 332; ix. 335
- Fletcher, Dr, his services declined by the Queen of Scots, xii. 252
- Fletcher, Mr, of Rye, iii. 164
- Fletcher, Mr, Drake's chaplain, xi. 123 and note, 126. Excommunicated and absolved by Drake, 149
- Flodden Field, iii. 347
- Flushing rises against the Spaniards, x. 101
- de Foix, Paul, on the proposed marriage of Mary Queen of Scots and Don Carlos, vi. 561 note. His interview with Elizabeth, as to the evacuation of Havre, vii. 65. As to the French marriage, 238; x. 19. And as to Scotch affairs, vii. 324. Comes to London, x. 82
- de Fontenay, M., xi. 285, 456, 465
- Food of the English people, i. 19 note. Prices, 21—25. Enhancement of prices, 35. And in 1563, vii. 45
- Forbes, Lady, and her children, murdered, x. 63
- Forbes, Master of, killed, iii. 390
- Fordham Monastery, monks of, ii. 324
- Forest, Father, preacher on Queen

- Catherine's side, i. 368 ; ii. 209.
His offences, iii. 105. His barbarous death, 110
- Forest laws, i. 69. How regarded by the people, 69
- Forret, Father, vicar of Dolor, burnt, iii. 406
- Fortescue, Antony, joins the conspiracy of the Poles, vi. 588
- Foster, Sir John, vii. 366 ; viii. 321 ; ix. 152, 264 ; x. 118. Attacked by Ker, xi. 585
- Foster, captain of the Primrose, xii. 13
- Fotheringay Castle, the Queen of Scots at, xii. 169 et seq.
- de Fougerolles, M., iv. 78
- Fountains Abbey, abuses at, ii. 320. Abbot of, 321
- Fox, Edward, Bishop of Hereford, his mission to the Lutherans, ii. 293
- Fox, Richard, Bishop of Winchester, i. 131 note
- Foxe, John, the martyrologist, iv. 203 et seq. ; x. 346
- de Framozelles, M., iv. 54
- France, its doubtful allegiance to the Papacy, i. 256. Divisions in the Court, iii. 501. War of, with Charles V., 510. Factions in, iv. 542, 568. War with, vi. 46. Armistice, 136. Two parties and two policies in France, 137, 138. Religious disturbances in 1560, 373. State of parties in 1562, 531
- Francis I., i. 134. His message to the University of Paris, 269, 377, 380. Meets Henry VIII., 390. Advice, 393. Character, 420. His policy, ii. 5. Is godfather to the Princess Elizabeth, 28. His proposals to Henry VIII., 38, 108, 229. Distrusts Charles V., 228. Persecutes Protestants, 420. Receives Charles V., iii. 266. On Cromwell, 314 Joins Scotland, 351. On Catherine Howard, 474. Meditates an alliance with the Turks, 492, 507. Defeated at Perpignan, 514, 519. His position in 1542, 535. Sends troops to Scotland, iv. 22. Tries to separate England and the Empire, 37. Entreats Henry's intercession with Charles, 54. His violence about Milan, 165. Massacres Protestants, 170. His death, 268
- Francis, the Dauphin (afterwards Francis II. of France), his subscription to the Peace of Cambray, vi. 176. Assumes the arms and title of King of England, &c., 177, 224. About to be proclaimed King of England, 216. Becomes King of France, 242. Distress of his troops at Leith, 375. His death, 443
- Francis, Sir William, iv. 431
- Franciscan, speech of a, at the Diet of Worms, iv. 124
- Frankfort, English exiles in, vi. 220
- Frederick of Toledo, Don, x. 107
- Free Towns refuse the Interim, iv. 336, 533
- French troops in Scotland, vi. 243 et seq. Besieged in Leith, 358, 362. Their situation, 358. Their fortifications, 359. Sally out and surprise the besiegers, 360. Their courage, 363. Failure of the English assault, 366. Peril of the French in Leith, 374, 375. Commission for making terms, 374. Treaty of Edinburgh, 395. Evacuation of Leith, 399
- Frideswide, St, grave of, vi. 37
- Frideswide College, or Christ Church, i. 527
- Frith, the martyr, his offence, i. 479 ; joins Tyndal at Antwerp, 509
- Frobisher, Martin, viii. 35
- Fuggers, the, of Antwerp, iv. 251 ; v. 11, 519 ; vi. 580
- Fulwell, Ulpian, his character of Henry VIII., iv. 237
- GAGE, Sir Thomas, i. 446
- Gage, Sir John, iii. 190 ; v. 352, 366, 382, 383, 388
- Gage, the conspirator, arrested, xii. 158. Tried and executed, 170—175
- Galloway, Bishop of. See Gordon, Alexander
- Gardiner, R., and the Rood of Dover, i. 569
- Gardiner, Stephen, Wolsey's Secretary, his letters, i. 139, 141. On Wolsey, 290. Invents Anglicanism, 353. Cromwell's message to Francis, ii. 281. His influence in drawing the Six Articles, iii. 208. His enmity to Cromwell, 258. Is dismissed the Council, 259. His sermon at Paul's Cross, and con-

- troverſy with Dr Barnes, 281, 318, 323. With Bonner, 589. Oppoſes the circulation of the Bible, iv. 3. His plans againſt Cranmer, 5. The conference, 79, 85, 89. Conference at Brussels, 159. Complaints againſt the Queen, 203. Tries Anne Aſcue, 206. Plots at Brussels, 221. His advice to the Protector, 277, 300. Imprisoned by Cranmer, 302. Appeals to the Protector, 303. His ſermon, 345. Goes to the Tower, 347. Appeals againſt it, 491, 494. Accepts the Prayer Book, 546. Is required to plead guilty, 548. Demands a trial, 551. His trial, 553. Deprived of office, 554. Strict confinement, v. 173. Rejoins the Council, 220. Made Lord Chancellor, 228. Intercedes for Northumberland, 242. Appointed Commiſſioner, 251. Oppoſes Pole's return, 267. His danger, 272. Mountain's account of him, 277. By Ponet, 278. Queen's anger with, 298. The conſpiracy, 320. Wiſhes to ſeize Elizabeth, 324, 329. His letter to Sir William Petre, 330. His ſalute to the Queen, 336. Propoſes to ſend Elizabeth to the Tower, 378. Shields Courtenay, 321, 344. His cruelty, 355, 362. Factions in the Council, 366. Deſires to reſtore eccleſiaſtical courts, 369. And the Inquiſition, 370. Renard applies to him, 385. Parliament meets, 386. Propoſes to ſend Elizabeth to Pomfret, 390. Tries to diſinherit her, 392. His perſecution bill, 392. Feared his own arreſt, 397. His influence over Mary, 401. Introduces Pole as legate, 447. Conducts proceedings, 453. Propoſal to petition the Pope's pardon, 456. The clergy's petition, 464. Tries Hooper and Rogers, 486. His death, 563. His character, 564. His epitaph, 566
- Gardiner, Germaine, ſecretary to the above, his death, iv. 6
- Gargrave, Sir T., ſpeaker, vi. 159. Deprecates Elizabeth's ſeverity to the inſurgents, 182
- Garrett, Thomas, brings Testaments to Oxford, i. 525. His eſcape, 526.
- Captured, 541—546. Tried and burnt, iii. 333, 341
- Garrowe, Sir Henry, ii. 587
- Gaſtines, the, and the Cardinal of Lorraine, x. 74
- Gates, Sir John, iv. 220; v. 197. Tried, 240, 244. Executed, 247
- Gates, Sir Henry, tried, v. 240, 242, 243
- Gelt river, battle on the, ix. 21
- Gemblours, battle of, x. 426
- de Genlis, goes to the Netherlands, x. 102. Deſeated by the Spaniards, and ſtrangled in priſon, 107
- Gerrard, Sir William, x. 539
- Ghent, treaty of, x. 383, 433. Pacification of, 412
- Ghinucci, Biſhop of Worceſter, i. 264. Deprived, ii. 86
- Gibraltar, ſcene at, viii. 26
- Gifford, Gilbert, xii. 110. At Chartley, 114—119. Becomes acquainted with Ballard's plot, 136
- Giffords, the, xii. 109
- Gilbert, Sir Humphrey, takes volunteers to the Netherlands, x. 106. Treatment he receives there, 111. Hangs his Spaniſh priſoners, 122. Beſieges Tregouſe, 148. Recalled, 164. In Ireland, 230. In arms againſt the Irish, 248. His cruelty, 251. Recalled, 260
- Gilpin, Bernard, iv. 358
- Gipsies, Act reſpecting, i. 306
- Gisborne, George, his evidence, ii. 506
- Giustiniani, the Venetian ambaffador, i. 114. His deſcription of Henry VIII., 175
- Glamis, Lady, burnt, iii. 390
- Glamys, the Chancellor, killed, x. 451
- de Glacion, Seigneur, his miſſion from Philip II. to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 348. His private advice, 349. His converſation with the French and Spaniſh ambaffadors, 350
- 'Glaſſe of Truth,' of Henry VIII., i. 285
- Glaſtonbury, trial and death of the Abbot of, iii. 241, 245, 247
- Glaſtonbury Torre, iii. 247
- Glencairn, Earl of, iii. 531, 565, 568, 578; iv. 24. Signs a petition to the Queen of England, vi. 241. Brings the Arran petition to England, 441. Joins the Queen of

- Scots at Dunbar, vii. 403. Proposes to leave the country, viii. 127. But remains, 131. Purges Holyrood chapel of Catholic ornaments, 201
- Glenmalure, massacres in, x. 256, 257. Lord Grey de Wilton defeated in, 580
- Goddard, William, ii. 397
- Godolphin, Sir William, iii. 134; iv. 328; viii. 50
- Godsalve, Sir John, iv. 302
- Gomez, Ruy, v. 455, 479. His suggestion as to Calais, vi. 137. At Cambray, 170
- Genzaga, Governor of Milan, iv. 331, 456, 569, 573; v. 403
- Gonzalvo Fernandez, chaplain to Charles V., his report on the Irish expedition, ii. 157 note
- Goodman, vi. 83
- Goodrich, Thomas, Bishop of Ely and Lord Chancellor, v. 106. Deprived of the seal, 228. His advice, vi. 125
- Goold, Father, ii. 55. Takes a message from the Nun of Kent, 57
- Gordon, Alexander, Bishop of Galloway, his sermon on the Queen of Scots, viii. 522 note. A commissioner for the Queen of Scots, 352
- Gordon, Lord Adam, vi. 610. Destroys the clan of Forbes, x. 63
- Gordon, Lord John, Laird of Findlatter, vi. 605 note, 609. Executed, 610
- Gordon, of Lochinvar, iii. 373
- Gordons, the, Murray's expedition against, ix. 67
- Gorges, Sir Thomas, arrests the Queen of Scots, xii. 160
- Goring, Sir William, iii. 190
- Gormanstone, Viscount, iii. 421, 431
- Gourdain, M., Governor of Calais, xii. 407. His courtesy to Howard, 415
- Gower, Sir Edward, ii. 587
- Gowers, the, ii. 562
- Gowrie, Earl of, xi. 270. His plots, 270 et seq., 293, 294, 434. Executed, 440, 441, 489
- Gowrie, Lady, xi. 271, 441, 496
- Graigny, Augustin, xii. 69, 71
- Grammont, Cardinal, i. 380
- Granvelle, Chancellor to Charles V., ii. 419; iii. 513; iv. 40, 45, 51, 65, 86, 124
- Granvelle, Bishop of Arras (son of the above), sent to Henry VIII., iv. 61, 79, 82, 91; vi. 136, 170, 173 note, 210, 285, 286, 287. Assists the Regent Margaret in her government, viii. 427
- Grave, besieged by Parma, xii. 81
- Surrenders, 81
- Gravelines, meeting of Commissioners at, iv. 152. Battle of, vi. 87
- Greenfield, Sir Richard, of Stowe and Bideford, iv. 328, 436
- Greenwich, masque at, described, i. 72—76. Queen Elizabeth at, vi. 440
- Gregory XIII., Pope, his objections to the Princess Margaret of France's marriage, x. 124. His joy at the St Bartholomew massacre, 142. His claims to Ireland, 264. Sanctions the murder of Queen Elizabeth, xi. 44. James VI.'s letter to him, 428. Forbids trade with infidels, 469. His death, 564
- Gresham, Sir Thomas, v. 110, 111, 131; vi. 82, 119, 278, 295, 332 note, 581; vii. 60; ix. 235; x. 148
- Greville, Fulke, iv. 364. At Dingle, x. 573
- Grey, Lord John, one of a committee to consult with Elizabeth, vi. 131. His wife, 153. His remarks on the Spanish policy, 356 note
- Grey, Lord Leonard, brother of the Marquis of Dorset, ii. 190; iii. 407. Made deputy of Ireland, 408, 412. Quarrels with Ormond, 414, 420, 425, 430, 434, 437. Sent to the Tower, 439. His trial, 442. Executed, 442
- Grey de Ruthin, Earl of Kent, present at the Queen of Scots' execution, xii. 251
- Grey de Wilton, William, Earl of, takes Haddington, iv. 318. His severity to priests. Represses insurrections, 425, 428—436. Sent to the Tower, v. 39, 194, 212, 466. Is governor of Guisnes, vi. 59, 61, 62, 63. Wounded and prisoner, 74, 75. Comes to England to propose a secret peace with France, vi. 138. Sent to the North with an army, 279. Crosses the Tweed, 343. Proposes to take Edinburgh Castle, 344. But forbidden by the Queen, 345. His exertions be-

- fore Leith, 361—363. Charged with want of energy or skill, 364. Frauds in his army, 364. Orders the assault of Leith, 365. It fails, 366, 367. Cecil's character of him, 389
- Grey de Wilton, Arthur, Earl of, sent to the Queen of Scots by Elizabeth, viii. 133, 148. Declines the vice-royalty of Ireland, x. 291. But subsequently undertakes it, 579. Marches against Baltinglass, 579. Defeated at Glenmalure, 580. Goes to Dingle, 586. Bombarads and captures Smerwick, 587, 588. Executes the garrison, 589. Puts rebels to death, 601. Recalled at his own request, 605. His speech at Davison's trial, xii. 272
- Grey, Marquis of Dorset, Lady Jane's father, iv. 373, 388. Made Duke of Suffolk, v. 38, 194, 197, 206, 208, 225, 250, 317, 339, 342, 356, 362, 570. Weak and ambitious, 153
- Grey, Lady Catherine, daughter of the above, marries Lord Herbert, v. 156. Her friendship with the Duke of Feria, vi. 182. Her claim to the Crown, 182 note, 590 note. Her anger against Elizabeth, 207. Intrigues respecting her, 207, 208. Marries Lord Hertford, and committed to the Tower, 523. Considered to be the only legal heir to the throne, vii. 34. Gives birth to her second child, 34 note. Liberated in ill-health, 76. Pining in captivity, 191. Hale's defence of her claim to the succession, 191. Answers to Hale's book, 471 note. Elizabeth's detestation of Lady Catherine, viii. 93. Her death, 282. Her two sons, 282
- Grey, Lady Mary, marries Thomas Keys, vii. 327 and note
- Grey, Lady Jane, iv. 380, 389; v. 151, 156. Her character and accomplishments, 181. Is received as Queen at Sion House, 183, 184. The troops sworn to, 185. Lands at the Tower and is proclaimed, 185. Will not allow her husband to be King, 191. Is called the twelfth-day Queen, 206. Told by Suffolk that she is not Queen, 207. Her striking words on Northumberland's apostasy, 246. Sentenced, 295. Is to die, 357. Her interview with Feckenham, 357. Executed, 360, 361
- Grey, Neil, vii. 131, 132. Offers to murder Shan O'Neil, 132
- Grey, Reginald, made Earl of Kent, x. 39
- Grey, Lord Thomas, v. 317, 326. Taken prisoner with his brother, Lord John, is sent to the Tower, 342, 343. Asks for mercy, 356. Executed, 362
- Grey, Master of, James VI.'s adviser, xi. 464. His embassy to Elizabeth, 498, 520—526. Advises her to let Angus and Hamilton 'slip,' 588. Treachery to the Queen of Scots, xii. 203, 204, 217
- Grey, Sir Arthur, vi. 61
- Griffin, Maurice, Bishop of Rochester, v. 523. His death, vi. 123
- Grimston, Colonel, xii. 466
- Grindal, Edmund, Bishop of London, summons clergy at Lambeth, vii. 258, 259. Besieged in his house by women, 260. Becomes Archbishop of Canterbury, x. 411. His character, 411
- Gryffyth, Richard Ap, or young Ryce, ii. 214
- de Guazas, Antonio, Spanish commissioner in London, x. 96, 109, 158. Cecil's propositions to him, 164. Stirs up the Irish chiefs, 306. Sent to the Tower, 417, 431
- Guerau de Espes, Spanish ambassador to London, viii. 442. Hears of the seizure of the Spanish treasuries, 486, 487. Urges Alva to reprisals, 488. His interviews with the friends of the Queen of Scots, 490. Proposes to demand Cecil's dismissal, 493. Imprisoned in his own house, 494. Informed by the Queen of Scots of a plot to murder King Philip, ix. 11. His letters to the Duke of Alva, 16. Advises a landing in England, 135, 136. His arrangements with the Bishop of Ross, 293—295. Ordered to leave England in four days, x. 26
- Guest, Edmund, Bishop of Rochester, his sermon before the Queen, vii. 260
- Guidotti, Antonio, iv. 498, 499

- Guise, Cardinal of, vi. 511; ix. 36; x. 372
- Guise, Francis, Duke of, ii. 108. His proposed invasion of Scotland, iii. 547. Holds Metz, v. 118. Invades Italy, vi. 42. Fails at Naples, 53. Takes Calais, 69. Storms Guisnes, 73. Defends Metz, 135. Meditates a Catholic crusade, 544. His massacre of Huguenots at Vassy, 545. Enters Paris in triumph, 546. His progress against the Huguenots, 578, 579. His siege of Rouen, 584, 594. Takes it, 595. Interview with his prisoner, Throgmorton, vii. 26. Murdered, 48
- Guise, Henry, Duke of, driven from the Court, ix. 299. Connection with the murder of Coligny and the massacre of St Bartholomew, x. 126—128, 130, 133—135. Checks Casimir in Lorraine, 373. Threatens the Huguenot towns, 379. Intrigues in Scotland, 444. Proposes to invade it, 452, 510. His intended invasion of England, xi. 252, 254, 359, 378—380. Aims at the life of Elizabeth, 361. James VI.'s letter to him, 375, 427. Organizes the Holy League, 559. Expected in Paris, 559. His designs on England defeated, 597. Forces the Huguenots to capitulate, xii. 313. Day of the Barri- cades, 348. His reception in Paris, 348. Murdered at Blois, 474
- Guise, Mary of, marries James V. of Scotland, iii. 390
- Guises, their policy, vi. 176. Their power in Paris, 243. Conspiracy of Amboise against them, 336
- Guisnes, siege of, vi. 72—75. By the peace of Cambray to be restored to England, vi. 176
- Gunter, Arthur, on Anne Robsart's death, vi. 431 note
- Gusman, Gabriel de, a friar, quoted, iv. 156
- Gybbes of Silvertown, v. 320, 321
- HAAERLEM besieged, x. 166. Taken by Alva, 330
- Habbythorne, or Hubbylthorne, Henry, ii. 379
- Hacket, Sir John, quoted, ii. 2. Ambassador at Brussels, 79
- Haddington, besieged by the French, iv. 319. Relieved by the English under Lord Shrewsbury, 323
- Hales, miraculous phial at, iii. 100
- Hales, Sir James, v. 166
- Hales, Christopher, quoted, iv. 556
- Hales, John, Clerk of the Hanaper, iv. 365, 382. His book on the English succession, vii. 191. Imprisoned, 191, 223
- Hallam, John, fails to take Hull, iii. 9, 10. Executed, 19
- la Halle, his proposal, vii. 172
- Halyburton, Alexander, his bravery, vi. 280
- Halydon Rigg, iii. 518, 520
- Hamarton, Sir Stephen, iii. 29. Hanged, 34
- Hamburgh, trade with, opened, ix. 29, 42, 46. The Hamburgh fleet, 74
- Hamilton, James, of Bothwellhaugh, prisoner at Langside, viii. 325; ix. 195. Selected to murder Murray, 194. Assassinate him, 199. To murder the Prince of Orange, xi. 340
- Hamilton, John, employed to murder Coligny, ix. 196
- Hamilton, John, Archbishop of St Andrew's, his vile character, vi. 221. Seeks in vain to enter St Andrew's, 232, 233. Divorces Bothwell from his wife, viii. 150. One of Mary's Commissioners, 368. A party to Darnley's murder, ix. 195. At Dumbarton, 413. Made prisoner, 416. Executed, 419
- Hamilton, Catherine (sister of Sir Patrick), her escape, iii. 404
- Hamilton, Lord Claude, viii. 310. At Langside, 323. In Paris, 377. Has Lennox shot, ix. 536
- Hamilton, Sir James, at Langside, viii. 323
- Hamilton, Sir Patrick, iii. 351
- Hamilton, Sir William, iii. 554
- Hamiltons, their jealousies of the Stuarts, viii. 198. Queen Elizabeth's correspondence with them, 234, 257. Their readiness to agree to Mary Stuart's death, 236. Create a party for her, 289. And raise an army, 312, 322. Meet the Regent at Langside, 323, 324. Defeated and taken prisoners, 325.

- Their proposals to the Regent, ix. 25. Detested, x. 62. Recover their estates, xi. 594
- Hamilton Castle, Mary Stuart escapes to, viii. 311. The gathering at, 312. Taken by the Regent, 325. And by Drury, ix. 282
- Hampton, Thomas, joins Hawkins in the slave trade, viii. 56
- Hampton Court, Queen Elizabeth at, vi. 258, 264. Council of Peers at, viii. 450, 475
- Harper, Sir George, v. 330. Betrays the Duke of Norfolk, 330. With the insurgents, 348. Deserts Wyatt, 351
- Harpfeld, v. 287, 442, 523; vi. 83, 201
- Harrison, James, i. 468
- 'Harry the Great,' iv. 128, 132
- Harte, the Jesuit, turns spy, xi. 70, 73
- Harte, Everard, executed, xi. 93
- Hartlepool secured by the rebel lords, ix. 131
- Harvel, quoted, iv. 70
- Hasleby, Captain Ralph, x. 334
- Hastings, clerk at, iii. 54
- Hastings, Sir Edward, v. 193, 312, 313, 334, 366, 438; vi. 13, 330
- Hatfield, Queen Elizabeth at, vi. 118, 119
- Hatton, Sir Christopher, a favourite of Queen Elizabeth, x. 317. His nickname, 319. Said to be secretly married, 493. Queen angry with him, 501. A letter of his to Elizabeth, xi. 166 note. Protests against the Alençon marriage, 208. Makes secret advances to Mary, 524. Proposes prayer for the Queen's welfare in Parliament, 541. Commissioner at Mary's trial, xii. 188. Elizabeth gives him the great seal, 437
- Hatton Garden, x. 321
- Haughton, Prior of the Charterhouse, ii. 209, 239, 241, 242, 249, 252
- Havré, Marquis, envoy from the Netherlands, x. 417
- Havre, offered to Queen Elizabeth by Condé, vi. 579. Occupied by an English army, 584. Strictness of discipline enforced in the army, 585 note. The English garrison reinforced, but in bad condition, 596. Notice sent to the English to leave, vii. 61. Besieged by the French, 66. The garrison attacked by a strange disease, 67. Surrenders, 72, 73
- Hawick, Border thieves at, viii. 261. Burned, 264
- Hawkes, martyr, v. 504
- Hawkins (afterwards Sir), John, his slaving voyages, viii. 55, 58, 59, 67. His profits, 65. Attacks a Spanish man of war in Plymouth harbour, 68. His expedition to the Spanish main, 476. Destruction of his fleet, 479. Returns, 480. Pretends to be a traitor, ix. 508. Offers to desert, 509. Deceives the Queen of Scots and Philip, 511, 517. His letters to Cecil, 513 note, 518. Lies in wait for the Mexican gold fleet, x. 149. Joins Don Antonio, xi. 180, 191. Proposes to destroy Spanish sailors, xii. 9. Placed at head of the English navy, 357. His method of managing his fleet, 358. His plan for building ships, 362. How treated by the Queen, 434
- Hawkins, Dr Nicholas, English ambassador at Brussels, i. 461
- Hawkins, William, his voyages of discovery, viii. 6. His cruisers, 482
- Hawkins's 'Old Plays,' quoted, iii. 184 note
- Hay of Tallo, vii. 516. Hanged, viii. 303
- Haydon, the pirate, viii. 47
- Heath, Nicholas, Bishop of Worcester, and afterwards Archbishop of York, v. 18. Restored, 227. Attends Northumberland on the scaffold, 245. Ceases to be chancellor, vi. 122. Refuses to crown Elizabeth, 147. In her first Parliament, 150. His speech on the Supremacy Bill, 165, 166. Refuses the oath of supremacy, 204, 205. Proofs of treason found against him, 205
- Heldesteyn, Count, his mission from Vienna, vi. 329
- Heneage, Sir Thomas, i. 185; ii. 514, 515; vi. 11; xii. 59, 62, 66
- Hengrave Hall, i. 9
- Henry VIII., King of England, his household expenses, i. 39. His learning, 47. His excellence in manly exercises, 65. His theological propensities, 99. Reads the 'Beggars' Petition,' 105. Divorces Catherine of Arragon, 107. His male children die, 112, 119. Various claimants to his throne, 112, 114. His marriage, 118. His motives for the divorce, 121. Joins Francis I., 134. Threatens the Pope, 154. Calls a great council, 156, 166. His early character and appearance, 173—179. Instance of lenity in, 178. Opens Parliament, 203. Sends embassies to Charles V., 254. His letters, 274, 276. His book, 'the Glasse of Truth,' 285. Calls himself 'Head of the Church,' 296, 297. His perilous position not been duly considered, 337, 338. His treatment of Forest, 369. Determined on the divorce, 376. His league with France, 382. At Ampthill, 383. His policy towards Scotland, 387. Goes to meet Francis at Boulogne, 389, 390. Their interview at Calais, 395. Sees the Nun of Kent, 397. Will not hurry the divorce, 398. Distrusts the Pope, 409. Marries Anne Boleyn, 410. His conduct discussed, 411—414. Receives and answers the Pope's letter, 417, 418, 433. Acknowledges his marriage, 422. His feelings towards Protestants, 516. Is cited to Rome, ii. 3. His letter to the Duke of Norfolk, 7, 17. Appeals to a general council, 9. Recalls the embassy to the Pope, 17. Sends mission to the Elector of Saxe, 25, 294. Refuses Francis I.'s proposals, 40. His letter to the Princess Mary, 48. Incurs the censures of the Church, 75. Threatens France with the Protestant alliance, 76. His mental struggles, 83. Effect of excommunication on him, 110. His orders to clergy and laity, to bishops, 118, 119. To sheriffs, 120. To Lord Surrey in Ireland, 151. His letter to O'Connor, 163. His conduct to Ireland, 190. On the Reformation, 230. Distrusts Francis I., 231. His circular letter to lords-lieutenants on the clergy, 246. Explains his conduct, 280. Answers Francis I. and the Pope, 281, 282, 283—286.

Conciliates the Protestant princes, 292, 294, 297. Hears of Queen Catherine's death, 352. Suspects Anne, 358. Marries Jane Seymour, 402. His message to Parliament, 405. Receives power to bequeath his throne, 412. His conduct towards the Emperor, 426, 428. Draws the first Articles of Religion, 481, 487. His share in the English Bible, 492, 496, 497. His answer to the rebels in the North, 527. His letter to Lord Darcy, 540, 546. Advises the Duke of Norfolk, 557, 558. Advises Suffolk, 575. Receives the insurgent leaders, 576. Refuses to grant a general pardon, 586. Yields to the Privy Council, 588. His concessions to the rebels, 591, 592. Receives Aske, 595. Gains the Northern gentlemen, iii. 6, 16. Will not hold a Parliament at York, 35. Exhorts the bishops, 60. Attends to the navy, 62. Fortifies the coast, 69. His bad health, 72. His grief at Jane Seymour's death, 76. Unwilling to marry again, 80. His negotiations about Christina, Duchess of Milan, 89. Is deceived by Charles V., 93. Sends Bonner to Nice, 95. Issues a circular to the justices of the peace, 142. Makes advances to the Lutherans, 150. At Lambert's trial, 154. Goes to the Kentish coast, 162. Has a grand city review, 169. His creed, 178. Wishes to act as moderator, 180, 183. His vast power, 202. Appeals to the nation on religious dissensions, 203, 205. Endeavours to moderate the bishops, 215. With Prince Edward, 220. The supposed 72,000 executions, 222. His address to magistrates, 234. Impatience of the country for his marriage, 248, 249. Beginning of the breach with Cromwell, 255. His meeting with Anne of Cleves, 272, 273, 277. His marriage and aversion to his wife, 278. Sees Dr Barnes, 282. Reproaches Charles V., 284. Makes overtures to Francis I., 286. German Princes fall away from him, 288. Wearies of his marriage, 298, 299. His marriage dissolved, 322. His want of generosity to the Duke of Cleves, 326, 329. His policy towards Scotland, 347. Alliance with, 352, 358. His anger towards Margaret, 365. And kindness to, 385. His message to James by Sir R. Sadler, 392—394. His letter to Grey, deputy of Ireland, 431, 439. Made King of Ireland, 444. Marries Catherine Howard, 447. His conduct to Wyatt and Wallop, 455. His progress into Yorkshire, 463. Catherine Howard and his misfortunes in married life, 465—472. Compassion for, 474, 477. Marries Catherine Parr, Lady Latimer, 483. His manifesto to Scotland, 520—524. His position in 1542, 535. Proposes the marriage of Edward and Mary Stuart, 544. Deceived by Mary of Guise, 560. His treaty with Scotland, 570, 571. Warns Edinburgh, 580. His message to the Scotch, 585, 586. Is infirm, 589. Concludes a treaty with the Empire, 594—600. His demands from France, 607, 608. Saves Cranmer from Gardiner, iv. 5. Inquires as to the Windsor persecution, 8. Settles the succession, 14. Prepares to invade Scotland, 20, 23. His convention with the Scotch earls, 23—25. On Beton, 29, 30. Suspects the Emperor, 39. His health, 46. Warns Charles, 48. Crosses to France, and takes the command, 52. French proposals, 54—58. Treachery, 59. Takes Boulogne, 63. Answers Charles V., 65. Returns to England, 76. His angry letter to Norfolk, 77. Writes to Charles V., 85. His message to the Lutheran princes, 96. His disputes with Charles V., 111. His league with Germany, 113, 114. His concessions, 121. His popularity in Italy, 122. At Portsmouth, 131. Instructs the commissioners, 152. Seizes Spanish ships, 154. Conference at Brussels, 159. Peace is concluded, 175. His letter to Cranmer on the Litany, 189. His last appearance in Parliament, 196. His last speech, 196—199. Not inclined to persecute, 211. Proposes the formation of the 'Christian League,' 211. His intentions of reform, 212. His papers on the Duke of Norfolk and Lord Surrey, 225. His death, 228. His will, 229—234. His provisions for the government, 234, 235. Estimate of his character in the generation which followed him, 237. Closing summary, 238—243. Henry II., King of France, iv. 332; v. 215, 315, 329, 374, 381, 411, 515; vi. 10, 28, 138, 140, 173, 223, 242. Henry III., King of France (see also Anjou), x. 370, 371; xi. 168, 195, 209, 210, 229, 230, 288, 293, 301, 549, 551, 555, 557, 560, 562; xii. 205, 274, 313, 348, 474. Henry of Navarre (afterwards Henry IV.), ix. 40; x. 104, 124, 126, 129, 371, 376, 378, 379, 489; xi. 388, 390, 562, 566, 568; xii. 312, 484, 492. Henry the Cardinal becomes King of Portugal, x. 478. Henry of Nassau, Count, killed at Mook Heath, x. 337. Hepburn of Bolton, vii. 516. His trial, viii. 294. Executed, 295, 303. Herbert, Sir William, iv. 408, 423, 436, 477, 487, 548. Governs England with Warwick and Northampton, v. 17. Made Earl of Pembroke, 38, 151. His estates, 129. His doubts, 197. Swears to Mary, 206, 207, 333, 350, 366, 397, 515; vi. 29. One of a committee to consult with Elizabeth, 131. His services and character, 152. His satisfaction with Cecil's policy, 399 note. Entertains the Scottish commissioners, 441. Advocates an alliance with the Huguenot leaders, 461. In favour of the succession of Lord Huntingdon, 589. His patriotism, vii. 129. Ready to take up arms, ix. 75. Arrested, 86, 96. His defence, 103, 104. Disclaims sympathy with the rebel lords, 143. Commands an army for the Queen, 144. Hereford, Popish practices at, vii. 19. Heresy, novel Anglican construction of, as applied to the Supremacy, iii. 106. Persecution of heresy, 152. Court of heresy established, 195. Heresy in Scotland, 398, 584. Bill against it attempted in England, iv. 195. The heresy commission

- and its work, 407; vi. 34. Hatred of Philip II. of heresy, viii. 425. Last injunctions of Charles V., 426
- Heretico Comburendo, de, Act of Henry IV., i. 498. Repealed, iv. 305. Re-enacted, v. 393
- Heretics, Act in favour of, i. 204
- Herle, William, prisoner in the Marshalsea, ix. 455. His employment by Cecil, 456. His letter to Cecil, xii. 14.
- Hermit, a, at Dover, iii. 72
- Heron, Giles, ii. 379
- Herries, Lord, viii. 106, 121. Selected to confer with Queen Elizabeth, 257. Receives money from Scrope, 258. Notice of him, 257 note. His protest in Parliament, 299. Raises a disturbance on the Borders, 319. At Langside, 324. Follows the Queen to the Solway, 328. And crosses with her into England, 332. At Carlisle, 341. Sent to London, 346. His embarrassments, 360. His protest to Queen Elizabeth, 360. His threats, 363. And remonstrances, 364. Takes back terms from Elizabeth, 371, 372. His letter to the English Council, 380. His answer to the charges against the Queen of Scots, 458. Challenge between him and Lindsay, 506. Confronted with Murray, 509. Sent to Edinburgh Castle by Murray, ix. 61
- Hertford, Lord. See Seymour
- Hertford, Lord, son of the last. See Seymour
- Hesse, Landgrave of, warns Henry VIII., iii. 150. Is at war with Henry of Brunswick, 604. Message from Henry VIII., iv. 96, 113. Consults English agents, 123. Takes the field against Charles V., 261. Set free, v. 70
- Higford, Duke of Norfolk's secretary, x. 5—7
- Highgate, Queen Elizabeth at, vi. 122
- Highlanders of Argyleshire invade Ireland, xii. 94. Defeated byingham, 96, 97
- Highwaymen in the reign of Elizabeth, vii. 9
- Hill, Sir Roland, endows a school at Drayton, iv. 515
- Hilsey, John, Bishop of Rochester, ii. 518; iii. 177
- Hilton, Sir Thomas, ii. 568
- Hoby, Sir Philip, iv. 7, 475, 481; v. 1. His account of Charles V., 147. His opinion of Renard, 148. Is sent to receive Philip's oaths, 311
- Hocus Pocus, derivation of the term. iv. 339
- Holbein, Hans, iii. 251
- Holgate, Robert, deprived of the see of York, v. 252
- Holland, Elizabeth, her evidence against Lord Surrey, iv. 220
- Holland, a yeoman, agent of the Poles, arrested, iii. 137
- Holstein, Duke of, iv. 113
- Holt, Humphrey, iv. 488
- Holt, the Jesuit, xi. 241, 244, 326
- Holyrood Palace, Mary Stuart's return to, vi. 516. Plan of her rooms, vii. 385. On the morning of Bothwell's trial, viii. 118
- Homilies, Book of, issued, iv. 280
- Honiton, iv. 414, 430
- de l'Hôpital, M., comes on an embassy to England, xii. 344. His letter to Burghley, 345. His negotiations on behalf of Navarre, 346
- Hooper, John, his letter to Bullinger on the heresies of England, iv. 403. Made Bishop of Gloucester, 546. Denounces the Consecration Service, 556. His violence about vestments, 561. Deprived and imprisoned, v. 252, 395. His stainless character, 486. His trial, 488. Sent to Gloucester, 490. His interview with Sir A. Kingston, 492. His martyrdom, 493, 494. His parting letter to his friends, 495, 496
- Hopton, Sir William, Lieutenant of the Tower, ix. 460; x. 10 note
- Horn, Count, v. 365, 404. Opposes Spanish oppression, viii. 428. Arrested by Alva, 431. Executed, 432
- Horne, Robert, Bishop of Winchester, at the theological controversy at Westminster, vi. 186 note, 187. Tenders the oath of allegiance to Bonner, vii. 44
- Horsey, Edward, vi. 278. Becomes Sir Edward, viii. 18. Leads Clinton's cavalry in the North, ix. 152.

- Sent to Don John of Austria, x. 386
- 'Hospitality, the glory of,' in England, i. 45
- Hospitals of the Savoy, St Thomas, and St Bartholomew founded, v. 58
- Household, royal, expenses of, under the Tudors, i. 39
- Howard, Catherine, her marriage with Henry VIII., iii. 447. Discovery of her misconduct, 466, 470. Bill of attainder against her introduced, 477. Sentenced to death, and taken to the Tower, 480. Her penitence and execution, 480, 481
- Howard, Thomas, third Duke of Norfolk, his power, i. 166; ii. 6, 40. His advice concerning Fitzgerald, 199. His letter to Henry VIII., 361. Tries Anne Boleyn, 378, 387, 389. Goes against the Northern rebels, 555, 556, 581, 586; iii. 9, 14, 17, 29, 37. Opens the discussion on the Six Articles, A.D. 1539, 198. Letter from Queen Margaret, 362. Concerning Angus, 363. Advances from York, 393. On Cromwell, 446. The Queen attainted, 477. In France, iv. 50, 76, 77, 81. Anticipated invasion, 127. His French sympathies, 158. Supports the persecutors, 200. Likely to succeed the King, 214. Arrested, 220, 221. His confession, 222. Attainted, 226. In the Tower, v. 173. Mary intends to restore him to the Council, 220. Receives Mary on her entrance, 225
- Howard, Earl of Surrey (the poet), his friendship with the Duke of Richmond, i. 390. Sent to defend Norfolk, iii. 162. Is concerned in a London riot, 590, 591. At Guisnes, iv. 158. Defeated at St Etienne, 168. His character and assumption, 215, 216. Witnesses against him, 217, 219. Tried and executed, 226
- Howard, Thomas, fourth Duke of Norfolk, favours the marriage with the Archduke, but is hostile to the Dudley marriage, vii. 268, 272, 283, 419, 474. Refuses the command of the army for the North, 291. But afterwards undertakes it, 296. Protests against delay, 309. Yet is delayed, 316, 337. Suspected, 339. Sends his army forward, 343. Remains with the reserve at New-castle, 343. Complains of the Queen's parsimony, 347. Hears of the failure at Leith, and sends reinforcements, 367. Urges perseverance, 370. His quarrel with Lord Leicester, vii. 263 note. On the commission for investigating the Darnley murder, viii. 384. President of the commission, 386. Proposal to marry him to the Queen of Scots, 387, 445, 492; ix. 23, 56. Visit of the Queen to him at the Charterhouse, viii. 437. His claim to the Dacres estates, 491; ix. 51. His communications with Don Guerau, 16, 18. Taxed by the Queen as to the Scotch marriage, 21. Consent of part of the Council to his marriage with Mary Stuart, 25. His intrigues for that object, 27, 28. He plots against Cecil, 41—43. Cecil discovers his plot, 50. The Queen of Scots' answer as to his proposed marriage to her, 58. Suspected by Cecil, 74. His timidity, 79, 80. The marriage forbidden by the Queen, 83, 84. Leaves the Court, 85. Summoned to return, 87. Hesitates, 87. Goes to Keninghall, 89. Returns, and is arrested, 91, 92. Sent to the Tower, 93, 94. His promises, 106, 279. Begs for his release, 298. Liberated, 309. Breaks his promise, 349. Cecil's view of his marriage, 351. Norfolk's part in a new Catholic conspiracy, 391—394. His instructions to Ridolfi, 402, 411. Ridolfi's letter to him, 451 and note. Receives money from the Spanish ambassador, x. 5. Arrest of his secretaries, 6. Arrested by Sadler, 7. Sent to the Tower, 8. Examined, 10. Peers appointed to try him, 38. His trial, 42. Condemned, 48, 49. Petition in form from Parliament for his death, 91. Executed, 92
- Howard, Philip, Earl of Arundel, reconciled to the Jesuits, xi. 75. Sent to the Tower, 402, 598, 599. Prays for the success of the Armada, xii. 364
- Howard of Effingham, Lord William,

- son of Thomas, second Duke, Marshal of England, i. 454. In Scotland, iii. 378. Sent to Paris, 450, 495. The signing of the Letters Patent, v. 167. Henry proposes to garrison Calais, 215. Bansters the Queen respecting Philip, 315. Troops mustering, 331. Defends the Capital against Wyatt, 338, 346. Sent to protect the passage of Philip to England, 387. Threatens Sir John Gage, 388. Protects Elizabeth, 390. The Queen fears him, 398. Receives Philip with the fleet at the Needles, 405. Elizabeth's guardian, 500. Receives her at Hampton Court, 528. Discontent and suspicion, vi. 16. The fleet cruises in the Channel, 46. At Cambray, 170. His opinion of the Queen, 262. In favour of the Austrian marriage, 268.
- Howard of Effingham, Lord Charles, son of the above, prevails on Elizabeth to sign Mary's warrant, xii. 236. Admiral of the fleet, 364. Provoked at Elizabeth's perversity, 366, 367. Complains to Cecil respecting her, 370. Puts to sea to meet the Armada, 371. The engagement off Plymouth, 394. Supplies his fleet from the resources of the Spaniards, 399. Fight at Portland, 400—404. Anchors in Calais Roads, 406. Holds a council of war, 412. The fireships and their effect, 412—414. Captures Moncada's ship, 414. Chases the Spaniards, 423. Returns to Margate, 431. Distress of his fleet, 431. Defends himself against the charge of peculation, 433.
- Howard, Lord Henry, x. 400
- Howard, Lord Thomas, contracted to Lady Margaret Douglas, ii. 401. Made Lord Howard of Binden, vi. 147
- Howard, Sir George, at Edinburgh, vi. 346. Goes to London for instructions, 346
- Hubert, Nicholas (or French Paris), vii. 502 note, 511, 513. His depositions, viii. 74 note; ix. 65. Executed, viii. 74 note
- Huguénots. See Condé; Coligny; Henry of Navarre
- Huick, a physician, his answers to the inquisitors in London, iv. 202
- Hume, Lord, meets Throgmorton, viii. 207. Joins the Regent with men, 320. Wounded at Langside, 324. In Edinburgh Castle, x. 196, 208. Surrenders, 209
- Humfrey, Dr, vii. 434
- Hungerford, Captain, in Ireland, x. 254, 257
- Hungerford, Lady, iii. 303
- Hunsdon, Lord. See Carey, Sir Henry
- Hunter, William, his story and martyrdom, v. 505—508
- Huntingdon, Earl of, ii. 555; iv. 498; v. 338, 341, 355, 398, 442; vi. 419, 433, 434, 587, 589; ix. 69, 74. Takes custody of the Queen of Scots, 86. Joins Shrewsbury at Tutbury, 137. Warns Cecil, 314 note. Employed in raising levies, xi. 23, 25. Writes to Randolph, 26, 132. Receives a letter from Walsingham, 27
- Huntly, Earl of, iii. 350. Won back by d'Oysel, vi. 248. His defiance of the Protestants, 27. Deprived of the lands of Murray, 531. His policy, 604. Refuses to part with the lands of Murray, 604. Expedition of the Queen of Scots against him, 607. Taken at Corrichie Burn, 610. His death, 610
- Huntly, Lady, wife of the above, vi. 609
- Huntly, Earl of (son of the above), escapes from Holyrood, vii. 392. Restored to his estates, 493; viii. 113, 127. At the gathering at Hamilton, 312. Proclaims Mary Stuart in the North, ix. 61. The Regent's expedition against him, 63. Spanish officers with him, 315. Attainted by the Lords at Stirling, 533. At the pacification of Perth, x. 198. At Court of James VI., xi. 587
- Hurley, Archbishop, x. 618. Tortured and hanged, 619—621
- Hussey, Lord, guardian of Princess Mary, ii. 44. At Sleaford Castle, 513 (see Pilgrimage of Grace). His vacillating conduct, 521—523. Executed, iii. 28
- Hutton, iii. 88
- de la Hyde, Sir James, ii. 195

IAGO, St, captured by Drake, xii.
 35
 Iceland fleet, the, iii. 63; viii. 3
 Images, Act against, iv. 495. Its effect in Ireland, v. 73
 Inchkeith, French troops, vi. 314, 317, 358
 Incomes of the higher classes in the sixteenth century, i. 38
 Inglefield, v. 366
 Ingoldsbys, the, ii. 562
 Inquisition, v. 370, 466. Its treatment of English sailors, viii. 20—26, 43
 'Institution of the Christian Man,' the, presented by Henry VIII. to Charles V., iv. 11 Interim, the, iv. 334. Magdeburg holds out against it, 533. Augsburg also refuses it, v. 63 d'Inteville, French ambassador to Henry VIII., i. 433; ii. 40. His letter to Cardinal Tournon on the state of England, 59. His remark on Anne's position, 357
 Inverness, visit of the Queen of Scots to, vi. 607
 Ipswich, scene at the executions at, iii. 188
 Ireland, state of, i. 386; ii. 125. The Norman conquest of, 126. The English Pale in, 136. Misery of the people, 143. The rebellion under Lord Thomas Fitzgerald, 172, 194, 200. Fresh disturbances, iii. 409, 444; iv. 317. State of the country under Sir Edward Bellingham, v. 74—82. Conspiracy of the chiefs, 83. Establishment of a mint, 85. Sufferings from base coin, 91—98. Condition of the country under Queen Mary, vii. 101. Habits and character of the people, 102, 103. Especial wretchedness of the Pale, 104, 105. The report of 1559, 106—110. The advances of the chiefs declined by the King of Spain, 110. The Scottish settlers in Antrim, 111. An Irish 'gentleman,' 112, 120. Letter to Queen Elizabeth, 120, 121. Defeats the English, 127. Shan O'Neil's power, 142. Sussex's expedition into Ulster against him, 150. Sir Thomas Cusak's scheme for pacification, 154. Attempt to assassinate O'Neil, 156.

Inquiry into the disorders of the Pale, 161. Report of the commissioners, 162. Desolation of Munster, 164, 165. Cecil's statement of the expenses of the Irish war, 448. The English army in Ireland, 524, 525. Sir Nicholas Arnold, 524, 525. Condition of the country, 528, 542. Irish policy of the Tudor sovereigns, 528. Project for Irish reform, 529. Three primates, 531. Sir H. Sidney made deputy, 536, 538. Expenses of the government, 538. Sidney's policy, 538. His plan for a campaign, 554. Ireland recovered for the English crown, 579. Pirates on the Irish coast, viii. 47. State of the country after the death of Shan O'Neil, x. 217. Report of Diego Ortiz, 220. Effects of the attempt to force the Reformation on the Irish, 221 and note. The Irish money difficulty, 225. Plans for English colonies, 226. Intention of the colonists to exterminate the natives, 233. League of the native chiefs, 236. Crown of Ireland offered to Spain, 237. Insurrection in Munster, 240. Massacres, 243. Sir H. Sidney's expedition, 247. Wholesale slaughter of the people, 251, 252, 255—257. Opposite advice as to the remedies for Ireland, 258. Enormous cost to the English crown, 259. English mismanagement, 262. Intended invasion by the Spaniards, 273. Departure of Sir H. Sidney, 277. Sir W. Fitzwilliam deputy, 278. Confusion and disorder, 280, 281. Tremayne's report, 282. Perrot's successes, 286—290. Effect in Ireland of the St Bartholomew massacre, 296. Sir W. Fitzwilliam's difficulties, 297. The Earl of Essex's expedition, 301—309. Failure of the English attempts to settle Ireland, 310—314. Danger of a Spanish-Italian invasion, 444. Increasing hostility between England and Ireland, 515. Effects of the Queen's economy, 516. Revolt of three provinces, 518. Essex's campaigns, 519 et seq. Sir H. Sidney deputy again, 530. Outbreak of the plague, 531. Submission of the rebels, 531. His progress and redress of grievances, 532—534. Condition of the State religion in 1576, 535. Catholic revival, 536. Sir Henry Sidney's report on the established Church in Ireland, 537. Drury's execution of justice in Munster, 541. Sir N. Malby's massacres, 543. Spiritual and temporal anarchy, 546. Symptoms of approaching rebellion, 549. Landing of Fitzmaurice and Saunders, 555. Rising of the Geraldines, 560. Desmond joins the rebellion, 565. Massacre of the people, 569. Rising in the Pale, 577, 578. Arrival of Lord Grey de Wilton as deputy, 579. Landing of Spaniards and Italians in Kerry, 581. They are taken at Smerwick and executed, 589. Misery on all sides, 594, 595. A general pardon, excluding the Desmonds, sent over, 597. Despair and cruelties in Munster, 599. Probable population of Ireland at this time, 600 note. Burghley's censure of the English barbarities, 604. Annexation to Spain a universal passion in Ireland, 612. End of the rebellion, 615. Sir John Perrot deputy, 621

JAMES IV., King of Scotland, at Flodden Field, iii. 347

James V., King of Scotland, heir of England, i. 112. Receives a holy sword from the Pope, iii. 1. Made 'Defensor fidei,' 129. His father's death, 348. Proposals to betroth him, 352. Begins to govern, 359. Negotiations for his betrothal to the Princess Mary, 359. His character as a boy, 375, 379. Marries Magdalen de Valois, 384. Returns, 387. Persecutes the Douglases, 390. Marries Mary of Guise, 390. Joins the Catholic coalition, 391, 465, 517. With the army, 526, 528. His grief at Solway Moss, 532, 533. Hears of Mary Stuart's birth, and dies, 534.

James Stuart (afterwards James VI. of Scotland), vii. 424, 497; viii. 148, 197, 229; ix. 247; x. 185. Proposal to bring him up in England, 406, 418. Declared to have attained his majority, 451. His estates in England, 455—458; xi. 2. Reorganization of the French faction at his Court, 3, 324. Plan to seize him, 9. Influenced by d'Aubigny, 9, 23. Subscribes a Protestant confession, 28. Lennox endeavours to convert him to Rome, 228. His disposition towards England, 229. Not recognized by France as King, 230. Proposed association of, with Mary in the crown, 230—234. Unhappy influences at work, 240. Jesuit mission to him, 240—243. Disputes with the General Assembly, 256. Raid of Ruthven, 270—274. Confined in Edinburgh Castle, 294. Inclines to Elizabeth's views, 326. Escapes from the Protestant nobles, 369. His pension, 371, 374. Writes to Guise, 375, 427. How estimated by Guise, 376. Walsingham sent on embassy to him, 382, 385. Determines to secure the English crown, 426. His letter to the Pope, 428. Another plot to seize him, 437, 438. Capture and execution of Gowrie, 439—441. Letters from M. Fontenay describing his character, 456—466. Sells himself to Elizabeth, 572. Cursed by his mother, 573. Arran's death proposed, 582. His negotiations with the League, 588. A prisoner in the Protestant nobles' hands, 594. League with Elizabeth, xii. 133. Disinherited by his mother, 177. Interposes to save her life, 203. In favour of the Catholic lords, 212. Sends Melville and Grey to intercede for her, 217. His proposals through his ambassadors, 217, 218. Her death, 236—256.

Jarnac, battle of, ix., 39

Jaureguy, Juan, attempts to assassinate the Prince of Orange, xi.

341. Dies, 342

Jedburgh, ix. 264

Jemmingen, battle of, viii. 433

Jerningham, Sir Henry, v. 199, 328, 366; vi. 13

Jerome, vicar of Stepney, iii. 218.

Sent for by Henry VIII., and revokes his words, 219. Accused of heresy, 333. And burnt, 341

Jervaulx, Abbot of, iii. 29. Hung at Tyburn, 34

Jesuits, x. 513; xi. 43. Invasion of

- England, 43, 54 et seq., 55. Their plots, 395. Severity towards them, 405, 406. Ordered to leave England, 539
- Jesus, Baculum, vii. 110
- Jewel, John, Bishop of London, at the theological controversy in Westminster Abbey, vi. 186. In exile in Germany, 220. His report on the clergy of Oxford, vii. 19, 20. On the divine right of kings, vii. 434; ix. 375 note. His sermon at Paul's Cross, viii. 273
- Joanna of Castile, mass said for, v. 528
- John of Austria, Don, thought of for husband of the Queen of Scots, ix. 11. His victory at Lepanto, x. 67. Proposal to invade England, 95 and note. Appointed to command in the Netherlands, 381. Remains at Luxemburg, 383. The treaty of Ghent, 414. His progress in South Brabant, 432. Defeated at Rymenant, 462. Walsingham's description of him, 463 note. His death, 476
- John of the Side, ix. 153
- John of Transylvania, rival King of Hungary, ii. 76
- John ab Ulmis, iv. 505, 557
- Johnson, Henry, his trial, ix. 184
- Jones, the Oxford conjurer, ii. 70
- de Joyeuse, Duc, defeated by Navarre, xii. 312
- Judd, Sir Andrew, endows a school at Tunbridge, iv. 516
- Julian, Captain, in Carrigafoyle, x. 469
- Julius II., Pope, validity of his dispensation on Henry VIII.'s marriage, i. 116, 117
- Julius III., Pope, iv. 332, 455. Chosen Pope, 532, 569. Sends a nuncio to the Emperor, v. 146. His conversations with Pole, 264, 417, 419, 420. His joy about England, 462. His death, 513
- Justices of the peace, their position, habits, and duties, i. 40, 46, 63, 83
- KARNE, Sir Edward, ii. 104, 106; iii. 328; vi. 46
- Kelly, Matthew, Baron of Dunganon, vii. 112
- Kelly, Matthew, Baron of Dunganon, son of the above, vii. 113, 139. Murdered, 140
- Kelso burned, ix. 264
- Kendall, iii. 135, 237
- Keninghall, castle of the Howards, iv. 220
- Kent, rising of commons of, v. 323, 324, 327
- Ker of Faldonside, at the murder of Rizzio, vii. 386. Excepted from pardon, 498
- Ker of Fernihurst, ix. 169, 264, 533; xi. 585
- Kerry, raid of Sir W. Pelham in, x. 572, 573. Landing of Spanish and Italian troops in, 581
- Ket, Robert, his rising in Norfolk, iv. 441. His camp on Mousewold Hill, 441. Takes Norwich, 444, 446. Defeated in Daffindale, 451. Executed, 453
- Keys, Thomas, the sergeant porter, marries Lady Mary Grey, vii. 327
- Kidderminster, executions at, iii. 237
- Kildare, Gerald, eighth Earl of, ii. 136 et seq.
- Kildare, Gerald, ninth Earl of, ii. 136—150. Made deputy, 150. Marries Lady E. Grey, 155. Rebels, 156, 158. In the Tower, 162, 168. Pardoned, 164. His death, 191
- Kildare, Gerald, tenth Earl of, v. 74. Restored, 98. Meditates rebellion, but repents and becomes loyal, vii. 118, 119, 545. Goes to London, 123. Undertakes to deal with O'Neil, 129. In Sidney's campaign, 563. Afraid to join the rebellious barons of the Pale, x. 577, 580. Imprisoned, 594. Plot to liberate him, 601. Sent to London and dies in the Tower, 602
- Kilfenoragh, Bishopric of, x. 546
- Kilkenny, Sir W. Drury in, x. 541
- Killaloe, Bishop of, x. 546
- Killarney in the 16th century, x. 575
- Killigrew, Sir Henry, vi. 237, 376. Sent to the Queen of Scots, vii. 422; viii. 95. Returns to London, 99. Negotiates for fresh ports in the Baltic for English commerce, ix. 29. Sent to Mar, x. 146. Hopes to reconcile Scottish parties, 177. His negotiations for delivering up Mary to the Scots, 177, 181, 182.

- His answer to Morton, 188. His advice as to Mary Stuart's party, 211. Sent to Edinburgh, 406
- Killigrew of Pendennis, at Havre, vi. 584. At Rouen, 584, 595
- Killigrews, the, v. 372; vi. 24; viii. 50
- Kilmallock, town of, punished, x. 248, 251
- King, Oliver, x. 274
- Kinghorn, vi. 310
- Kingston, Sir Anthony, legends of his barbarity, iv. 437. His interview with Hooper, v. 491. In the Dudley conspiracy, vi. 3. His death, 11
- Kingston, Sir William, ii. 363. His account of Anne Boleyn, 364, 376
- Kircaldy, James, assists Arran to call a convention, iii. 540. In Paris during the massacre, x. 176
- Kircaldy of Grange, Lord Treasurer of Scotland, iii. 463, 494, 533; iv. 29
- Kircaldy, Sir William, of Grange, son of the above, present at Beton's death, iv. 181. His account of the destruction of the Scotch abbeys, vi. 234. Hesitates to declare himself openly, 246. Invites Cecil to the proposed alliance between England and Scotland, 248. At the siege of Leith, 365. At Strathbogie, 609. Writes to Cecil, viii. 131. And to Bedford, 145. Goes to the Queen at Carberry Hill, 173. Takes the Queen to the Lords, 174. Goes in pursuit of Bothwell, 260. Joins the Regent Murray, 320. At Langside, 324. Bears the standard at Murray's funeral, ix. 244. His letter to Randolph, 267 and note. Occupies Edinburgh Castle with Maitland, 524. Their distress, x. 176. Expected to surrender the castle, 181. Resolves to hold the castle, 188. Knox's dying warning to him, 190. Blockaded in the castle, 196. Which he insists upon holding, 203. Capture of the castle, 209. His execution, 214, 215
- Kircaldy, Robert, brother of the last, vi. 314
- Kirkstead, Abbot of, iii. 27
- Kirk of Scotland, establishment of the, viii. 301. Plan for assimilating it to the Church of England, 370
- Kirk-a-Field, plan of, vii. 512. Darnley taken to, 513. And murdered there, 520—522
- Kirwan, Dr, his sermon, i. 372
- Kitchen, Anthony, Bishop of Llandaff, takes the oath of supremacy, vi. 205
- Kitson, Sir Thomas, i. 10
- Knight, martyr, v. 505
- Knights of Windsor, founded, iv. 234
- Knockfergus, proposed English settlement at, x. 294, 306
- Knowles, Sir Francis, in Elizabeth's first council, vi. 122. At Portsmouth, vii. 72. Sent to Ireland, 449. Approves of Sidney's plans, 553, 554. Sent to take charge of the Queen of Scots, viii. 341. His interviews with her, 341, 497. His impression of her character, 343. Excuses Elizabeth's meanness to Mary, 353. Writes to Cecil respecting Mary, 357. His religious conferences with the Queen of Scots, 375. She makes presents to his wife, 378. His plan for marrying her to George Carey, 402, 447. His advice to Elizabeth, 451, 470. His instructions from the Queen, 467. Communicates to Mary Elizabeth's advice, 497. Thinks Elizabeth no longer fit to govern, 511. Cautions Norfolk against Spanish friendship, ix. 75. His speech on the Act for the Protection of the Queen, 439. Accompanies Don Guerau to Calais, x. 32. His explanation of the Queen's proceedings, 445 note. Her anger with him, 501. Supports her in the Commons, xi. 77. Questions Camplan, 105. Introduces the Queen's bill, 535. His death, xii. 503
- Knowles, Henry, sent to Germany, vi. 580.
- Knowles, Lettice, x. 397. Married to the Earl of Leicester, 492, 545
- Knox, John, at Holyrood, i. 370. His birth, iii. 398. His character, 400; vi. 221. Quoted, iii. 494. On Solway Moss, 531. On Scotch persecutions, iv. 18, 31. His opinion of Beton's death, 184. Refuses the bishopric of Rochester, v. 136. His sermon at Amersham, 201. Blows his 'First Blast,' vi. 83. In exile, 219. Returns to Scotland, 219,

His followers, 222. Appeal to Mary of Guise, 222. Goes again into exile, 224. Returns, 227. His sermon in Perth, 228. Goes to St Andrew's, and preaches there, 233. Sends a letter to Queen Elizabeth, 247. His interview with Sir James Crofts at Berwick, 250. Reconstructs the Kirk, 407—409. His conversation with the Queen of Scots, 518, 519. His opinion of her, 527, 528, 533, 564. Protests against her marriage with a Catholic, vii. 88. His interview with her, 88, 89. Warns Cecil of the danger to be apprehended from her marriage, 90. Mary's attempt to imprison him, 95. Divines Mary's purpose in recalling Lord Lennox, 193. Advises her execution, viii. 211. Protestantism as shaped by him for the people, ix. 244. His sermon at the funeral of the Regent, 244, 245. A prayer of his, 246 note. Contrasted with Maitland, 255. Goes to St Andrew's, 531; x. 178. Returns to Edinburgh, 179. His sermon on the massacre, 180. His message to Grange, 190. His last illness and death, 190—193. His character, 193—195.

Knyvet, Sir Anthony, Lieutenant of the Tower, iv. 208; v. 348, 352, 353

Kyme, iv. 204

LABOUR, regiments of, i. 13.

Wages of the labouring classes in the 16th century, 27, 28. Causes of their prosperity at this time, 29. The Wages Act of Henry VIII., 29. Day wages of the labourer in the time of Elizabeth, 31 note. Labour supported against capital by the interference of the State, 35, 36, 58. Human beings not treated as 'hands,' but men, 59

Lalaing, Count de, v. 310

Lamb, Robert, martyr of Perth, iv. 15

Lambert, John, accused of heresy, iii. 152. Condemned for denying the Real Presence, 153. His death, 155

Lambert, Richard, his trial, ix. 185

Lambeth, the dinner at, iii. 215; vii. 259

Lancaster, Dr, Archbishop of Armagh, x. 224

Land, tenure of, in the 16th century, i. 10. Descending scale of landed proprietors, 12. Respective advantage of large and small estates, 14. The income from land, how regarded, 15. First appearance of the agricultural labourer as he now exists, 28 note. Legislative interference with the management of property, 31, 32. Introduction of the commercial spirit into the management of land, 33. Evil of the excess of land employed in pasture, 34. Remedies provided by the 13th and 25th of Henry VIII., 35

Landenberg, Baron von, iv. 40, 50

Landgrave, the. See Hesse

Landrecy, siege of, iii. 620—623

Lane, William, his letter to Cecil on the currency, iv. 519

Lanfranchi, Carlo, in Champagny's intrigue, xii. 40, 53

Langden Abbey, visitation of, ii. 318

Langham, complaints at, iii. 54

La Rue, his advice to the Queen of Scots, xi. 578

Lascelles, the, ii. 562

Lascelles, Christopher, vii. 419, 421

Lascelles, George, iii. 129

Lascelles, John, persecution of, iv. 203

Lascelles, Thomas, iii. 446, 466, 467.

Latimer, Lord, ii. 547. See Neville

Latimer, Hugh, his sermon, i. 7. On rent, 25. On Wolsey, 101. His character, 280. Clergy wish to burn him, 343. His preaching, 370, 574; ii. 470—474. Before Wolsey, i. 518. His early life, 571. Is made royal chaplain, 576. Intercedes for Protestants, 576, 577. Cited before Stokesley, 579—582. Saved by the King, 582. On confession, ii. 210. On Anabaptists, 258. On Church property, 335. Made bishop of Worcester, 341. His sermon at St Paul's Cross, 344. His letters, iii. 74, 102. Preaches at Friar Forest's death, 109. The Real Presence, 199. Resigns his bishopric, 217. Called before the Council, iv. 201, 202. Names of his examiners, 203. His comparative indifference to doctrines, 340. His sermons of the Plough 355. Opinion of Seymour, 392, 396. His sermon on the general corrup-

- tion, 511. Will not escape, v. 253. Sent to the Tower and to Oxford, 369, 395. His letter to Mrs Wilkin-son, 550. His appearance, 552. His character, 553. His martyrdom, 554—558
- Laurence, tortured and martyred, v. 505
- de Lautrec, his death, i. 144
- Laws, sumptuary, in the 16th cen- tury, i. 15. State of the criminal laws in England, iii. 220—228. The laws of benefit of clergy and sanctuary, 221, 227
- Lawson, James, his sermon, xi. 273
- Layton, or Leyton, ecclesiastical commissioner, ii. 310. At Oxford, 312. Through England, 315. At Langden Abbey, 318. Presents the Black Book of the Commission, 332. Sent to Yorkshire, 509. Com- plaints against him, 510. Pleads for felons at Bewley, iii. 228. At Glastonbury, 240. His death iv. 46
- Layton, Sir Brian, iv. 105. Killed, 108
- League of the Catholic powers, pro- jected, vi. 449. Formed, vii. 368
- League between England and France against Spain formed, ix. 481
- League, Holy, proceedings of, xi. 559 et seq.; xii. 312
- Lee, Edward, Archbishop of York, i. 253. Warns Henry VIII. against Tyndall's Bible, 509. At Pomfret, ii. 569, 587
- Lee, Roland, Bishop of Lichfield, Lord Warden of the Welsh Marches, i. 411. His letters and curious accounts of him, iii. 229—233
- Lee, Sir Henry, v. 557
- Leech, one of the murderers of the Somerset herald, iii. 542
- Legbourne, ii. 515
- Legh, ecclesiastical commissioner (with Layton, which see), ii. 310, 509, 510
- Leicester, Earl of. See Dudley, Lord Robert
- Leicester, Lady, murdered, xii. 437
- Leighton, of Shropshire, at Havre, vi. 584
- Leighton, Mr, sent to Scotland, viii. 317
- Leirmouth, Sir James, iii. 554
- Leith, iv. 23. Sacked by the English, 36. Occupied by French troops, vi. 248, 275. French reinforce- ments arrive there, 260. Strength of the place, 344, 345. Besieged by the English and Scots, 356. A third of the town burnt, 362, 363. Distress of the French garrison, 374. Who evacuate Leith, and sail for France, 399. Landing of the Queen of Scots at, 516
- Leith Roads occupied by the English fleet, vi. 319 et seq.
- Lenogh, Tirlogh. See O'Neil, Tir- logh Lenogh
- Lennox, Earl of, iii. 363. Killed, 373
- Lennox, Earl of (son of the above), joins the English party, iv. 23. Marries Lady Margaret Douglas, and is father of Darnley, 104. Claims the succession to the throne of Scotland, vi. 475. Sent to the Tower, 542. Objections to him in Scotland, vii. 192. Endeavours to recover his rank and estates, 192. Allowed to return to Scotland, 207. Distributes presents at Holyrood, 215. Notes of his friends and enemies, 235 note, 271, 272. Ordered by Elizabeth to return to England, 297, 304. Refuses, 309. Regains his old position in the Protestant league, 375. Neglected by the Court, 440. Tries to appease Mary, 441. Requires the Queen of Scots to assemble the nobility, viii. 85. Persons charged by him with the murder of his son, 108. The Queen hinders the appearance of himself or his witnesses at Bothwell's trial, 115, 116. Protest made by his servant-Cunningham, 123. Both- well acquitted, 125. Escapes to England, 127. Forbidden to be present at the investigation into the Darnley murder, 376. Accuses the Queen of Scots at Westminster, 456. With Drury's army, ix. 282. Recommended by Queen Elizabeth for Regent, 301. Declared Regent, 302. His desolate condition, 532. Made prisoner at Stirling, 532. Shot, 536
- Lennox, Earl of. See Stuart, Esme
- Lennox, Lady Margaret, i. 115
- Lennox, Countess of. See Douglas, Lady Margaret

- Lennox, house of, vi. 475
 Lepanto, battle of, x. 67
 Leslie, John, stabs Beton, iv. 182
 Leslie, Norman, Master of Rothies (brother of the above), iv. 29, 109. Takes the castle of St Andrew's, 181
 Leslie, John (afterwards Bishop of Ross), sent to invite Mary Stuart to Scotland, vi. 470. His defence of Mary Stuart, viii. 81. Goes to her at Bolton, 389. Notice of him, 389. His commission from Bolton, 392. His protest, 393, 454. His conversation with the Duke of Norfolk, 446. His answer to the charges against the Queen of Scots, 459. Requests an interview with Cecil and Leicester, 461. Elizabeth's message to Mary through him, 465. Reproaches Elizabeth, 466. She detains him in London, 467. His intrigues in Elizabeth's Court, 503. His speech at the session, 506. His pamphlet in defence of his mistress, 522. His private opinion of her, 523. Suggests that Leicester should marry Mary, ix. 26. Undertakes for Mary's acquiescence in Elizabeth's requirements, 27. His residence at Burton, 34. Don Guerau's letters to Alva respecting him, 81—83. His connection with the Earls' rebellion discovered, 208. His negotiations for his mistress's restoration, 277, 278. Publishes the Pope's bull against Elizabeth, 283. Sent to Chatsworth, 292. His arrangements with Don Guerau, 293—295. His report from Chatsworth, 299. Accompanies Cecil to Chatsworth, 333. Further negotiations, 373. On the commission for the restoration of Mary, 375. His letter to the Duchess of Feria, 386. His mode of dealing with Ridolfi's letters, 453. His story, 457. Duped by Herle, 463—465. Examined and removed to Ely House, 465. Brought back to London, and examined by the Council, x. 13. Confesses, 14, 15. Examined again, 51
 Levening, his escape, iii. 25, 30
 Lever, a divine, quoted, iv. 508. Preaches at Paul's Cross against general corruption, 514
 Lewis, of Cordova, Don, taken prisoner, xii. 447. The only survivor in the hands of the English, 453
 Leyden unsuccessfully besieged by the Spaniards, x. 351
 Leyne, Lough, x. 575
 Leyton. See Layton
 da Leyva, Don Antonio, ii. 429
 da Leyva, Don Alonzo, account of, xii. 380. Sails with a remnant of the Armada, 441, 442. Lost at Dunluce, 458, 459
 Libellers, Act against, iv. 192
 Lichfield, abuses in the nunnery of, ii. 319 de Lignerolles, M., viii. 242, 259
 Lilliard, Arthur, his mission to the Queen of Scots, vi. 522
 Limerick invaded by the Scots, x. 289. Sir W. Drury in, 541
 Limoges, Bishop of, at Cambray, vi. 170
 Lincoln, rising at (see Pilgrimage of Grace), ii. 520
 Lincoln, Bishop of. See Watson, Thomas
 Lincolnshire, address of the gentlemen of, to Philip II., ix. 159
 Lindsay, Lord, accepts Bothwell's challenge, viii. 172. The Queen's words to him, 175. Sent to her to Lochleven, 226. Joins the Regent at Langside, 321. Turns the tide of the battle, 324. Challenge between him and Herries, 506. Secures the Castle of Edinburgh, x. 453. With Morton's party, xi. 25. Rebels and is taken, 437, 439, 441, 442
 Linen manufactures, statute of 24 Henry VIII. cap. 4, for the encouragement of the, i. 5
 Linlithgow, battle of, iii. 373. Murder of the Regent Murray at, ix. 199, 200. Catholic convention at, 261
 Lisle, Viscount, illegitimate son of Edward IV., iii. 332
 Lisle, Lord. See Dudley
 Lister, Sir Richard, ii. 378
 Litany prepared by Henry VIII., iv. 189
 Little Ease, i. 536; iii. 489. Campaign in, xi. 92
 Liturgy, beauty and effect of the, on the modern English, iv. 188, 190. Cranmer's, the law of the land, vi. 194. Accepted gradually, 203

- Livingstone, Lord, ix. 352. Demands Angus and Mar, xi. 454
- Loan, a forced, vi. 55
- Lochleven Castle, Murray at, vii. 300. The Queen of Scots imprisoned at, viii. 182. Description of it, 246
- Lochmaben, gathering at, iii. 528
- Lodysman, Henry, ii. 379
- Loftus, Adam, Archbishop of Armagh, his protest, vii. 262, 527. On the spiritual condition of Ireland, x. 281 note. His part in Hurley's execution, 619
- Lok, John, his commencement of the English slave-trade, viii. 8
- Lollards, origin of the word and sect, i. 481. The Act against them, 'De Heretico Comburendo,' 498. Under Henry V., 500. End of their movement, 502. In Scotland, iii. 398. Persecuting bills against, repealed, iv. 305. 'De Heretico Comburendo' again brought forward, v. 393, 396
- London, apprentices of, in Normandy, i. 20. London trading companies (see Trade), 50. Battle of school-boys in, respecting Philip II., v. 375, 376. Aversion of the people to the priests, vi. 122. Their reception of Queen Elizabeth, 146. Destruction of St Paul's Cathedral, 492. Ravages of the plague, vii. 74. Riots in the churches, 259. Receipt of the news of the St Bartholomew massacre, x. 145. A quarter of a million subscribed for the Prince of Orange, 175
- London Bridge, v. 345
- London, Dr, i. 532, 539, 545; iv. 6. His punishment and death, 8, 9
- Long, Sir Richard, iii. 454
- Longlands, Bishop of Lincoln, his cruelty, i. 545
- Longlands, palace of, sacked, ii. 520
- Longueville, Madame de. See Mary of Guise
- de Looe, Andrea, in Champagny's intrigue, xii. 40, 53
- 'Lords of the New Attemptate,' vii. 404
- Lorraine, Cardinal of, at the Congress of Cambray, vi. 170. His ability and ambition, 243. His letter to Mary of Guise, 338, 339. His account of the conspiracy of Amboise, 339 note. Goes from Paris with Mary Stuart, 446. Attends her to Calais, 511. Challenges the Protestants, 534. Proposes the Archduke Charles as a husband for Mary Stuart, vii. 78 note. Seeks the assassination of Elizabeth, ix. 232, 261
- Lorraine, Francis, Duke of, iv. 58. His gallantry at Boulogne, 148
- Lorraine, Duchess of, vi. 90. At Cambray, 170
- Loughrea Castle, x. 582
- Louis, Prince of Condé. See Condé
- Louis of Nassau, Count, defeated at Jemmingen, viii. 433. Prepares for a descent on the Spanish troops in the Netherlands, ix. 380. Comes to London for help, 480. Goes to Paris, 480. Joins with the Huguenots and takes Mons, x. 102. Makes preparations against Alva, 123. Capitulates in Mons, 158. Killed at Mook Heath, 337
- Louth, rising at, ii. 515. See Pilgrimage of Grace
- Louvain, English refugees at, x. 96, 98, 161, 166
- Lovel, Gregory, ii. 379
- Luke, Sir Walter, ii. 378
- Lumley, George, ii. 512; iii. 10. Sent to the Tower, 19. Executed, 34
- Lumley, Lord, ix. 71, 86, 96, 259, 426, 451 and note; x. 11
- Lundy, in Fife, visit of the Queen of Scots to the laird of, vii. 264. Thrown into prison, 329
- Lundy Island, iii. 503
- Luther, Martin, i. 506; ii. 290; iv. 122
- Lutherans, Henry VIII. and the, ii. 290, 295, 296. Lutheran divines sent to England, iii. 150. Chiefs of the party in England, 177. Make advances to Henry VIII., iv. 88, 95. Their protest against the Council of Trent, 123, 156. Lutheranism in England, 340. Lutheran clergy expelled from Augsburg, v. 63. Lutheran Princes demand the liberation of the Landgrave of Hesse, 67. Ambassadors to the Council of Trent, 67—69
- Lyford Grange, xi. 87
- Lyon, William, iii. 390
- Lysingham, the pirate, viii. 47

M'CARTY MORE, his lands forfeited, x. 234, 235. Murders English settlers, 240. Sues for pardon, 251. In Ormond's train, 573
 Macarty, Reagh, iii. 428
 M'Connell, Allaster, vii. 560, 570, 576
 M'Connell, Gillespie, vii. 576. Murders O'Neil, 577
 MacConnell, of the Isles, i. 386
 M'Connell, James, settles with his followers in Tyrconnel, vii. 112. His opinion of Mary's claims on the English throne, 116. Marries his daughter to the O'Neil, 116. His death, 533
 M'Connells, the, vii. 149
 M'Connell, Surleboy, imprisoned, vii. 533. Released, 577. Punished by the Earl of Essex, x. 527. Meaning of his name, 527 note. Murder of his family at Rathlin, 529
 MacGerald, Gerald, iii. 426
 Macginn, Maurice, Archbishop of Cashel, offers the crown of Ireland to Spain, x. 238, 239
 M'Guyre, crushed by Shan O'Neil, vii. 146. Defends himself, 149. His death, 563
 MacHugh, Feagh, x. 256
 MacHughes, massacre of the, x. 256
 Mackarel, Dr, Abbot of Barlings, ii. 517. Taken prisoner, 532. Executed, iii. 28
 M'Kevin, Neil, vii. 576, 577
 MacMorrhough, iii. 427
 MacPhelim O'Neil, Sir Brian, his raids, x. 297, 305. His interview with Essex, 307. Submits, 518 note, 519
 MacSweeny of the Kenmare mountains, x. 614. Killed, 614
 MacWilliam, iii. 443
 MacWilliam. See Burke
 Madyson, Sir Edward, ii. 517, 522
 Magdalen de Valois, married to James V. of Scotland, iii. 384. Her death, 390
 Magdeburg, besieged by Duke Maurice, iv. 537. Its gallant defence, 569
 Magennis, Irish chief, vii. 571
 Magnus, Dr, Archbishop of York, ii. 546. In Scotland, iii. 364, 366, 369, 371

Maiden Bradley, iniquities in the monastery of, ii. 317 de Mainville, M., xi. 293, 294
 Maitland, Dr, the Black Friar, his wishes, ii. 212
 Maitland, William, the younger, follows John Knox, vi. 222. Will go to London for help, 281. Arrives in England, 282. At the conference at Berwick, 326. Goes to London to confer with the Queen and Cecil, 328. With the English army in Scotland, 343. Warns Cecil of the dangers of an uncertain policy in Scotland, 347. Cecil's opinion of him, 389. His desire for the Arran marriage, 406. On the Confession of Faith, 408. Promises to see it altered, 410. In London with the Scottish Commissioners, 441. His letters to Cecil on the state of parties in Scotland, 468, 512, 513. Desires the recognition of Mary Stuart as heir of the English crown, 514, 525. Chosen one of Mary's chief advisers, 517. Proposes an interview between the two Queens, 530. And the 'union of the isle,' 530, 544. In London, 565. No longer true to England, 576. Writes on behalf of Mary, 613. Sent by her to Elizabeth, 614; vii. 46. Correspondence with Cecil allowed to cease, vii. 25. His incredible lie, 48. Interviews with the Spanish ambassador, 50, 80. One of the commissioners for the conference at Berwick, 220. His angry conversation with Randolph, 223. His hopes, 225. His abilities, 225. His final demands, 229, 230. Cecil's answer, 231, 232. Maitland shaken off by his mistress, 234. Sent to Elizabeth to announce the Darnley marriage, 266. His complicity in the Rizzio plot, 415. His exile, 436. Pardoned, 438. Again at work, 444. Signs a bond for the destruction of Darnley, 496. Made prisoner by Bothwell, viii. 142. Who intended to kill him, 143. Saved by the Queen, 143. Intends to escape, 151. Steals away to Stirling, 160. His conversation with the Queen, 176, 177. Sends a letter to Cecil, 205. His opinion

- of Queen Elizabeth, 214. His advice to the Lords of Council, 229. His answer to Throgmorton, 238. The Regent shrinks from him, 298. Writes to Cecil after the battle of Langside, 326. Advises Norfolk to be open with Murray, 397, 398. Implicated in Darnley's murder, 510. Sent to the Castle of Edinburgh, ix. 77, 167. Review of his career, 164, 165. His trial to be postponed, 167. His secret correspondence with the Queen of England, 240. Acquitted of all charges against him, 246. Advocates Mary Stuart's restoration, 253. His constant object, 253, 317. His connection with Knox, 255. His letter to Elizabeth, 256. His contempt for her weakness, 275. His letter to Sussex, 291. At Blair Athol, 317, 328. His correspondence with Sussex as to the Queen of Scots' restoration, 318—322. His offers, 318. His letters to the Queen of Scots, 328. And to the Bishop of Ross, 328. Occupies Edinburgh with Grange, 524. Works upon Queen Elizabeth, 526; x. 69. Preparations to besiege him, 63. His illness, 68, 210. His despondency, 176. His letter to the Queen of Scots, 176. Resolves to hold the castle, 188. Knox's dying words about him, 191. Blockaded in the castle, 196. Capture of the castle, 209. Surrenders unconditionally, 209. His danger from the mob, 210. His death, 212
- Maitland, John, brother of the Secretary, one of the French faction at James's Court, xi. 3. Bishop of Dunblane attempts to assassinate him, xii. 472
- Malby, Sir Nicholas, President of Connaught, x. 541. His punishment of the Burkes, 543. His vigorous measures, 564. Bad news from Roscommon, 581. Threatened by the Burkes, 582. Defeats them, 586. Returns to England, 602
- Maldesen, Francis, x. 361
- Mallet, Dr, iv. 572
- Mallorys, the, ii. 562
- Maltravers, Lord, iii. 450
- Man, Dr, ambassador at Madrid, expelled, viii. 440, 441
- Manchester, sanctuary at, iii. 486
- Manners, Henry, Earl of Rutland, ii. 555; iv. 388, 447; vi. 68
- Manners, Edward, Earl of Rutland, leads the Nottinghamshire musters, ix. 135
- Mannock, iii. 466
- Mansell, Sir Rice, ii. 197
- Manufacturers, English, corruptions among, iv. 510
- Manufactures, Henry VIII.'s encouragement of, i. 5. Their tendency to remain stationary, 7
- Manwood, Mr Justice, his letter to Mildmay, x. 416 note
- Mar, Earl of, viii. 80, 127, 131, 157, 238, 320. Elected Regent, ix. 537. His popularity, x. 62. Prepares to besiege Edinburgh Castle, 63. Counsels the death of Mary Stuart, 181. His death, 184
- Mar, Earl of, son of the above, x. 454. Makes his peace with Lennox, xi. 34. His treason and escape, 441, 442
- Marano, near Trieste, iii. 497
- Marbeck, John, iv. 7
- Marcellus II., Pope, election of, v. 513
- Marchmont, M. Alençon's secretary, xi. 169
- Margaret Tudor of England, wife of James VI., iii. 347. After whose death she marries the Earl of Angus, 348. Wearies of him, 351. Seeks help from England in proclaiming her son king, 359, 360. Releases imprisoned prelates, 362. Sues for a divorce, 367 note. Marries Methuen, 374. Ill treated by Methuen, 385. Appeals to Henry VIII., 385. Divorced by Methuen, 388. Her penitent death, 389
- Margaret Plantagenet. See Pole
- Margaret, Duchess of Parma, her letter to Philip II. on affairs in England, vi. 304. Complaints of English pirates, viii. 38. Her government of the Netherlands, 427. Superseded by Alva, 430
- Margaret, Princess, of France, married to Henry of Navarre, x. 103, 125, 126
- Marienburg, v. 412
- Marillac, French ambassador, iii. 342. Visited by the Duke of Norfolk, 589; iv. 221. Is superseded, iii. 602.

de la Mark, Admiral, ix. 485. Ordered to leave the Channel, x. 97. Attacks a Spanish fleet, and takes Brille, 100.

Markham, at Terouenne, iii. 611.

Markinfield, ix. 125. At Fernihurst, 184.

Markinfield, John, brother of the above, tried but pardoned, ix. 184.

Marque, M. de la, sent from France to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 307. Goes to Scotland, 308. Captured there, 308.

Marriage of Clergy Bill, iv. 309, 383.

Marsh, George, martyr, v. 512.

de Martigues, lands at Leith, vi. 312. Wastes the country up to Glasgow, 320. Shut up in Leith, 359.

Martin, Queen's proctor, at Cranmer's trial, v. 543.

Martyr, Peter, iv. 382, 386. Refuses to encourage Hooper, 560. A commissioner, v. 106. Leaves England, 251. His wife's body exhumed, vi. 37.

Martyrs, the Catholic, ii. chap. ix. The Protestant, v. 504, 523, 559, 561; vi. 83, 85, 86.

Mary Rose, loss of the, iv. 133.

Mary Tudor, Princess, i. 112. Her legitimacy disputed, 115, 466. At New Hall, ii. 44. Is to be disinherited, 45. Her message to the King, 45. Num of Kent and, 56. To marry the Dauphin, 59. Her household broken up, 66. Offered by Charles V. to the Duke of Angoulême, 227. Submits to her father, iii. 86. To marry Don Louis, of Portugal, 89. Or the Duke of Orleans, 501, 508. Refuses the Prayer Book, iv. 407, 419. Meditates escaping to Flanders, 537. Enters London in state, 564. Will not yield about Mass, 565. The Council insist, v. 19, 21. Her three officers imprisoned, 22, 27. Receives a deputation from the Council, 24—28. Her appearance and character, 29, 30. Her popularity, 150, 151. Plan to capture her, 157. Declared illegitimate by Edward, 166. Her succession disputed, 173—175. Flies to Framlingham, 177. Proclaims herself Queen, 187. Her letter to the Lords, 187—189. Sailors and troops declare for her, 200. Proclaimed Queen, 207. Will not marry a foreigner, 214. Goes to New Hall, 219. Her entry into London with Elizabeth, 224. Will pay Edward's debts, 228. Finds the Tower a restraint, 233. Her interview with Commen-done, 261, 262. With Renard, 265, 266, 278. Her conduct to Elizabeth, 269, 270. To Courtenay, 270. Declared legitimate, 287. Questions Renard respecting Philip, 291. Decides to marry him, 292. Philip's offer accepted, 295. The Speaker's protest, 296. Her anger with Gardiner, 298. Wishes to alter the succession, 298, 299. Her affliction about Pole, 307. Urges haste, 311. Determined to put down rebellion, 313. Her message to Philip, 325. Her alarming position, 326. Her message to Wyatt, 334. Goes to the Guildhall, 336. Courtenay implicated in the Plot, 344. Advised to fly to Windsor, 349. Her severity, 356, 363, 365. Betrothed, 367. Aims at restoring the Papal authority, 368. Her anger with France, 374. Yields to Paget, 384. Throgmorton's acquittal, 391. Seeks comfort in church ceremonies, 400. Failure of her mind and health, 401. Meets Philip at Winchester, 410. Enters London, 424, 425. Believes herself enceinte, 431. Receives Pole, 444. A miracle, 446. At Whitehall (see Pole), 447, 455—459. Wishes Philip to be crowned, 470, 480, 515. Prepares for her confinement, 516. Her letter to Pole, 517. Rejoicings, processions, &c., 517, 518. The event delayed, 519. Her misery, 521. Her circular to the bishops to appease God by persecutions, 522. Fear of a supposititious child, 526. Obligated to recall Elizabeth, 527. Her interview with her, 529, 530. Her parting with Philip, 533. Learns his character, 538, 539. Her misery, 539, 572. Her arbitrary acts, 571. Who advised

- her? 540, 541. Her anxiety about the Pope's first-fruits, 567. Restores religious houses, 572. Her letters to Philip, 573. Frenzy of, 574; vi. 16. Demands refugees of Noailles, 21. Wishes to make war with France, 43. Her despair at Paul IV.'s displeasure, 47. Her circular to mayors and sheriffs, 56. Will not heed warnings about Calais, 64, 68. Sufferings of her subjects, 84. Again fancies herself enceinte, 84. Seized with fever, 91. Sends her last wishes to Elizabeth, 95. Her death, 95. Her character, 96, 100. Her probable insanity, 97. Persecuted the weak, 101. State of her revenues, 108.
- Mary of Guise, iii. 88. Marries. James V. of Scotland, 390, 391, 533. Her interview with Sadler, 557. Her subtlety, 558, 561, 568, 572, 577; iv. 184. Entertained in London, v. 40. Knox's appeal to her, vi. 222, 223. Her answer to the Protestants, 225, 226. Outlaws the preachers, 228. Marches to Perth, 231. Makes terms with the Protestants, 231. Retreats from Cowper Muir, 233, 234. Petition of the Reformers to her, 275. By them declared to have forfeited the Regency, 276. Returns to Holyrood victorious, 281. Demands an explanation from Admiral Winter, 317. His answer, 317. Her letter to Noailles, 318. Offers to negotiate with the Lords of the Congregation, 361. Watches the fight at Leith, 366. Her illness and death, 385, 386. Review of her career, 386.
- Mary Stuart, her birth, iii. 533. Treaty to marry her to Edward VI., 570. Carried to Stirling by Beton, 575. Crowned there as an infant, 579. Offered in marriage to the Dauphin, iv. 315, 320. Reported that she will marry Kildare, 317. Taken to France, 321. A Scot offers to poison her, v. 2. Her claims on the English throne, 305. Ratifies the treaty of Cambray, vi. 176. Assumes the arms of England, 177, 224. Becomes Queen of France, 242. Her energy and dexterity, 243. Her designs on the Crown of England, 285, 350. Her remarks on Queen Elizabeth and Lord Dudley, 438. Death of her husband, Francis II., 443. Offered marriage by the Earl of Arran, 445. Leaves Paris with the Cardinal of Lorraine, 446. Receives an autograph letter from Queen Elizabeth, 462. Her relations with her subjects, 462. Elizabeth's advice to her, 464. Her letters to Scotch noblemen and gentlemen, 466. Invited by both parties to return to Scotland, 470. Lord Darnley thought of for her husband, 474, 476. Refuses Leslie's proposals from the Catholic party, 500. Welcomes her brother Lord James Stuart, 500. Refuses to ratify the treaty of Edinburgh, 503. Not permitted to pass through England, 505. Her interview with Throgmorton, 508. Her personal appearance and character, 509. Contrasted with Queen Elizabeth, 510. Sails from Calais for Scotland, 511. Lands at Leith, 516. Her chief advisers, 517. Pleads for her own service in the chapel royal, 517. Her conversation with John Knox, 518, 519. Her opportunities and hopes, 521. Proposed marriage between her and Lord Darnley, 522. Her recognition demanded by Maitland, 525. Refused by Elizabeth, 526. Knox's opinion of her, 527. Desires an interview with Elizabeth, 530. Schemes for the hand of the Prince of Spain, 533, 561; vii. 52, 77, 82. Question of her recognition, vi. 561, 562. Conspiracy of Arran and Bothwell to carry her off, 563. Proposed interview between her and Elizabeth, 566, 567. Recommendations of her uncles, 604. Advised by the Duke of Guise to incline to the Earl of Huntley, 604. Her expedition to Inverness, 607. Claims to be Elizabeth's heir, 614. Elizabeth's irresolution about the Scottish succession, vii. 26. Story of Châtellar, 45. A marriage between her and Don Carlos desired by the Scotch Catholics, 52. Lord Robert Dudley proposed by Elizabeth, 53, 183, 188. Philip II. consents to her marriage with the Prince of Spain, 77, 82. Possibility of other marriages for her, 81. Conditions on which she may be recognized by Elizabeth, 85. Her quarrel with Knox, 88, 89, 95. Her personal habits, 90. Receives Randolph with Elizabeth's message, 97. Her difficulties, 181. Question of the succession again, 182. Obtains the liberation of Bothwell, 187. Begins to think seriously of Lord Darnley, 188. Her conversation with Randolph, 189. Sends Melville to London, 210, 211. Her plans for the marriage with Darnley, 215. Her friends in England, 215. Names commissioners to settle the succession, 220. Conference at Berwick, 226. Final demands of the commissioners, 229. She requests the return of Lord Darnley, 229. Cecil's answer to Maitland and Murray, 231, 232. Shakes off Maitland, 234. David Rizzio in favour with her, 234. Affects a willingness to marry Leicester, 234, 235. Darnley introduced to her, 244. Quarrels about the restoration of the Mass, 246. Postponement of the settlement of the succession, 249. Increasing favour shown to Darnley, 263. Announces her intended marriage with Darnley to Elizabeth and Philip, 266, 268. Her demonstrations of affection during Darnley's illness, 271. Persists with the Darnley marriage, 274. Her conversation with Throgmorton, 276. Apparent change in her character, 279, 302. Probable consequences of the marriage, 282. Strength of her position, 294. Her friends in England, 295. Her letter to Elizabeth, 297. Endeavours to entrap Murray, 300. Her discussion with Randolph, 307. Her marriage with Darnley, 311. Her answers to Tamworth, 314. Takes the field against her brother, 318, 337. Her favour to Bothwell, 334. Throgmorton's letter to her, 357. Injurious influence of Rizzio over her, 359, 366. Differences between her and her husband, 370. Her intimacy with Rizzio, 372. Accused by Darnley of unfaithfulness, 375, 376. Conspiracy to murder Rizzio, 377. Expels Randolph from Scotland, 379. Murder of Rizzio, 386. Gains over Darnley, 395—398. Escapes to Dunbar, 401. Returns to Edinburgh, 404. Her increasing popularity in England, 407. Her prospects, 410. Her part taken by Elizabeth, 413. Demands the surrender of the fugitive lords, 416. Her friends in England, 421, 430. Elizabeth's remonstrances, 422. Birth of her son James, 424. Her affection for Bothwell, 436. Sends her husband away from her, 438. Darnley's intended flight to England, 441. She and Darnley before the Council, 442. Proposed bond between the two Queens, 481. She goes to Jedburgh, 488. Her illness, 489. Differences with Darnley, 490. On the English border, 491. At Craigmillar, 492. Proposal for a divorce, 493. Bond for Darnley's destruction, 496. His illness, 499. Mary's visit to him, 502. Her letter to Bothwell, 508. Bothwell's answer, 512. Her husband's murder, 519—521. Her receipt of the news, viii. 75—77. Goes to Lord Seton, 81. Refuses to assemble the nobility, 86. Believed to have been a party to the murder, 89. Elizabeth's letter to her, 96. Her reception of Elizabeth's messenger, 97. Promises Elizabeth that Bothwell shall be put on his trial, 98. Conspiracy against her and Bothwell, 110. His trial and acquittal, 125. She goes to Stirling, 136. Her letters to Bothwell, 136, 138. Her visit to the Prince, 141. Seized by Bothwell and carried to Dunbar, 140—142. Combination of the lords to depose her, 145. Warned against Bothwell, 146. But marries him, 153. Her profound attachment to him, 154 note. Sends the Bishop of Dunblane to Paris, 158, 159. With Bothwell at Northwick, 161. Escapes in disguise, 166. With Bothwell advances on Edinburgh, 167. Met by the confederate lords at Carberry Hill, 171. Taken prisoner into Edinburgh, 175, 176. Refuses to abandon Bothwell, 179. Proposal to kill her, 180. Imprisoned in Lochleven Castle, 182. Queen Elizabeth's message to her, 191—196. Her danger, 209. Her execution advised, 211. Her liberation demanded by Throgmorton, 224. Determination to bring her to trial, 225. Signs her abdication, 227, 228. Her prison, 246. Her interview with Murray, 248. A party for her created by the Hamiltons, 289. The proposed Arbroath marriage, 290, 320, 322. Reaction in her favour, 293. Declaratory Act of Parliament against her, 299, 300. Plans for her escape, 307. Leaves Lochleven, 309. At Hamilton, 311. The gathering there, 312. Her letter to the Cardinal of Lorraine, 313. Sends Beton to Paris, and writes to Elizabeth, 314. Elizabeth's reply, 317. Wishes to escape to Dumbarton with Lord Fleming, 322. Defeated at Langside, 324. Her flight to the Solway, 327, 328. Her doubts as to her future course, 328, 329. Crosses into England, 332. Sends a letter to Elizabeth, 333. Her reception in Cumberland, 333. Detained at Carlisle Castle, 340. Knowles's impression of her character, 343—345. Sends Herries and Fleming to London, 345. Elizabeth declines to see her, 349, 350. Replenishment of her wardrobe, 353. Threatened investigation of the Darnley murder, 360, 382. Moved to Bolton Castle, 368, 370. Professes conformity, 372. Her brother's letter to her, 373. Her religious conferences with Knowles, 374. Her letter to the Queen of Spain, 379 note. Proposal to marry her to the Duke of Norfolk, 387, 445. Her friends, 389. Opening of the commission at York, 392. Plan of marrying her to George Carey, 402, 447. The commission transferred to London, 406. Her suitors, 447. Resumption of the Darnley inquiry, 453. Her endeavours to stifle it, 453. Accusations of Murray and Lennox, 454, 456. Her request to appear in her own defence, 460. Production of the Casket letters before the commissioners, 463. Pronounced genuine by the lords, 464. Advised by Elizabeth to confirm her abdication, 467. Her friends meditate insurrection, 490. Refuses to repeat her abdication, 498. Receives a message from Elizabeth, 501. Her false statement to her friends in Scotland, 501. Her high tone, 506. Consents to answer the charges, 506, 507. Close of the inquiry, 510, 511. Letter from Elizabeth, 514. General remarks on the evidence against her, 516. Private opinion of the Bishop of Ross, 523. How regarded in 1569, ix. 5. Don John of Austria suggested for her, 11. Her story of the proposed murder of King Philip, 11. His unwilling adoption of her cause, 12. Conflicting schemes in her favour, 19. The proposed marriage with Norfolk, 21, 47, 52, 56. Elizabeth's arrangement with the Regent Murray, 33. Placed in charge of Lord Shrewsbury, 33. Removed to Wingfield, 40. Her vexation at the course of events in Scotland, 47. Three alternatives offered for her consideration, 52—54. Proposals for her restoration, 53. Her pretended illness, 54. Cecil's questions to be submitted to her, 56. Her answer about the Norfolk marriage, 58. Elizabeth determines to restore her, 64. The Lords of Scotland refuse to receive her, 66. Vote of the English Council in favour of her succession, 77. Intention of the Catholic lords to carry her off, 77, 82. Taken to Tutbury in Lord Huntingdon's custody, 86. Proposed to be returned into Murray's hands, 86. Order for the seizure of her papers, 90. Restored to Shrewsbury's charge, 98. Attempt of Norton to carry her off, 109. Preparations of the Lords, 130, 136. Taken to Coventry, 138. Plans for her escape, 232, 233. Besieges the Catholic Powers with cries for assistance, 270. Divisions among the Catholics in England as to her disposal, 271. At Chatsworth, 292. Her restoration again desired by Elizabeth, 332. The conditions, 326, 327. Cecil sent down to her, 333. Spirit in which she received him, 350. Commission in London for her restoration, 374, 375. Her position and prospects described by the Bishop of Ross, 386. Determined to force the Duke of Norfolk to a resolution, 391. Her petition to Philip through Don Guerau, 395—399. Her message to the Pope, 400 note. Her anomalous position, 401. Political reasons in favour of her succession to the throne of England, 422, 423. Her projects for escaping, 426 note. Examined as to her correspondence through Ridolfi, 466. Her servants reduced, x. 11. Committed to close imprisonment, 11. Her share in the Darnley murder admitted by the Bishop of Ross, 15, 16. Publication of Buchanan's 'Detectio,' 40. Her letter to Elizabeth to save Norfolk's life, 56. Elizabeth's answer, 57. Her reply, 60—62. Her death suggested, 76, 77. Not mentioned in the treaty between England and France, 81. Proposed Bill of Attainder against her, 83. Demand of the Archbishops and Bishops of England for her death, 85. Act for cutting her off from the succession, 93, 94. Remains at Sheffield contemptuous and defiant, 115. Her danger, 146. Receives a desponding letter from Maitland, 176. Her execution advised by the Earl of Mar, 181. Her cause extinguished in Scotland, 210. Her course of life, 396, 397. Plots with Lady Lennox and Lady Shrewsbury, 399. Her expectations from the Alençon marriage, 489. Shrewsbury ordered to look sharply after her, xi. 13. Her hatred of Morton, 21. Invites Philip to take action in Scotland, 35. Proposes to associate her son with herself on the throne, 35, 231. Sends Douglas to France, 230. Elizabeth's letter to her, 235. Elizabeth attempts to play her off against her son, 237. Her interview with Beale, 238. Acquainted with Lennox's plot, 244, 245. Her intrigues, 246. Proposed treaty with Elizabeth, 246. In despair at Lennox's poltroonery, 262. Writes to Mendoza on her prospects, 263. Condition of her party, 264. Appeals to Elizabeth, 285. Proposed alliance with France and England, 289, 290. Letter to Mendoza, 303. Entreats him not to leave England, 303. Consults Mendoza—his advice, 318—321. James's estimate of her, 324. Beale again sent to, 331, 372. Elizabeth rejects her proposals, 334, 336. Her joy at the assassination of the Prince of Orange, 344. Her complicity in the Throgmorton conspiracy, 401. Her animosity against Lindsay, 441. Her instructions to James, 441. Mission of M. Mason, 448. Interview with Wade, 448—451. Re-opening of treaty with, 448. Her proud terms, 453. The treaty dropped, 454. Her hold over her son, 466. Elizabeth's treatment of her, 498. Placed temporarily under the care of Sir R. Sadler, 503. Plots against Elizabeth, 505. Letter of an Italian Jesuit, 508. Her desperate position, 509. Negotiations for her release, 520—528. Favourable disposition of Elizabeth's Council towards her, 524. Removed to Tutbury Castle, 529. Her distress, 530. Endeavours to escape from Tutbury, 572. Curses Grey and her son, 573. Her letter to Elizabeth, 574. And reply, 574. Tries her enchantments on Paulet, 576. La Rue's advice to her, 578. Is kept under strict surveillance, xii. 107. Plot of Walsingham, 108 et seq. Corresponds with Mauvissière, 112. Removed to Chartley, 114. Her correspondence with Morgan, 115. Babington's plot, 124. Her life at Chartley, 132. Learns of the league between Elizabeth and James, 133. Weary of her keeper Paulet, 139. Her correspondence by ciphers, 140. Nau and Curle her secretaries, 140. Corresponds with Babington, 142—146. Justification of her conduct, 147. Discovery of the plot,

155. Sir A. Paulet's plan to arrest her, 159. Arrested and removed to Fixall, 160. Conveyed back to Chartley, 161. Baptizes Barbara Mowbray's child, 162. Commission issued against her, 169, 180. Removed to Potheringay, 169. Her will disinheriting her son, 177. Letter respecting his disinheritance, 178 note. Her tone of defiance and innocence, 183. Elizabeth's letter to her, 183, 184. Refuses to stand her trial, but at last acquiesces, 184—188. Cecil's interview with her, 185. The members of the Commission, 188. Her presence before the Commissioners and defence, 189. Denies her complicity in Babington's plot, 190. Burghley replies to her defence, and his charges against her, 193. Questions Paulet as to her judges, 195. Found guilty and declared incapable of succeeding to the crown, 196. Parliament summoned, 196. The Queen's speech, 200. Interference of James and France, 203. Intercession of Henry III. on her behalf, 215. And of James, 217. Her sentence conveyed to her by Buckhurst and Beale, 219. Refuses to confess her crime, 221. Her interview with Paulet, 221. Refuses the assistance of an Anglican divine, 223. Prepares for death, 223, 224. Writes to the Pope, 224. Her character and Elizabeth's contrasted, 225. Elizabeth signs the warrant for her execution, 236. Prepares for her end, 247, 248. Distributes presents, 247. Her last moments, 249. Her death, 255. Her character, 257, 258
- Mary, Regent of the Netherlands, sister of Charles V., ii. 2. Refuses to forbid the publication of the Papal censures on Henry VIII., 79. Her letter respecting Henry's marriage to Jane Seymour, 403 note. Curious letter to her from England, 572 note. Her conversations with Wriothesley, 117, 158
- Mason, M., visits Mary Stuart, xi. 448
- Mason, Sir John, ambassador to France, quoted, iv. 197, 499, 542, 543; v. 195. Communicates with Renard, 206. His letter on church property, 463. On Calais, vi. 58. Advocates a Spanish policy, 355 note. In favour of peace with France, vii. 168, 169 note
- Masque at Greenwich described, i. 72
- Mass restored in England, v. 289. At Westminster Abbey, 454. Put down in the Lowlands of Scotland, vi. 234. Abolished by the Scotch Reformers, 409. 'Massmongers' arrested, 486 and note. Laws against Mass more strictly enforced, 576. Arrest and punishment of Catholics for attending Mass, viii. 274
- Masters, Richard, i. 314
- Mather, x. 28. Undertakes to kill Burghley, 30. Sent to the Tower, 31. Executed, 52
- Matthias, Archduke, invited to the Netherlands, x. 419
- Maurevert shoots Coligny, x. 128
- Maurice, Duke of Saxe, iv. 95, 536. Besieges Magdeburg, 537, 573. Applies in vain to England for aid, v. 40. Deceives Charles V., 63. Forms an alliance with France, 65. Demands votes for Lutherans at the Council of Trent, 66. Raises the siege of Magdeburg, 67. Moves on Augsburg and the Tyrol, 69. Dictates the peace of Passau, 70
- de Mauvissière, Castelnau, vii. 328, 334. French ambassador, x. 370, xi. 221, 222—225. His character of Elizabeth, 480. Elizabeth sends for him, 485. Presses the Tripartite alliance, 548
- Maximilian II., Emperor of Germany, vii. 208. The Garter sent to him, viii. 266
- Maxwell, Lord, iii. 531, 554, 566. His promise to Henry VIII., 569, 583; iv. 26
- Mayne, Cuthbert, his execution, xi. 54 note
- Maynooth, siege of, ii. 191
- Meat, price of, in the 16th century, i. 22
- Meath, condition of the Established Church in, x. 537
- Mecklenburgh, Duke of, v. 67, 69
- Mechlin opens its gates to the Prince of Orange, x. 122. Sacked by Alva's troops, 163

Medhurst, state of the clergy of, ix.

117 note

de Medici, Catherine. See Catherine de Medici

Medina Celi, Duke of, ix. 505. His loss off Flushing, x. 103

Medina Sidonia, Duke of, succeeds Santa Cruz, as Admiral of the Spanish fleet, xii. 327. Sails with the Armada from Lisbon, 387. Unequal to his task, 391. Arrives at Plymouth, 394. Engages the English, 394, 395. Offers battle to Howard off Portland, 399—405. Determines to make his way to Parma, 405. Pursued by Howard, 406. Driven from his anchorage by the fireships, 412—414. Encounters Drake, and his fleet defeated, 417. Summons Miguel de Oquendo for advice, 424. Calls a council of war, 424. Holds a council of inquiry and punishes his officers for cowardice, 438. Distress of his fleet, 439, 440. Sails round Ireland, 441, 443. His servants, landing at Tralee, put to the sword, 444. Returns to Spain, 460

Melancthon, Philip, his protest to Henry VIII. on the Six Articles, iii. 213—215. Proposal for a Protestant synod, v. 105

Melendez, Pedro, Spanish Admiral, viii. 20

Melrose, tombs of the Douglasses at, iv. 106

Melton, Nicholas, ii. 214

Melville, Andrew, xi. 260. At Mary Stuart's execution, xii. 250

Melville, James, kills Beton, iv. 182. On the Bishop of Valence, v. 74 note

Melville, Sir James, character and story of, vii. 209. Employed on secret service by the Queen of Scots, 210. His interview with Queen Elizabeth, 211. His advice to Mary Stuart, 356. Announces the birth of James, 428. Returns to Scotland, 436. On the Queen of Scots' proposed marriage to Bothwell, viii. 106, 107. Made prisoner, 142. Released, 143. At Holyrood, 152

Melville, Sir Robert, vii. 335, 337. In London, 412. The Queen of Scots' letter to him, 430. Chosen to convey the tidings of Darnley's death to Elizabeth, viii. 82. His arrival, 91. Announces Mary's marriage with Bothwell to Elizabeth, 191. Goes to the Queen at Lochleven, 226. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, 231. In Edinburgh Castle, x. 196, 208, 209. His interview with Elizabeth on Mary's behalf, xi. 217 de Mendoza, Don Bernardino, comes to England, x. 341, 394, 429. Notice of him, 429. His instructions, 429. Interviews with Elizabeth, 431—433, 483; xi. 58. Banker for the Catholic prisoners, 95. On Scotch affairs, 95, 96. On the persecution of the Catholics, 112. Refused an audience by the Queen, 157. Complaints of an outrage on his house, 180, 181. His intrigues, 246 et seq. His difficulties with the Jesuits, 252. Mary Stuart's letters to him, 263, 303, 318. Asks to be recalled, 303. Advises Mary Stuart to temporize, 319. Ordered to leave England, 410. Leaves, 414. How treated by Henry III. of France, 551. Blames the French government, xii. 122. Corresponds with Mary Queen of Scots, 123 note. Consulted by Ballard, 128. Prevails on Philip to invade England, 195. Mary's present to him, 247 de Mendoza, Diego, sent to England, iii. 84. Defends the German bishops' petition, iv. 332. Sent to meet Pole, v. 280. Accompanies Philip to England, 404 de Mendoza, Don Pedro, lands at Clare Island, and is killed, xii. 449

Mercers' Chapel, persecuting committee sit at the, iii. 216

Merchants, Fellowship of London, v. 130. Their grievances, 131

Mercuriano, Everard, General of the Jesuits, xi. 44

Metcalf, Leonard, tried, ix. 184

Meteren, on Anne Boleyn's trial, ii. 390

Methuen, Lord, iii. 360—362, 364, 385

Methuen, Lord, grandson of the above, thought of for a husband for Mary Stuart, viii. 304

Metz, siege of, v. 143. The failure

- of Charles V. at, 411; vi. 135
 Mewtas, Sir Peter, vi. 528
 Michele, Venetian ambassador, v. 570; vi. 78
 Middleburg, x. 148
 Middlemore, Mr. viii. 347, 355
 Milan, quarrel about the city of, revived by Francis I. and Charles V., iii. 452
 Milan, Christina, Duchess of. See Christina
 Mildmay, Sir Walter, vi. 82; viii. 222, 232; ix. 333; xi. 79; xii. 184, 188
 Military organization of society in the feudal system, i. 11. Every Englishman trained to be a soldier, 62. Statute of Winchester on, 63. Archery enjoined, 63. The statute re-enacted with more stringent provisions, 65. Social advantages of military training, 68. Changes in the art of war in the reign of Elizabeth, vi. 109
 Milne, Walter, burnt, vi. 223.
 Moddis, Master Edmund, his conversation with Henry VIII., i. 104
 Mohuns Ottery, v. 322
 Moigne, Thomas, iii. 27
 de la Mole, M., x. 114
 Monarchy, hereditary, viii. 420. Evils of, 420, 421.
 Monasteries, their neglect of their duties to the poor, i. 76—101. Charges against, ii. 302. Visitation of Henry VIII.'s commissioners to, 315. Their delinquencies, 305—322. Crimes in the Abbey of St Alban's, 305. Second visitation by Archbishop Warham, 309. Iniquities of Sion, 316. Of Maiden Bradley, 317. Of Langden, 318. Lichfield, 319. Fountains Abbey, 320. Norton, scene at, 322. Fordham, scene at, 324. New commissioners for their regulation, 327. Their horrible state described in the 'Black Book,' 332. Exceptions to, 333. Act of dissolution, 338. First suppression of, 341. Favourable testimony of Aske as to the superiors of some, 502. Discontent in the North at the suppression, 509, 568. Insulting conduct of the commissioners, 510, 511. Abbot of Stratford, iii. 57. Abbot of Woburn, 57. Lands sold, 71. Mutinous condition of the unsuppressed monasteries, 97. Voluntary surrender of the friars of St Francis, Stamford, and St Andrew's, 98. Demolition of shrines (see Shrines), 112. Final dissolution of, 205. Names of new owners of lands of, 206. Abbots of Colchester, Reading, and Glastonbury executed, 239—247. The monasteries refounded by Mary again dissolved, vi. 196. The abbeys in Stirling destroyed, 234. Revenues of Scotch abbeys offered to the Crown, 235 de Moncada, Don Hugo, xii. 380, 402. His death, 415
 Moncontour, battle of, ix. 114
 Monluc, John de, Bishop of Valence, v. 74; vi. 337, 342, 361
 Mons taken by Count Louis, x. 102. Besieged by Alva, 107. Capitulates, 158
 Mons Meg, iv. 35
 Monstreuil, or Mottreul, siege of, iv. 52, 61. Raised, 76
 Mont, or Mount, Christopher, his mission to the Lutherans, ii. 293; iv. 88—96, 169
 Montague, Sir A., at Bruges, viii. 50
 Montague, Sir Edward, Lord Justice, iv. 472. At Greenwich, v. 163—165. Sent to the Tower, 221. Fined and released, 250
 Montague, Lord. See Pole
 Montague, Anthony, second Lord, vi. 122, 320, 332; xii. 188
 Montaigne, x. 41 note
 Montbrissin, des Adrets' treatment of the Catholics of, vi. 578 del Monte, Cardinal, iv. 332, 455. Elected Pope, 532. See Julius III.
 Montgomery, Count, de Lorge, lands in Scotland, iv. 126, 145. Causes the death of Henry II. of France, vi. 242. Takes reinforcements to the Flemings, x. 102. Escapes from St Bartholomew, 137
 Montgomery, Robert, made Bishop of Glasgow, xi. 256. Excommunicated and turned out of the cathedral church, 257. Demonstration against him, 262
 Montigny, Count, viii. 50. Opposes Spanish policy, 428

- Montmorency, Constable of France, iii. 501, 588; iv. 542. Answers Northampton, v. 3. Enters the Low Countries, 412. At St Quentin, vi. 51. At the Congress of Cambray, 170. In London, 211. At the head of the Gallican party, 445. Opposes the Huguenots, 465. Before Rouen, 584. Endeavours to make peace, 597. Made prisoner at Dreux, 603. Joins Condé against the English, vii. 66. At Havre, 69. Killed, viii. 418
- Montmorency, son of the above, comes to England, x. 81. Offers the Duc d'Alençon to Elizabeth, 81
- Montreuil, Madame de, iii. 114
- Mook Heath, battle of, x. 337
- Moor Park, treaty of, iii. 448, 451
- Mordaunt, Lord, v. 193
- More, Sir Thomas, his learning and accomplishments, i. 47. Examined by the Solicitor-General, 110. Made Lord Chancellor, 166, 550. His horror of heresy, 172. His speech in Parliament, 204. Appeal to Catherine to withdraw, 334. Resigns the seals, 360. His disregard of law, 552. His cruelty, 559, 562. Guilty of misprision of treason about the Nun of Kent, ii. 90. Explains and is pardoned, 91, 92. Required to swear to the Act of Succession, and refuses, 112, 113. Leaves Chelsea, 112. Sent to the Tower, 118. How treated there, 259. Will not submit to the Act of Supremacy, 262. Brought to trial, 267, 268. The indictment, 269. Condemned, 271. His last moments, and execution, 275, 276
- More, Mr, iii. 258, 259
- More. See Moor Park
- Moreman, Dr, iv. 418
- Moret, ambassador from Savoy, vii. 233
- Morgan, Thomas, his history, xi. 360 note. His plot, 416. His arrest demanded, 556, 559, 560. How estimated by Catholics, 557. Corresponds with Mary Stuart, xii. 120, 136. Betrayed, 120. Communicates Ballard's plot to Mary, 131
- Morgan, Henry, Bishop of St David's, v. 512
- Morgan, Captain, goes with volunteers to the Netherlands, x. 106
- Moriarty, Donell Macdonell, murders the Earl of Desmond, x. 614
- Morley, Lord, iv. 497; ix. 295, 440; x. 34; xi. 393
- Morone, Cardinal, iv. 531, v. 417—421
- Mortmain Act, evaded, i. 350. Its repeal demanded by the clergy, v. 464
- Morton, Cardinal, visits St Alban's, ii. 304
- Morton, Dr, a priest, ix. 113, 118
- Morton, James Douglas, Earl of, brings the Arran petition to London, vi. 441. Joins the conspiracy to murder Rizzio, vii. 378. His flight, 404. His account of the murder, 405. Elizabeth's order to him, 417. Pardoned, 493, 498. Refuses to join Bothwell, 500. Chosen to manage a conspiracy against Mary Stuart, viii. 110. Accepts Bothwell's challenge, 172. At Carberry Hill, 174. Joins the Regent at Langside, 320. Refuses the Earl of Sussex's offers, ix. 276. With the English army, 282. In London on the proposed restoration of Mary, 373, 374. His objections, 376, 378. His character, x. 184. Elected Regent, 189. His correspondence with Queen Elizabeth, 404. Treatment he receives at her hands, 446. Confederacy to overthrow him, 449. Resigns the Regency, 451. Recovers power, 454; xi. 2. Suspected, 3. In danger, 8. Tempted by Elizabeth, 13. Arrested and sent to Dumbarton, 18—20, 25. Charged with the murder of Darnley, 19. Elizabeth's interference, 22 et seq. Found guilty, 37. His last morning, 37, 38. His execution, 39—42
- Mortuary Act curtailed, i. 244
- Morvillier, defends Rouen against d'Aumale, vi. 577, 579. Resigns his command, 579
- la Mothe Fénelon, French ambassador, viii. 457. On the Darnley inquiry, 458. On toleration, 473. On Winter's expedition, ix. 31. Offers England peace or war, 32.

- Advises peace with England, 45.
His conversations with the Queen, 155, 362; x. 151. Recalled, 370. Requests permission to go to Edinburgh, xi. 288. His conduct at Elizabeth's Court, 288. His advice respecting the custody of Mary, 289. His secret instructions known to Cobham, 290. Refuses to interfere in the proposed marriage with Alençon, 292. Permitted to go to Edinburgh, 293. Meets Lennox at Topcliff, 297.
- Mottreul. See Monstreuil
- Mount. See Mont
- Mountain, Thomas, with Gardiner, v. 278
- Mountjoy, Lord, his interview with Queen Catherine, i. 470
- Mount's Bay, action in, iii. 67
- Mowbray, Barbara, xii. 162. At Mary's execution, 251, 255
- Moyle, iii. 240, 419
- Moyle, Sir Thomas, Speaker of the House of Commons, iii. 487
- Muhlberg, battle of, iv. 280
- Munster, desolation of, vii. 164, 165. Government of, 539, 540. The lands of the Earl of Desmond in, surrendered, x. 229. Proposal to partition Munster among a party of English, 230. Sir John Perrot's rule, 285—293. Revolt, 518. Sir W. Drury president, 540. His acts, 541. Desolation, 598, 603, 615
- Murray, Bishop of, viii. 302
- Murray, Earl of, iii. 363
- Murray, Lord James Stuart, Earl of. See Stuart, Lord James
- Murray, James, his placards against Bothwell, viii. 86, 104, 115
- Murray of Tullibardine, challenges Bothwell, viii. 126, 172. His answer to Maitland, 237
- Musgrave, Sir William, ii. 589
- Musselburgh, battle of. See Pinkie Cleugh
- NAMUR, defeat of the French by Charles V. at, v. 413
- Nangle, Dr, iii. 425
- Nassau, Count de, ii. 227
- Nassau, Counts of. See Henry; Louis; William of Nassau
- Nau, M., Mary Stuart's secretary, xi. 456, 503, 520—525; xii. 115, 140, 142 note, 179. Arrested, 160. Examined, 170
- Navarre, Antony Bourbon, King of, his letter to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 176. In prison, 436. Liberated, 443. Declines the Regency, and becomes Lieutenant-General, 446. Cecil's advice to him, 459. Introduces Calvinism into the Chapel Royal, 465. His apostasy, 535, 538. At the siege of Rouen, 584. Killed there, 594
- Navarre, Queen of, her friendliness to England, iii. 287. On Catherine Howard, 474, 589. Her intrigues at Paris, iv. 163
- Navarre. See Henry IV.
- Navas, Marquis de la, v. 402
- Navy, state of the, iii. 62—64; iv. 130. Act for the maintenance of the navy, vii. 44. Condition of, in 1559, 167. First expansion of the navy, viii. 6. Piracy of English men-of-war, 38. State of the fleet at the time of the Armada, xii. 358—362. Commission appointed to examine, 358. Elizabeth's parsimony, 359. History of the Bonaventura, 359. Cost of building, 360. Wages of the seamen, 360. Ship's allowance, 360. Addition of five new ships, 361. Their build, 362. Number and owners of the ships of war and privateers, 362, 371. See Drake; Hawkins; Howard of Effingham
- Naw, Master, vii. 489
- Naworth Castle, ix. 211, 213
- Neames, Mrs, of Woodnesborough, ix. 341 note
- Netherlands, evils of Spanish rule in the, viii. 420. State of the, 421—429. The Duke of Alva's administration, 430, 431, 432. In difficulties for money to pay the troops, 480. General insurrection against the Spanish, x. 101. Insurgents helped by the English, 101, 105. Slowness of Alva's conquests, 331. Offers of peace from Spain, 335. The States evacuated by the Spaniards, 412. The States' army destroyed at Gemblours, 426. See Dudley; Norris; William Prince of Orange
- Neully, M. de, iv. 59
- Neville, Lord Latimer, ii. 57, 547

- Neville, Sir Christofer, ix. 126
 Neville, Sir Cuthbert, ix. 126
 Neville, Edmund, in Parry's plot, xi. 540. Betrays Parry, 541
 Neville, Sir Edward, sent to the Tower, iii. 139, 140. Tried and executed, 146, 147
 Neville, George, Archbishop of York, his installation feast, i. 46 note
 Neville, Sir George, ii. 57, 72
 Neville, Sir Henry, ix. 309. One of Mary Stuart's keepers, xi. 448
 Neville, Sir John, executed, iii. 457
 Neville, Sir Robert, iii. 237
 Neville, Sir William, his confession, ii. 70. Consults Jones, the Oxford conjuror, 70, 73
 Neville, Charles, Earl of Westmoreland, ii. 378; iii. 15; v. 466; vi. 7, 45, 338, 556; vii. 21. Prepares to rebel, ix. 70. With the rebel lords at Topcliff, 112, 113. Confers with Lord Sussex, 120. Refuses to obey the Queen's summons, 123. Takes Barncastle, 146. Goes to Raby, 147. Escapes to the Border, 153. Constable employed to entrap him, 186—189. To be seized, 250. Act of attainder against him, 441. Refused help from King Philip, x. 34, 37. His offers to Alva, 172 note. Plot to entrap him, 350. With Don John of Austria, 413. Receives a commission from the Pope, xi. 76
 Newfoundland fleet, proposal to destroy it, x. 422
 Nice, congress at, of 1538, iii. 94. Taken with Villa Franca, by Barbarossa, 613
 Nicholls, Thomas, his complaint, viii. 21
 Nigry, M. de, v. 310
 Noailles, Antoine de, French ambassador to England, v. 148. At Greenwich with Northumberland, 155, 164. Promises help in Calais, 195. Congratulates the Council on Mary's accession, 215. Opposes the Spanish marriage, 272. With Elizabeth, 275. Conspires for her flight with Courtenay, 301. Opposes the Queen's marriage treaty, 315. His despatches intercepted, 329. His opinion of Wyatt's insurrection, 338. His intercepted letter deciphered, 344. The Queen's demand, 374. With Philip, 427. Believes Mary's assurances, 446. Interview with Gardiner, 563. His instructions respecting the conspirators, vi. 10. Goes to Paris, 42. His complaints of English interference in Scotland, 255, 261. Threatened by Queen Elizabeth, 277. Superseded by de Sèvre, 325. Sent on a mission to the Scotch Estates, 469, 470
 Nonconformists persecuted by Elizabeth and Whitgift, xi. 493; xii. 496
 Norfolk, Duchess of (the mad Duchess), iii. 303; iv. 220
 Norfolk, Duke of. See Howard
 Normandy, exploits of London apprentices in, i. 20
 Norris, Sir Henry, sent to the Tower, ii. 362. Anne Boleyn's talk of him, 365. His trial, 386. And execution, 393
 Norris, Sir H., English minister at Paris, viii. 160. His warnings of danger, ix. 232, 233
 Norris, Sir John, in the Netherlands, x. 431. Gains the battle of Rymenant, 462. Murders women and children at Rathlin, 528. Rebuked by Queen Elizabeth, xii. 26. Relieves Grave, 81
 North, Lord, v. 466. His letter to the Bishop of Ely, x. 321 note
 Northampton, the Church at, in 1570, ix. 343
 Northampton, Marquis of. See Parr
 Northumberland, Earl of. See Percy, Henry; Thomas
 Northumberland, Anne, Countess of, ix. 124, 150, 153; x. 35, 68, 342
 Northumberland, Duke of. See Dudley
 Northumberland, Duchess of, v. 187, 191. Intercedes for her sons, 221
 Norton, Christopher, ix. 108. His attempt to carry off the Queen of Scots, 109. Dismissed from the guard, 110. Executed, 185
 Norton, Francis, ix. 119
 Norton, Richard, ix. 108, 118, 210. At Raby, 125. At Durham, 126
 Norton Abbey, scene at, with the commissioners, ii. 322
 Norwich, Bishop of, his letter to Cromwell on burning Testaments,

- iii. 186. Cathedral service at, in 1570, ix. 342
- la Noue, x. 102, 373, 377
- Nowell, Dr Alexander, v. 283. His sermon on the 'caged wolves,' vii. 30. Author of the English Church Catechism, 30 note, 100 note. His sermon before the Queen, 256
- Nun of Kent, Elizabeth Barton, i. 312. Clairvoyance of, 314. Her training, 317, 318. Her miracles, 319. Her book of oracles, 320, 324, 360. Confers with angels, 396. Her conspiracy, ii. 43. Her prophecies, 51. And interpretations, 53. She and five monks arrested, 55. Confession of a conspiracy, 55. Convicted, 65. Bill of attainder against her and her accomplices, 90. Her last words and execution, 95, 96
- Nunnery of Lichfield, ii. 319
- Nuremberg, Diet at, iii. 604
- OATH of freemen and villains under the feudal system, i. 18, 19
- O'Brien, Corney, of Thomond, letter of, to Charles V., ii. 170
- O'Brien, Prince of Thomond, iii. 408, 412
- O'Brien of Inchiquin, seeks aid from France and Spain, vii. 118
- Observants, i. 368. Dissolution of their convent at Greenwich, 374
- O'Carroll, iii. 426
- Ochin, Bernard, iv. 382
- O'Connor, his rebellion, ii. 162; iii. 434, 439
- O'Donnell, iii. 434
- O'Donnell, the Callogh, vii. 112. Promised an earldom, 115. He and his wife taken by Shan O'Neil, 124. Refuses allegiance to O'Neil, 142. War made upon his clan by O'Neil, 142. Restored, 564. Revenges himself on O'Neil, 570. His death, 571
- O'Donnell, Con, son of the Callogh, war made upon him by O'Neil, vii. 142. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, 146. Sussex's character of him, 146 note. Encouraged to hold out, 149
- O'Donnell, Hugh, succeeds as Callogh, vii. 571. Swears allegiance to England, 571
- O'Donnells, their rivalry with the O'Neils, vii. 112, 124, 142, 575
- Offley, Sir Thomas, v. 167
- Ogle, Lord, killed, iv. 108
- Oglethorpe, Owen, Bishop of Carlisle, crowns Elizabeth, vi. 147. At her first Parliament, 150
- Oldcastle, Sir John, Lord Cobham, his insurrection and death, i. 501
- Oliphant, Lord, iii. 531
- Olivarez, Count, Spanish ambassador at Rome, xii. 44—50, 278, 467
- O'Malley, Granny, x. 532 and note, 561
- O'More, Kedagh, iii. 438
- Omnibow, Father, a Venetian, i. 264
- O'Neil, Con, vii. 111. Becomes Earl of Tyrone, 112. His children, 112. Driven out by his son, and dies, 113
- O'Neil, Shan, elected chief by tanistry, vii. 114. Marries an O'Donnell, but ill-treats her, 114, 115. Marries M'Connell's daughter, 116. His schemes for the sovereignty of Ulster, 116. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, 120. Preparations of the English government to put him down, 122. Carries off the Countess of Argyle and her husband, 124. His skirmish with the English at Armagh, 125. Surprises the English, 126, 127. Plot of Lord Sussex to assassinate him, 132, 133. Consents to go to England, 134, 135. Appears at Court, 136. Detained in England, 138, 139. His offers to the Queen, 138. Agreement between him and the Queen, 141. His return to Ireland, 142. Makes war on the O'Donnells, 142. Sussex's further attempts against him, 142—145. Again rebels, 145. Crushes the Ulster chiefs, 146. His treatment of the Countess, 148. Lord Sussex's campaign against him, 150. Attempt to poison him, 156. Shan's revenge, 159. Demands Sussex's sister for his wife, 159. Liberates the Callogh, 159. His triumph, 160. His course of life, 160. His friendship with Stukely, 526. Defeats the Scots, 533. Becomes sovereign of Ulster, 533. Invades Connaught, 534. His alliance with Argyle, 541. Prepares for war, 550. Seeks help from

- France, 551. Attacks Dundalk, 559. Defeated by Randolph, 569. Attacked by Sidney and the Scots, 570. Sues for pardon and peace, 571. Struggles to recover himself, 573. His final defeat and death, 575—578.
- O'Neil, Sir Phelim (Sir Brian Mac-Phelim), x. 518, 519, 522. Imprisoned with his wife, 523. Executed, 523
- O'Neil, Tirlagh Lenogh, murders the young Baron of Dungarvan, vii. 140. Opposes Shan O'Neil, 149. Becomes chief of the O'Neils, x. 223. Disloyal. 244. Wounded, 248. Recovers and renews his work, 280, 297. His activity, 518. Submits, 519, 520, 522. Corresponds with Spain, 549
- Oquendo, Miguel de, Spanish commander in the Armada, xii. 380, 396, 398, 401, 403, 417, 424. His death, 461
- Orange, town of, cruelties inflicted on the Huguenots at, vi. 577, 578
- Orange, Prince of. See William of Nassau
- Orkney, Duke of. See Bothwell
- Orleans, Bishop of, at Cambray, vi. 170
- Orleans, Duke of, plan to marry him to Catherine de Medici, i. 382; ii. 29
- Ormaneto, a Venetian, v. 420; vi. 36
- Ormeston, Master, cut down by Bothwell, vi. 279
- Ormeston, Laird of, vii. 516
- Ormiston, Black, and Bothwell, viii. 122. His trial, 294. Receives the rebel lords, ix. 153
- Ormond, Piers, eighth Earl of, ii. 155. Saves Dublin, 178—181; iii. 419. Fidelity, ibid. True as steel, 427. Accuses Lord Leonard Grey, 431
- Ormond, James, ninth Earl of, v. 72, 212, 328
- Ormond, Thomas, tenth Earl of, joins the expedition of the Earl Sussex in Ulster, vii. 125, 126. In Armagh, 148—150. His quarrel with Desmond, 164; x. 228, 243. True to Ireland, 246 and note. Sent for to Dublin, 249. Charged with the suppression of rebellion, 566. Leads an army against Desmond, 567, 568. At Valentia, 574. Completion of his work, 574. Summary of his services, 576, 583, 597, 605, 606, 611, 613. Obtains an indemnity for the rebels, 616. His opinion of St Leger, 616 note
- O'Rourke, of Roscommon, destruction of his house and child, x. 595. His wife, 595, 617
- Orsini, Cardinal, x. 142
- Ortiz, Diego, his report on the state of Ireland in 1567, x. 219
- Osborne, Sir Edward, his ships seized, x. 389
- Ossory, Earl of, ii. 188
- Ostend, garrison of, xii. 328
- O'Sullivan, the, submit to Ormond, x. 574
- O'Toole, Feagh MacHugh, killed, x. 594
- O'Tooles, driven into the mountains, ii. 149
- Otterburn, Sir Adam, iii. 541
- Overton, William, Bishop of Lichfield, his avarice, xi. 472
- Oxenham, the rover, his exploits and death, x. 420, 421
- Oxford, John, Earl of, ii. 47, 378; v. 167, 204; vi. 7
- Oxford, Edward, Earl of, x. 400; xi. 75
- Oxford University, Act respecting the begging scholars of, i. 84. Heads of houses consult an astrologer, 539, 540. Purged of heresy, 547. Ecclesiastical commissioners at, ii. 312. Corruptions, 313. Rapid reform, 313. Martyrs at, iv. 542. Bishop Jewel on the clergy of, vii. 19, 20. Queen Elizabeth's visit to, 432. Influence of the Jesuits, xi. 52
- d'Oysel, French ambassador in Scotland, vi. 230, 232. His difficulties, 232, 233. Occupies Leith, 248. Refused admittance into Edinburgh, 275. Writes to Noailles, 282. Resumes the offensive, and marches into Fife, 309. Defeats the Scots at Kinghorn, 310. Destruction of his transports, 315. Saves his army, 317. Occupies Edinburgh, 320. Wastes the country up to Glasgow, 320. In Leith, 359. Commissioned to make terms, 374

PACHECO, Cardinal, vii. 362

Page, the bookseller, loses his hand, x. 501, 502

Paget, Sir William, iii. 129, 462, 474, 497, 505, 509, 518, 546, 593, 603; iv. 45, 79, 83, 88, 99, 109, 115, 119, 121, 152, 153, 160, 164, 165, 167, 171, 173, 206. Receives Henry VIII.'s last instructions, 245. Proposes a Protectorate, 247. On religion in England, 362. Advises prudence to the Protector, 364, 403. Against the heresy commission, 406. On the western rebels, 420. Embassy of, to the Emperor, 457. Will not desert the Protector, 473. Is made Lord Paget of Beaudesert, 498. Goes to Calais, 499, 500. Is sent to the Tower, v. 39. Examined in the Star Chamber, 45. Appropriations of land, 129. Disgraced, 140. The Council escapes to Baynard's Castle, 205. Carries their petition to Mary, 208. Relied on by Mary, 220. Favours the Spanish marriage, 266, 267, 290. His views on Elizabeth's succession, 293. Mary quotes him, 299. Moderate policy of, finds no favour, 305, 328. Desires to serve the Queen, 333. Recriminations in the Council, 345. Two factions, 366, 368. Opposes the Queen about the Inquisition, 370. Opposes Elizabeth's imprisonment, 378. Remonstrates with the Queen, 384. Frustrates Gardiner's schemes, 393. Defeats him, 396. Recommended by Renard to Philip, 403. Plan for Elizabeth's marriage, 428. Conveys Mary's message to Pole, 438. Again opposes Gardiner, 467, 497. Conference in the Calais Pale, 515. Retires from the Council, vi. 122. On the situation of England, 167. Advocates a Spanish policy, 355 note. Advises an alliance with the Huguenot leaders, 460

Paget, Lord, son of the above, xi. 64, 402

Paget, Charles, xi. 379; xii. 130

Pale, the English, in Ireland, ii. 136; vii. 104, 105, 542; x. 279, 280, 297, 546, 582, 601

Pallavicino, i. 264

Palmer, Sir Henry, iv. 461; v. 197

Palmer, Sir Thomas, iii. 623; iv. 323, 449. Betrays Somerset to Warwick, v. 35—38. With Northumberland, 197. Tried, 240. Executed, 248

Pander, the author of 'Salus Populi,' quoted, ii. 124

Pardoners, begging, punishment of, i. 84, 85

Paris, persecution of the Huguenots in, vi. 581. Explosion of Catholic fanaticism in, x. 74, 75, 123

Paris, French. See Hubert

Parker, Matthew, becomes Archbishop of Canterbury, vi. 99. His consecration at Lambeth, 302. Notice of his career, 302, 524; vii. 179, 251, 253, 254, 256, 261. His death, x. 410. His character, 410, 411

Parker, Lieutenant, in Ireland, x. 254, 257

Parliament, English, of 1529, i. 189 ii. 331. Liberties of, i. 206. Petitions Henry VIII., 208. Conduct of, to Queen Catherine discussed, 436, 437. Abolishes the Papal authority conditionally, ii. 89, 217. Last sessions of, in 1536, 331. Debates in, on the Black Book, 333. Close and labours of, 347. Of 1536, 404. Grants powers of bequest to Henry VIII., 412—415. Of 1539, iii. 188. Elections, 189—192. Appoints a committee of opinion, 194. Of 1540, opened by Cromwell, 291, 292, 295, 325. Of 1542, 475. Privilege question in, on Ferrars, 487. Supreme power of, 489. Of 1543, iv. 9, 12. Of 1545, 192. Of 1547, 226. First, of Edward VI. dissolved, v. 62. Called by Northumberland, 124. First attempt to make a nomination Parliament, 124, 163. First of Mary, 282. Dissolved, 301. The Second, 385, 396. The Third, 432. Meets, 440. Agrees to be reconciled to Rome, 453. At Whitehall, 455. Petitions for pardon from Rome, 456. Debates on Church lands, 467, 468. Is dissolved in displeasure, 480. The first parliament of Elizabeth, vi. 147. Opening of Parliament, Jan., 1563, vii.

30. Prorogued, 56. Meeting of, 1566, 445. Resolution to address the Queen for a settlement of the succession, 454. Her reply, 458—460. Irritation of the Commons, 461, 462. Question of privilege, 463. Remonstrance of the Commons, 465. The Queen gives way, 468. Subsidy Bill passed, 470. Dissolution, 486. Unwillingness of the Queen to encounter a parliament, ix. 421. Necessity for one, 424. Meeting of, 1571, 427. Temper of the Commons, 429. Collision between the Queen and the House, 430. End of the session, 467. Meeting of, April, 1572, x. 82, 83. Deputation to the Queen respecting the Queen of Scots, 88—90. Petition in form for the death of the Duke of Norfolk, 91. Session of 1576, 363. Meeting of, 1581, xi. 77. Quarrel of the Queen with the Commons, 77, 78. Parliament of 1584, 535. Parliament (1586) summoned on the trial of Mary, xii. 197. Address presented to the Queen, 198. Her answer, 200.
- Parliament of Scotland, in 1543, its proposals respecting Mary Stuart's marriage, iii. 553. Allows the use of the translated Bible, 554. Re-assembling of the Estates in 1560, vi. 407. Passing of the Confession of Faith and abolition of the mass, 409. Meeting in April, 1567, viii. 127. And in December of the same year, 299. Meeting of, 1578, x. 454.
- Parma, Margaret, Duchess of. See Margaret
- Parma, Prince of. See Alexander
- Parr, Sir William, ii. 524. Tries the Lincolnshire prisoners, iii. 27. Created Marquis of Northampton, iv. 252. With Lord Seymour, 388. Marches against the rebels in Norfolk, 423. Chosen leader, 445. His defeat, 446. Visits Gardiner in the Tower, 546. Goes to Paris, v. 1. One of the triumvirate, 17. In the King's sick-room, 155. Could not be trusted with troops, 195. Accompanies Northumberland, 197. Sent to the Tower, 221. His trial, 239. His profession, 244. Pardoned and fined, 250. The confederacy, 317. Again sent to the Tower, 327. His release, 384. In Elizabeth's first Council, vi. 122. One of the committee to consult with the Queen, 131.
- Parr, Lady, iii. 303
- Parr, Catherine, niece of Sir William Parr, widow of Lord Latimer, marries Henry VIII., iii. 483. Marries Lord Seymour of Sudleye, iv. 370. Her death, 379
- Parry, Doctor, xi. 540. His plots, 540—542. Tried and executed, 542—544
- Parry, Sir Thomas, iv. 380. Controller of the Household, vii. 121. Throgmorton's letter to him, 440, 441. His death, 457
- Parry, William, xi. 415—420.
- Parsonage, inventory of furniture of, at Aldington, i. 41
- Parsons, the Jesuit, quoted, v. 242
- Parsons, Robert, sent by Philip over the frontiers, x. 343. Notice of him, xi. 50. His mission to England, 55. Reaches London in disguise, 62. Secures Campian's halter, 106. Intrigues at Rome, xii. 45
- Parties, three, in England in 1529, i. 172
- Parties of Europe, i. 376—379
- Partridge, v. 35, 39, 57
- Passau, peace of, v. 78
- Pate, Richard, iii. 314, 329. Titular Bishop of Worcester, at Council of Trent, v. 443. In Elizabeth's first Parliament, vi. 150
- Pavier, town-clerk of London, strange suicide of, i. 565
- Paul III., Pope (see Farnese), ii. 225, 263, 278, 287, 416, 425, 434; iii. 2, 93, 119, 124, 128, 493; in 1542, 536, 601, 605, 612; iv. 71—74, 83—94; 259, 263, 456, 529. Character, 530
- Paul IV. (see Caraffa), elected, v. 519, 562, 566, 576; v. 25, 42, 46, 49, 53; vi. 476
- Paulet, Sir Amyas, English ambassador in Paris, x. 438, 484. Chosen to guard Mary, xi. 576—579. His strict watch, xii. 107. Objects to Chartley, 114. Suggests a plan for seizing Mary's papers, 159. Assists in the search, 160. Feels

- the responsibility of his charge, 163. The Queen's satisfaction at his conduct, 163. Commissioner on Mary's trial, 188. Treats her as a private person, 222. Elizabeth's desire that he should privately destroy Mary, 238. He declines her suggestion, 243. At Mary's execution, 250. Sent as a commissioner to the States, 328. His Puritan service at Chartley, 488
- Paulet, Sir William, Lord Treasurer, on Anne Boleyn's trial, ii. 378. Made Lord St John (of Basing), iii. 80; iv. 235. Made Earl of Wiltshire, 498. Visits Gardiner in the Tower, 546. Edward and the bishops, 567. Made Marquis of Winchester, v. 38. High-Steward at the trial of the Duke of Somerset, 44. Brings the crown to Lady Jane Grey, 190. Threatens Philip, 312. The Council divided, 366. Attends Elizabeth, 378. In the House of Lords, 466. Lord High Treasurer to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 151. Opposes alteration of the Prayer Book, 194. More than half a Catholic, 370. Entertains the Queen at Basing House, 413. Advocates alliance with French Protestants, 461. His advice as to the succession, 589. Employed by the Queen, vii. 454. Letter to Cecil, viii. 445
- Paul's Cross, preachers at, v. 175. Tumult at, 235. Dr Watson preaches at, 249. Gardiner at, 462. Queen Elizabeth at, vii. 256
- Paz, Luis de, secretary to de Quadra, vii. 82
- Peckham, Sir Edward, cofferer to Queen Mary, iv. 468; v. 193; vi. 122
- Peckham, Sir Henry, executed, vi. 14
- Peerson, burnt, iv. 7
- Peine forte et dure, viii. 32 note
- Pelham, v. 348
- Pelham, Sir William, x. 539. In Dublin, 566. Leads an army against the rebels in Munster, 569. Offers pardon to Lady Desmond, 571. In Kerry, 572, 573. Superseded, 579
- Pembroke. See Herbert
- Penry, supposed author of 'Martin Marprelate,' tried and executed, xii. 495
- Percy, Henry, sixth Earl of Northumberland, i. 182; ii. 389, 396, 554; (1536), 563; (1532), iii. 378, 15
- Percy, Sir Thomas, brother of the above, ii. 544; iii. 29. Hung, 34
- Percy, Thomas, seventh Earl of Northumberland, vi. 333, 338, 556; vii. 36. Implicated in Catholic intrigues, vi. 556; vii. 36, 275. Pays homage to Mary, viii. 334. His interview with Don Guerau respecting Mary's interests, 490. Objects to Norfolk's elevation, ix. 11. Prepared to rebel, 71. Consulted by Mary, 73. Plots with Dacres to deliver Mary, 77. Concerts with the other rebel lords, 120—122. Rebels, 123, 124, 126. Proclaimed traitor, 145. Shows signs of yielding to Elizabeth, 150 and note. The conspiracy abandoned, 151 and note. Taken prisoner, 169; ix. 441; x. 68, 70, 72, 116. Executed at York, 118
- Percy, Sir Henry, vi. 234, 239, 343, 375; vii. 275; ix. 151 note; x. 117. Becomes eighth Earl of Northumberland, and sent to the Tower, xi. 402. His death, 600 and note
- Perrot, Sir John, vi. 5. Made president of Munster, x. 285—290. Appointed deputy of Ireland, 621. His government, xii. 90, 91, 95
- Persecuting laws against Catholics, ii. 214
- Pershore, petition of a monk of, ii. 324
- Peterborough, foundation of the See of, ii. 353
- Peter's pence, and other tributes to Rome, abolished, ii. 88
- Peto, Father, i. 370, 374, 464; ii. 79; vi. 49, 54
- Petre, Sir William, iv. 120, 471, 499, 546, 553; v. 23, 129, 199, 366
- Pexhall, Sir Richard, vi. 85
- Philibert, Prince of Savoy, v. 428, 440, 503, 525; vi. 69, 133, 159
- Philip, Prince of Spain (afterwards Philip II.), ii. 228; iv. 532; v. 293, 310, 311, 325, 366, 400, 403—406, 410. Marriage with Queen Mary, 424. Uses dangerous words to Noailles, 427. Weary of his bride, 428. His reception of Pole, 444. The ceremony at Whitehall, 447. His coronation objected to, 470. His succession discussed, 478, 479. Disclaims all share in the executions, 497. Pines for freedom, 500. Favours Pole, 519. Anxious to see Elizabeth, 530. His schemes respecting her, 530. Prepares to leave England, 532. His departure, 534. His conduct abroad, 539. His letters to Mary, 573. Will not return, vi. 15. Paul's declaration respecting him, 26. Returns to England, 42. Leaves in four months, 49. Invades France, 51. Asks pardon of the Pope, 53. His measures for the defence of Guisnes, 72. Proposes to recover Calais, 79. Affects to congratulate Mary, 85. Favours Elizabeth's accession, 93. Her reception of his message, 94. Advocates the succession of Elizabeth, 135, 137. Expecting that she will act as he will dictate, 106, 107. His marriage with her suggested, 134. His policy uncertain, 139. Offers his hand to Elizabeth, 141—145, 161, 184. Marries Elizabeth of France, 184, 190. Suggests two men as husbands for her, 197. Sends de Quadra as his ambassador to London, 206. Correspondence with him, 214, 263, 329—333, 402; vii. 77. His intrigues in English affairs, vi. 300, 320—323, 371, 402, 483; vii. 59, 92. Writes to Elizabeth, vi. 338. Sends de Glasion to London, 348, 353. Resentment of the English Catholics against him, 403, 540. Prevents the Pope from excommunicating Elizabeth, 495. Objects to discussion with heretics, 535. Will interfere in France, 573. Protests against English interference, 591. Attacked by Cecil, vii. 35. Refuses to aid rebellion in Ireland, 118, 167, 202. Approves of the Queen of Scots' marriage with Darnley, 266, 359—363. The report that he has sailed for the Low Countries, viii. 274 and note. His feelings towards Elizabeth, 287. And to the Queen of Scots, 315, 369, 408. His character and hatred of heresy, 425. Expels the English ambassador from Spain, 440, 441. Elizabeth keeps the plunder taken from his vessels, 486—488. Mary Stuart makes overtures to him through Don Guerau, ix. 11, 12. Unwillingly adopts the cause of Mary Stuart, 12. Dreads increase of power for France, 36. Fears to encourage rebellion in England, 157 note, 158. Displeased at the Pope's excommunication of Elizabeth, 230 note. His reluctance to quarrel with England, 305, 488; x. 96, 159, 341, 381, 390, 393, 553, 554; xi. 6, 149, 141, 180, 204, 409. Treats Cobham contemptuously, ix. 493. Arrival of Ridolfi in Spain, 497. Deceived by Hawkins, 517—520; x. 33 note, 149. His great difficulties, 166. Makes a treaty with England, 174. Sends Artiz to Ireland, 219. Offered the crown of Ireland, 237. Declines it, 263. Philip and Stukely, 268—277. His power augmented, xi. 161. Will not interfere in Scotland, 247, 255. Persuaded by the Pope to agree to his deposition of Elizabeth, 408. War inevitable, 414. Delay, 420. Elizabeth intends to make peace, 478. Instigates the murder of the Prince of Orange, 481. His views on England, 528; xii. 45—51. Agrees to an attempt on Elizabeth's life, 195. His policy in Scotland, 212. His communications with the Pope concerning England, 277, 278. His preparations for the Armada, 318, 320, 322, 324, 330. His negotiations for peace, 337, 341, 349. His navy, 357. The Armada described, 376—380. Preparations for it completed, 382. It leaves the Spanish harbour, 388. Defeat and destruction of his fleet, 418 et seq., 460. How affected by his losses, 463, 465. Appeals to Sextus for help but is refused, 466—471. Philips, Thomas, under More, i. 552. Philips, Dean of Rochester, v. 288. Phillips, Walsingham's secretary, xii. 115, 116, 138, 146. Philpot, Clement, iii. 332. Philpot, v. 288, 395. Piccadilly, v. 350. Pickering, Sir William, iv. 568. Ambassador at Paris, v. 144. His in-

- interview with the King of France, 146, 372
 Pilgrimage of Grace, ii. 499 et seq. (See Aske.) Causes of discontent which led to it, 499, 508—512. Rising at Louth, 514, 515. Violence of the clergy, 516. Rising at Castre, 516. At Horncastle, 517. The rebels' petition, 518. Murder of the Chancellor of Lincoln, 519. Musters in London, 524—526. The king's answer to the rebels, 527. Confusion in Lincoln chapterhouse, 530. Surrender to Suffolk, 531. The Askes, 533. Rising in Yorkshire and the North, 535. Scene at Beverley, 537, 538, 959. Lord Darcy plays into the rebels' hands, 542. The insurgents move upon Hull and York, 543—545. Hull surrenders, 552. Christopher Aske's gallant behaviour, 554. The Government prepares for defence in the North, 554, 555. Lancaster herald sent to Pomfret, 559. Nobles gather there, 562. Rebels march on Doncaster, 563. Council of war, 566. Conditions, 568. To be taken to the king, 571—574, 576. Rebel council at York, 584. Council and convocation at Pomfret, 587. Names of those present, 587, 588. The agreement of Doncaster, 590. Trials of the prisoners, iii. 27, 28. Trials, 29, 39
 Pilkington, James, Bishop of Durham, his sermon on the destruction of St Paul's cathedral, vi. 495
 Pinart, Secretary, in England, xi. 209, 214
 Pinkie Cleugh, or Musselburgh, battle of, iv. 293—296
 Pinteado, Antonio, his voyage to Africa, viii. 7, 8
 Pirates in the Channel, English and French, iii. 504; iv. 376; viii. 18, 34, 439, 472; ix. 29—32, 303; x. 97, 337, 479; xi. 470. Irish, xii. 455
 Pius IV., Pope, elected, vi. 476. Invites England to be represented at the Council of Trent, 477, 478. Prevented by Philip II. from excommunicating Queen Elizabeth, 495. Refuses permission to English Catholics to attend the English service, vii. 24. Philip's letter to him, 362—364
 Pius V., Pope, vii. 368; ix. 228, 229. Excommunicates and deposes Elizabeth, 283, 384, 385; x. 96. His death, 124
 Plague, the, in Havre, vii. 68. In London, 74. Symptoms and progress of the disease, 74. Remedies, 75. Extent of the mortality in the city, 75, 91. In Derry, 571, 573. Again in Ireland, x. 531. In Scotland, xi. 593
 Plantagenet, Margaret, ii. 66. See Pole
 Pluvieres taken by Condé, and the soldiers put to the sword, vi. 597
 Plymouth, a London curate's letter to the Mayor of, ii. 372. Scene in the harbour, viii. 68. Engagement with the Spaniards off, xii. 394—396
 Poisoning, Act against, declared high treason, i. 305
 Poissy, conference of, vi. 534
 Poitiers, the Huguenots defeated in, vi. 577
 Pole, Arthur, vi. 587. His conspiracy, trial, and condemnation, 587, 588
 Pole, Edward, brother of the above, joins the conspiracy against Elizabeth, vi. 587
 Pole, Margaret Plantagenet, Countess of Salisbury, i. 114; ii. 66. Has the care of Princess Mary, 67. In the Nun of Kent's conspiracy, 66; iii. 131, 139, 140. Her attainder, 197. Her execution and supposed causes of it, 458, 459
 Pole, Lord Montague, eldest son of the above, ii. 68. On More's trial, 268; iii. 41. His dream, 72. Had married a Neville, 131. Sent to the Tower, 140. Tried, 143. Executed, 147, 241 note
 Pole, Sir Geoffrey, younger brother of the above, iii. 138, 145, 146; vi. 587
 Pole, Reginald, second brother of the above, employed at Paris, i. 271; ii. 68, 352. His early life and education, 438, 442. Composes the tract 'De Unitate Ecclesiæ,' 444. Contents of his book, 448—462. It is sent to England, 463. Its effect,

- 465, 467, 468. Made Cardinal, iii.
2. And legate, 3, 6, 19—22. At Liège, 40. Recalled by the Pope, 41. His book, 42, 46, 122. His apology to Charles V., 122. Arrives in Spain, 157. Failure, 166. Retires into a monastery, 167. Compelled to give up his expedition, 606. Secret correspondence, iv. 109. Fears being made prisoner, 123. Offers himself for Pope, 531. Re-edits his book at Lago di Garda, v. 258, 259. Named legate to England, 260, 264, 280, 306, 415, 416, 418, 420, 422, 423, 434, 436, 438, 440. At Calais, 441. Returns to England, 442, 444. At Whitehall, 447. His speech, 448—452. Receives England again into the Church, 458, 460, 468, 484. Rejected for the Popedom, 513. To arrange a peace, 515. Mary's only adviser, 540. His letter to Cranmer, 578—583. Made Archbishop of Canterbury, 599; vi. 18, 31—34. His labours at the persecution, 38, 46—50, 54. His new cruelties at Canterbury, 83, 93, 94. His death, 96, 97, 107. Archbishop Parker's name for him, 99. His character, 99, 100. Had not filled up his bishoprics, 148, 164.
- Pole, Richard de la, killed at Pavia, i. 115; ii. 67
- Pollard, Sir Hugh, vi. 5
- Pollino, Captain, iii. 499
- Poltrot, murders the Duke of Guise, vii. 48
- Pomeroy, Sir Thomas, iv. 426, 434
- Pomfret, ii. 547—549; vi. 562
- Ponet, Bishop of Winchester, his bad character, iv. 504, 567; v. 18. His monopoly, 107. Deprived, 227. In Wyatt's conspiracy, 348
- Poole, Captain, x. 334
- Poor laws, English, i. 76. Alleged causes of the growth of pauperism, 77. Severe Acts against the growth of vagrancy, 78. Claims of age and impotency, 79
- Pope, Sir Thomas, a friend of Sir Thomas More, ii. 274
- Popery, more the original cause of Irish misery, ii. 131
- Popham, Sir John, Speaker of the Commons, xi. 77, 78
- Population of England in the 16th century, i. 3. Its tendency to remain stationary, 4. Causes of this, 5
- Portault, Admiral, viii. 484
- Porte, Sir John, ii. 378
- Portland, the Spanish Armada off, xii. 399. Engagement off, 400—404
- Portsmouth, state of troops in, in 1559, vi. 168. Not fortified in 1560, 398
- Portugal, troubles in, x. 477
- Portuguese, their voyages of discovery, viii. 8. Their slave trade, 8
- Potter, Sir Gilbert, v. 186. Pilloried, 191. Letter to, 214
- Powell, iii. 296
- Powerscourt, ii. 150
- Powis, Lady, iv. 599
- Powrie hanged, viii. 303
- Poynings, Admiral Sir Adrian, occupies Havre, vi. 584, 585 note; vii. 70. Ordered to Portsmouth with troops, viii. 274
- Poynings, Sir Edward (the elder), sent to Ireland, ii. 148, 149
- Poynings, Sir Edward (afterwards Lord Poynings), at Boulogne, iv. 76, 146
- Praet, M. du, iv. 92
- Prayer Book, the English, iv. 188—191. First draft of, 382. Is a compromise, 387. Opposition to, 416. To be revised, 528. Cranmer's share in it, v. 53. Revision of, in 1558 and 1559, vi. 131, 192, 193. Adopted by the Scotch Protestants, 226
- Preachers of the 16th century, i. 370; iv. 338
- Premunire restricted, i. 293, 294; v. 286, 464. Advice of Goodrich, vi. 125
- Presbytery, detested by Queen Elizabeth, xii. 490
- Preston Pans, the English army at, vi. 343, 344
- Prices of food in the 16th century, i. 21—23. Compared with wages, 20. Commencement of the change in prices, 23. Prices artificial enhanced, and consequent sufferings of the people, 35
- Priestman, iii. 542
- Primers, the first, iv. 189; v. 54
- Prisoners of war, ix. 507

Privateers and pirates, English and French, iv. 376; vi. 297; vii. 167; viii. 18, 34, 46, 439, 472; ix. 29—32, 303, 338; x. 97, 337, 479; xi. 470

Privilege of Parliament, debate on, vii. 463

Probate and Mortuary Acts, i. 244

Proclamations, Act of, on the royal prerogative, iii. 201

Proctors, begging, punishment for, i. 84, 85

Property, statute of interference with, i. 34

Prophesiers, begging, punishment, for, i. 84, 85

Prophecies, wild, through England, iv. 451, note

Protestantism, Irish, its introduction, v. 80

Protestants, i. 130, 173. The Christian brotherhood of, 170, 504, 510, 512, 514, 547. Their dangers, 515, 547, 549, 569. Want of union among them, ii. 24. Their difficulties and violence, 24. No Protestant martyr in Ireland, 168. Mystery Plays, iii. 55. Their plain speaking, 55, 56. Their imprudence, 260; iv. 42—44, 160. Dislike the Prayer Book, 191. Their intolerance, 527. Edict against, 533. In the ascendant, v. 150. Clergy oppose Mary, 173. Effect of Northumberland's apostasy, 246, 249. Their extravagances, 371, 372. Their imprudence, 375. Dreadful persecutions of them, 487, 497, 504—513, 521—524, 540—561, 574—600; vi. 16—18, 34, 36, 39—41, 85, 86. Their expectations at the accession of Elizabeth, 116, 124. Difference of principle between Catholic and Protestant, 128, 185. Cecil's advice to the Protestant bishops, 216, 253 et seq. Panic among the Protestants, viii. 273. State of Protestantism in England, ix. 222. Protestantism and privateering, 337. On the Continent and in England, xi. 467. Protestantism disliked by Queen Elizabeth, xii. 488

Protestants, French. See Huguenots

Protestants, Scotch, iii. 404; iv. 15. Begin to resist in Scotland, vi. 89. Petition Mary of Guise for a reformation, 225. Her answer, 226. Their adoption of the English Prayer Book, 226. Violence at Perth, 229. Make terms with the Regent, 231. Preaching in St Andrews, 233. Destruction of the abbeys, 234, 235. Address of the Lords of the Congregation to Elizabeth, 240. Terms made between the Royalists and Protestants, 249. Consultation of the Scottish leaders at Stirling, 275. Declare the Regency forfeited, 276. Their feebleness, 279, 315. Defeat near Leith, 280. Quit Edinburgh, 281. Fresh alliance between them and Queen Elizabeth, 327. Their distrust, 357, 512. Their adoption of the Genevan 'discipline,' 390. Alliance not recognized by the French, 393. Character of the Reformation in Scotland, 407. Join in inviting Mary, 470. A community of religious interests with them unwillingly admitted by Queen Elizabeth, 479. Consequences expected from the return of Mary Stuart, 512, 513. Riots in Edinburgh, 527. Mary temporizes, 521. Preachers reproach Mary, 564. Agitation amongst, vii. 193, 224, 262. Outrage on a priest in Edinburgh, 264. State of parties in 1565, 292. Protestant nobles encouraged by Elizabeth to rebel, 299, 303. Measures of the General Assembly, 301. The Lords of the Congregation in arms, 318, 319, 329, 335. Recommendations of the English Council, 331, 332. Divisions among them, 374. Unwillingness of Queen Elizabeth to connect herself with them, ix. 251

Protestants, Flemish, take refuge in England, iv. 535; v. 70

Puritanism, character of, ix. 338

Puritans, their loyalty, xii. 494. How treated by Elizabeth, 494. Persecution of their ministers, 495

QUADRA, ALVAREZ DE, Bishop of Aquila, Spanish ambassador to London, vi. 206. His correspondence on the state of parties in England, 207—217. His interviews with the Queen, 265, 271. His letters on affairs in England, 297—299. His opinion of Cecil, 311. Urges Philip to interfere in England, 332, 333. His troubles, 352. Desires Elizabeth to receive a nuncio from the Pope, 377. His character of Elizabeth, 377—383. Secret advances made to him respecting the Dudley marriage, 451—456, 471. His conversation with Elizabeth on the subject, 472, 473, 537. And with Cecil, 480, 481. And on religion at a water party on the Thames, 496, 497. His spies, 552. His house the focus of conspiracy, 552; vii. 28. Defection of his secretary, vi. 553—555. De Quadra's interview with the Queen, 556—558. Articles alleged against him, with his answers, 559 note. Scene at the Council between him and Cecil, 591, 592. Inquires whether Catholics may attend English service, vii. 22. Endeavours of Cecil to get rid of him, 27, 42. Summaries of two of his letters respecting English affairs, 50—52, 54. His negotiations for marrying the Prince of Spain to Mary Stuart, 76—82. His death and character, 83.

Quiroga, Archbishop of Toledo, his opinion of Queen Elizabeth, x. 353. Sir John Smith's quarrel with him, 391.

de Quissey, M., x. 469.

Quyntrell, iii. 135, 237.

RABY, gathering at, ix. 125. The Castle, 147 note.

Radcliffe, Sir Egremont, ix. 142; x.

34.

Radcliffe, Sir Henry, imprisoned for peculation, vii. 162. His letter to Sussex, ix. 149.

Radcliffe, Sir Humphrey, v. 348.

Radcliffe, Robert, Earl of Sussex, ii. 47; v. 193, 289, 366, 378, 383, 398; vi. 434, 487. His expeditions against the Scots in Ulster and the Isles, vii. 111. His skirmish with the Irish at Armagh, 125. His troops entrapped by O'Neil, 126, 127. His proposal to murder O'Neil, 132. Invades Tyrone, 133. Summons O'Neil to Dublin, 142. Implores the Queen's help against O'Neil, 144. Powerless, 146. Elizabeth consents to an invasion, 148. The Irish Council refuse to help him, 149. Commences a hopeless campaign, 150. His defeat and failure, 151, 152. His sister demanded in marriage by O'Neil, 159. His intrigues against Sydney, 552 et seq. Recalled, 574. His mission to Vienna, viii. 267, 270, 281. His return to England, 282. A commissioner for investigating the Darnley murder, 384. His report of the proceedings to Cecil, 403. In favour of Norfolk's marriage with Mary, ix. 75. President of the Council at York, 120. Perplexed and irresolute, 128. Elizabeth blames his conduct at York, 142, 178. Invades Scotland, 262. Harries the Border, 265. His correspondence with Maitland, 318. His disapproval of the Queen's treatment of the Netherlands, x. 460. Favourable to the Alençon marriage, 471, 490, 499; xi. 214, 220. Rakers, account of the, vii. 108.

Raleigh, Walter, father of Sir Walter, v. 322.

Raleigh, Walter, with the English at Dingle, x. 586.

Rambouillet, M., in Edinburgh, vii. 371.

Rampton, Thomas, v. 340.

Randall, John, Cambridge student, suicide of, i. 565.

de Randan, M., arrives in London to make terms for the French in Scotland, vi. 374. His instructions from Francis II., 374.

Randolph, Colonel Edward, commands in Ireland, vii. 558. At Derry, 563, 568. Killed, 570.

Randolph, Thomas, vi. 216. Accompanies Arran to Scotland, 260. Sent by Arran to Norfolk, 338. His opinion of the Scots, 339. Cecil's character of him, 388. Tries to prevent Confession of Faith from passing, 409. Letters to Cecil, 415, 416. His character of the Queen of Scots, 511, 532, 576; vii. 90. His account of the Scotch Catholic clergy, vi. 531 note. Interview with Mary Stuart, vii. 97. His letter to Elizabeth on the marriage of the Queen of

- Scots, 183. Interview with Mary, 188, 189. Named a commissioner at the conference of Berwick, 221. His instructions, 221. His conversation with Maitland, 223. Petitions for his recall, 248. His secret correspondence, 265 note. His weekly reports, 279. Presents Elizabeth's letter to Mary, 298. Encourages the Protestant noblemen to rebel, 299. His letter to the Lords, 304. Again demands the return of Lennox and Darnley, 307. Expostulations with the Queen of Scots, 307—309. Elizabeth's instructions to him, 351, 352. Expelled from Scotland, 379. Sent to Edinburgh, ix. 242. Obligated to leave it, 262. Sent again to the Scotch Lords, 298; x. 67. At the conference at Edinburgh Castle, 68. His danger, 73. Recalled, 73. His opinion of French affairs, 578. Sent to James VI., xi. 23. His interview with the King, 25. Shot at, 34. Flies to Berwick, 33.
- Rathlin, Isle of, x. 527. Murder of women and children on the, 529
- Reading, Abbot of, iii. 241
- Recalde, Admiral, xii. 439, 454. His death, 461
- Reconciliation, Act of, v. 470
- Reed, Alderman, iv. 101
- Reed, captain of Mary Stuart's guard, ix. 125
- Reformatio Legum, begun and dropped, v. 107
- Regency Bill, v. 479
- Renard, Simon, Charles V.'s minister to England, his character, v. 148, 149. His advice to Mary, 178, 218. Her confidence in him, 222, 225. Is jealous of Elizabeth, 226. Question of the Queen's marriage, 236, 237. Tries to prejudice Mary, 268. Advises the Bishop of Norwich, 287. Praises Philip to Mary, 291. Offers Flemish assistance to Gardiner, 334. Advises Mary, 345, 349, 355, 356. Demands an audience of the lords, 366. Opposes Elizabeth, 371, 385. Anxious for Mary's marriage, 394. Philip's complaints, 428. Insists on caution, 431. Consulted on the re-union with Rome, 434. Advises Philip, 434, 435. Fears the people, 497.
- Reasons with Philip, 500. Writes to Charles about the state of things, 525
- Rent in the 16th century, i. 25
- de Requesens, Don Louis, Grand Commander of Castile, succeeds Alva in the Netherlands, x. 335, 351, 363. His death, 380
- Reres, Lady, vii. 488, 502 note, 506
- de Retz, Count, his interview with Queen Elizabeth, x. 436
- Revett, Dr, ii. 104
- Reynolds, Father, ii. 249
- Rheims, Catholic refugees at, x. 510
- Rhinegrave, the, iv. 498. Besieges Havre, vii. 67, 69
- Riccarton, Laird of, viii. 310
- Rich, Sir Richard, solicitor-general, ii. 270; iii. 310; iv. 208, 249. Lord Chancellor, 468; v. 23, 466
- Rich, Father, ii. 55
- Rich, Lord, in Ireland, x. 308
- Richardson, Sir William, iii. 254
- Richmond, Queen Elizabeth at, vii. 196, 199
- Richmond, Henry Fitzroy, Duke of (illegitimate son of Henry VIII.), i. 389. His fair promise, and friendship with Lord Surrey, 390. Named deputy of Ireland, ii. 163. At Anne Boleyn's execution, 397. His death, iii. 248
- Richmond, Duchess of, her evidence against her brother, Lord Surrey, iv. 218, 221
- Ricot, Father, his sermon, ii. 207
- Ridley, Nicholas, Bishop of Rochester, made Bishop of London, iv. 504. Reasons with Joan Bocher, 527. Visits Gardiner, 548. Is one of his judges, 553. Consulted by the Council, 567. His sermon on the distress of the people, v. 57. Encourages the spoliation of St Paul's, 120. Preaches against Mary, 200. Arrested and sent to the Tower, 212. To Oxford, 369, 395. His trial, 551. His writings, 551. His sufferings and death, 558
- Ridolfi, Robert, the Pope's agent, ix. 14, 104, 316, 390. Sent by the Catholics to Philip, 390, 392, 394, 411, 443, 450, 497. Goes to Rome, 496.
- Rieulx, de, iii. 510, 609; iv. 49
- Rizzio, David, vii. 233, 245, 248,

280. His influence over the Queen, 359, 372. Jealousy and dislike of him, 375. Plot to destroy him, 376, 377. Murdered, 386—389
- Robsart, Anne, married to Lord Robert Dudley, iv. 526; vi. 199. Her illness, 199. And death, 415 note, 419, 420. Cause of this, 420. Suspicions of foul play, 424—432. Her funeral, 433
- Rochelle, viii. 418; ix. 31
- Rochester, Sir Robert, sent to the Fleet, v. 21. Receives a pension from Charles, 366. At Rogers' execution, 489
- Rochford, Lord, Anne Boleyn's brother, ii. 360. Sent to the Tower, 364. Condemned, 390. His confession and death, 394
- Rochford, Lady, iii. 298 note. At Pomfret, 469. Her execution, 480
- Rochpot, iv. 501
- Rogers, Sir Edward, iv. 217
- Rogers, John, canon of St Paul's, his character, v. 486. His trial, 488. Degraded, 489. Burnt, 490
- Rokeby, a secret Catholic agent at Holyrood, vii. 419. His reception by the Queen of Scots, 420. Arrested, 423
- Romano, Luis, vii. 93 note. On the state of the English Catholics, 181
- Rome, reconciliation with, v. 458—462
- Roper, Margaret, More's daughter, ii. 267, 272
- Rose, the White, i. 113. A Pretender called the White Rose, iii. 449
- Roses, Wars of the, their effects, i. 110
- Rosey, keeper of the Star Chamber, vi. 11, 13
- Rosheim, Martin von, iii. 614
- Ross, Bishop of. See Leslie, John
- Ross, Earl of. See Darnley
- Ross, Carberry, Bishopric of, x. 546
- Roths, Master of, iv. 181
- Rotterdam, people of, massacred, x. 101
- Rouen, vi. 575, 584, 594, 595
- Rough, John, iii. 548
- Rouse, Richard, boiled to death, i. 305
- Rowkes, Edward, ii. 184
- Ruremonde taken by the Prince of Orange, x. 122
- Russell, Sir John, ii. 524, 525, 588. Created first Lord Russell, iii. 80. Sent into the west with troops, 162. His stainless character, 246; iv. 49, 127, 129. Warns Seymour, 388. Connected with Devonshire, 410. Insurrection, 414. Exeter besieged, 425. Battle of St Mary's Clyst, 431. His description of Sampford Courtenay, 434. His success in Devonshire, 447. Commands the army, 477. Made Earl of Bedford, 498, 499. Visits Gardiner in the Tower, 546. Unwilling to sign the Letters Patent, v. 162, 169. Commands the garrison at Windsor, 199. Wyatt's letter to Elizabeth, 376.
- Russell, Francis, second Earl, in Elizabeth's first council, vi. 122. One of a committee to consult with the Queen, 131. Notices of him, 153, 269, 442, 459, 461, 466, 589. Named a commissioner for the conference on the succession, vii. 221, 307, 323, 339, 353. At the baptism of James, 497. Is accused by Elizabeth of favouring the Lords, viii. 233. Foresees the effect of Elizabeth's mismanagement, 234. Is ordered not to acknowledge James at the Borders, 259. Opposes Norfolk's marriage with Mary, ix. 75. With Montague in command of the south coast, 144
- Russell, Sir Francis, son of the above, iv. 365
- Russells, the, iv. 130
- Ruthven, Lord Provost of Perth, iv. 15; vi. 226. Joins the followers of Knox, 232. Signs an address to Queen Elizabeth, 241. At the conference at Berwick, 326. Informed of the conduct of Mary Stuart, vii. 376. At the murder of Rizzio, 386—380. His account of it, 405. His flight, 406. And death, 417
- Ruthven, Lord (see Gowrie), son of the above, sent to the Queen at Lochleven, viii. 226. In arms with Murray against Mary, 321
- Ruthven, raid of, xi. 270

Rutland, Earl of. See Manners

Rutland, Lady, iii. 298

Rymenant, battle of, x. 462

Rysby, Father, ii. 55

SACHEVERELL, Sir Henry, ii. 581

Sacknell, Robert, iii. 192

Sackville, Sir Richard, vii. 424

Sackville, Sir Thomas, Lord Buckhurst, in Paris, ix. 368. Notice of, 368 note. In the House of Lords, 427. Conveys Mary's sentence to Fotheringay, xii. 219—221. Sent to Holland in Leicester's place, 290, 299. Elizabeth's contrary commands, 301

Sadler, Sir Ralph, iii. 335, 392, 395, 540, 541, 556, 560, 564, 572, 573, 576, 580, 583; iv. 445, 472; vi. 256, 261 note, 274, 343, 365, 375; vii. 33, 449. A commissioner for investigating the Darnley murder, viii. 383. Ordered to take charge of Lord Rutland, ix. 135. Arrests the Duke of Norfolk, x. 7. Laments Elizabeth's irresolution, 53. His charge of the Queen of Scots, 447, 448; xi. 503. Declines to be responsible for her, 529. Reprimanded for carelessness respecting her, 572. Is relieved of his charge, 575. A commissioner at Mary's trial, xii. 188

Sailors, English, before the sixteenth century, viii. 2. English sailors and the Spanish Inquisition, 20, 21. Complaint of Thomas Nicholls, 21. Petition of Dorothy Seeley, 22. Burnt in Spain, 25, 26. Ill usage of English prisoners in Spain, 28. Cecil undervalues them, ix. 7. Their wages per day in 1588, xii. 360

St Alban's Abbey visited by Cardinal Morton, ii. 304

St Aldegonde, x. 360, 363, 366, 372; xi. 166, 404, 422. Surrenders Antwerp, xii. 21

St André, Marshal, v. 1; vi. 466, 534, 584. At the battle of Dreux, 602. Killed, 603

St Bartholomew, massacre of, x. 134—146. Causes of it, 141, 142

St Clairs, the, iv. 130

St Domingo, captured by Drake, xii. 36

de Sainte Foix, a priest, at the French court, x. 123

St Helen's, French fleet driven off, iv. 137. Church of, vii. 16

St Jean de Luz, naval battle at, viii. 478, 479

St Johns, the, ii. 562

St John of Basing. See Paulet, Lord

St John, Sir Oliver, created Lord St John of Bletsoe, refuses the guardianship of Mary Stuart, xi. 576

St Kevern's, the fishermen's banner of, iii. 134

St Leger, Sir Anthony, ii. 379; iii. 63, 419, 424. Made deputy of Ireland, 440, 484; v. 71, 72, 73, 84, 86, 278

St Leger, Sir John, iv. 250

St Leger, Sir Nicholas, his speech, xi. 78

St Leger, Sir Warham, son of Sir Anthony, iv. 322. Recommended as President of Munster, vii. 547. Encounters O'Neil, 569. His lands in Ireland, x. 234. His firmness of mind, 565. On the state of the country, 603. Negotiates with the Earl of Desmond, 607, 608. Ormond's description of him, 616 note

St Loo, Colonel, at Derry, vii. 572.

Chases O'Neil, 572

St Loo, Sir John, ii. 183

St Lowe, Sir William, ii. 197; v. 362

St Mary's Church, Oxford, v. 588

St Mary's Clost, iv. 412. Battle of, 430—433

St Mary Overy's, six new bishops consecrated at, v. 371. Court held in, 486

St Michael's taken by Don Antonio, xi. 266. Retaken, 268

St Paul's, profaned, iv. 508. Altar of, removed, 529. Stripped, v. 120. Mass restored at, 249. Burned by lightning, vi. 492, 493

St Paul's School, performance by the boys of, at Greenwich, i. 72

St Peter's, midnight mass at, iii. 1

St Quentin, battle of, vi. 52

St Saviour's, Abbot of, proposed as Papal legate to Queen Elizabeth, vi. 378, 381, 402

Salisbury, Countess of. See Pole

Salisbury, Sir John, ii. 182

Salisbury, Thomas, arrested, xii. 158.

- Tried and executed, 170 — 175
 Salviati, iv. 532
 Samford Courtenay, liturgy refused in, iv. 409. Battle of, 434
 Sampson, Dr, Bishop of Chichester, iii. 259, 289; ix. 75
 San Juan de Anton, xi. 134—136
 de San Josepho, Don Bastian, in Smerwick, x. 589
 Sanctuary, privilege of, iii. 294. Laws of, 486
 Sanders, Laurence, trial of, v. 488. Martyred, 494
 Sanders, Dr Nicholas, x. 96, 343, 394, 510, 550. His work on 'The English Schism,' 550, 551. Sails from Spain, and lands at Dingle, 554, 555, 562. Other notices of him, 572, 577, 579. His disappointment, 583, 584. His death, 592
 Sanders, Ninian, v. 186
 Sandingfeldt, Abbey of, iv. 541
 Sandwich, iii. 70
 Sandys, Lord, ii. 378
 Sandys, Edwin, Vice-Chancellor of Cambridge, v. 201, 210. Arrested, 211. Sent to the Tower, 221. In exile at Frankfort, vi. 220. Bishop of London, x. 146. Archbishop of York, xi. 472. Charge against him, 472 note
 Santa Cruz, at St Michael's, xi. 266 — 269. Drake's challenge to him, xii. 296. Commands the Armada, 321. His death, 327
 Sapwell, nunnery of, ii. 307
 Savage, the conspirator, is commissioned to kill the Queen, xii. 157. Arrested, 158. Confesses, 158. His trial, 171. And execution, 174, 175
 Savoy, Philibert, Prince of. See Philibert
 Saxony, John Frederick, Elector of, iii. 605, 614
 Schetowitz, Adam, ambassador from Wurtemberg, vii. 291
 Schertz, Erasmus, iv. 399
 Scheyfne, Imperial ambassador to England, v. 152, 157, 173, 174, 177. On the intended deaths of Gardiner, the Duke of Norfolk, &c., 185
 Scholars' Act about Oxford and Cambridge, i. 84, 86
 Schowen, pillaged, x. 380
 Schwegehenhem, Count, sent to England by Alva, x. 381. Fails, 382. Remains as commissioner for Spanish affairs, x. 96. Sent from the Netherlands to England for money, 334
 Scilly Isles, purchased by Lord Seymour, iv. 378
 Scone sacked and burnt by the Protestants, vi. 234. The Scone stone, vii. 114 note
 Scory, Bishop, v. 18. Ejected from Chichester, 227; vi. 301
 Scot, Bishop of Chester, vi. 36. At Elizabeth's first Parliament, 159. His speech on the Supremacy Bill, 177
 Scotland, sketch of, iii. 343—403. Begins to quarrel with England, 517. Duke of Norfolk invades, 525. Scots invade Cumberland, 528. Treaty of peace with England, 570. Lord Hertford invades it, iv. 32. State of, 175. The position of affairs, 271. Invaded by Somerset, 287. True to France, vi. 54, 55. Divided into parties, 213, 468. Tendencies towards a union between England and Scotland, 217. The Reformation in Scotland, 218 et seq. Cecil's arguments for and against interference in, 253. Proposal for the union of the crowns of England and Scotland, 284. Formal alliance with Elizabeth, 327. Entered by the English army, 343. Possible result of the landing of a Spanish force in Scotland, 351. Mission of Noailles to Scotland, 469, 470. Scottish settlements in Ireland, vii. 111. State of parties in Scotland in 1565, 292. Resolution of the English Council not to interfere in Scotland, 333, 334. Political importance of Darnley's murder, viii. 73, 88. Imprisonment of the Queen, 182. State of the kingdom in 1571, ix. 523, 524. Three parties, French, Spanish, and English, 531. State of the kingdom in 1578, x. 446. Revolution in, xi. 593, 594. See James VI., Mary Stuart
 Scott, John, fanatic, i. 311
 Scott, Sir Walter, of Buccleugh, ix. 209. Punished, 265. At the

- surprise of Stirling, 535. Made prisoner, 536
- Scrope, Lord, at the gathering at Pomfret, ii. 562. With the English army in Scotland, vi. 343. Governor of Carlisle, viii. 258. Throgmorton's character of him, 258 note. Corresponds with Herries, 259. Sent to take charge of the Queen of Scots, 341. Takes the field with Murray, 354. Tries to intercept the rebels, ix. 149. Harries Scotland, 264, 265
- Sebastian, King of Portugal, falls at Alcazar, x. 476, 477
- Sébastien, Mary Stuart's servant, vii. 518; viii. 201
- Searchers, trade, and their duties, i. 53. Their frauds, 60
- Seeley, Dorothy, her petition, viii. 22—24
- de Segur, M., his mission to England, xi. 388. The diamond story, 389, 390. Leaves England, 390. Returns, 471, 562
- Semple, Lord, joins the Regent at Langside, viii. 321. With him when murdered, ix. 199. Verses attributed to him, 204
- Senarpont, Governor of Boulogne, vi. 28, 88
- Seton, Lord, vi. 521; viii. 81. Accompanies the Queen on her escape from Lochleven, 310. At Brussels with Alva, ix. 386. At Paris, 525; x. 64. Returns to Scotland, 67. Discovery of his papers and ciphers, 68. Sent to Guise, xi. 427, 432
- de Sévre, French ambassador in London, vi. 325. Conversations with Queen Elizabeth, 326, 354. Noticed, 337, 350
- Sextus V., Pope, xi. 564; xii. 45, 46, 279, 382, 466. Description of, by Count Olivarez, 467—472
- Seymour, Jane, first allusion to, at Court, ii. 356. Her marriage, 402. Her confinement, iii. 73. Her death, 75, 76
- Seymour, Sir Edward, eldest brother of the above, made Earl of Hertford, iii. 80. Treaty with Cleves, 250. Goes to Calais, 450. Invades Scotland, iv. 26. Takes Edinburgh, 34, 35. Conference at Calais, 79. Goes to Brussels, 85. Interview with Charles, 92, 93.
- Defends Boulogne, 104. Returns to Scotland, 109. Commands in Northumberland, 127. Ravages Scotland, 145. Invades France, 169. Objected to as Protector, 213. Surrey's violent language, 219. His appointment in Henry's will, 235. Receives Henry's last instructions, 245, 246. Is chosen Protector, 247—249. Made Duke of Somerset, 252. Assumes higher powers, 255. Asserts a feudal supremacy over Scotland, 274. Religious reforms, 275. Purification of churches, 279. Neglect of the Scotch, 284. Invades Scotland again, 289. At Pinkie Cleugh, 292—297. Calvin advises him, 340. Builds Somerset House, 348. Holds a Court of Requests in his house, 364. His position, 368. His extravagance, 397, 398. Attempts to raise German troops for a third invasion of Scotland, 398. Issues a heresy commission, 406. Disturbed by religious risings, 415. Fears for London, 422. Persecutes Bonner, 423. Interference of the Council with him, 464—472. Carries the King to Windsor, 473, 475. Substitutes his own servants for the Yeomen of the Guard, 480. Assured by the Council that his life is safe, 484. Sent to the Tower, 485. Deposed from the protectorate, 497. And released, 497. Formally pardoned, 526. His daughter, Lady Anne Seymour, marries Lord Ambrose Dudley, 526. His promise to Gardiner, 547. His mother's death, 551. Defends Mary's interests, v. 20. His party, 31. His plans, 34. Betrayed by Palmer, 34. Arrested at the Council Board, 38. Accused of treason and felony, 41, 42. Acquitted of the first, 43. Found guilty of felony, 44. Sympathy of the people, 45. Executed, 47—51
- Seymour, Lord Edward, son of the above, iv. 477. Becomes Earl of Hertford, vi. 147. Marries Lady Catherine Grey, and committed to the Tower, 523, 524; vii. 34. Not in Parliament in 1571, ix. 427
- Seymour, Sir Thomas, brother of the

- Protector, iii. 67, 515; iv. 101.
 Lord Seymour of Sudleye, High Admiral of England, 368. Wishes to marry Elizabeth, 369, 380.
 Marries Queen Catherine Parr, 370. Intrigues against the Protector, 373, 378. Sent to the Tower, 388, 389. Attainted, 392, 393. His death, 395
 Sforza, Duke of Milan, ii. 421
 Shaneson, Sir Gerald, ii. 149
 Shankees, account of the, vii. 107
 Shanklin, skirmish at, iv. 137
 Sharington, Sir William, comptroller of the mint at Bristol, iv. 351.
 His frauds, 351, 379. Attainted, 390. Pardoned, 396
 Shaxton, Bishop of Salisbury, i. 567, ii. 341; iii. 217; iv. 209
 Sheffield, Lord, killed, iv. 446
 Shelley, Sir William, ii. 378
 Sheppey, Isle of, iv. 103
 Sherley, Sir T., sent to the Queen with explanations, xii. 63
 Sherwin, his trial and execution, xi. 70, 100—106
 Shillelagh, destruction at, x. 255
 Shoreham, action between the English and French off, iv. 142, 143
 Shrewsbury, Earl of. See Talbot
 Shrewsbury, Countess of, x. 399; xi. 500. The Queen of Scots' letter to her, 501 note.
 Shrines, iii. 111. Of Edward the Confessor, partly preserved, 112. Of Thomas à Becket destroyed, 114, 115
 Sidney, Sir Henry, v. 212; vi. 452. Present at an interview between Cecil and de Quadra, 481. Interview with de Quadra, 487. Sent to the Queen-mother in Scotland, 550. To Mary Stuart, 574. His account of the state of Ireland, vii. 164, 165. Sent there as deputy, 536. His letters to Leicester and Cecil, 545, 546. Elizabeth quarrels with him, 548. Sussex intrigues against him, 552. Ineffectually demands his recall, 552, 553. Invades Ulster, 561. His successes, 564—566. Cecil's advice to him, 567. Again demands his recall, 568. Sends the Earl of Desmond to London, x. 228. Overruns the south and west, 247, 248. Resigns his office, 277. His reward, 278. Will not return to Ireland, 291. Again becomes deputy of Ireland, 530. His progress, 531. Ovations and executions, 532—534. His report on the state of the Established Church in Ireland, 537. Leaves Ireland, 548, 549
 Sidney, Lady, vi. 264 note; 264, 454
 Sidney, Philip, x. 459. His letter on the Alençon marriage, 495. In Ireland, 531. Governor of Flushing, xii. 28. His death at Zutphen, 86—88 de Silva, Don Diego Guzman, Spanish ambassador to London, vii. 181. His arrival in England, 195. His description of the English Court, 196, 216. Interview with the Queen, 243. On the English succession, 452. Advises the Queen to dissolve Parliament, 475. Complains to Cecil, viii. 48, 67. And to Elizabeth, 69. His inquiries respecting Mary Stuart's guilt, 90, 91. His opinion of the murder of Darnley, 93. His conversation with the Earl of Murray, 221. Elizabeth seeks his advice, 255. Sends Philip an account of his conversation with Elizabeth, 284—288. On Scotch affairs, 363, 368. Accompanies the Queen through the streets of London, 437. Recalled, 442. His character, 442 Simier, M., his mission, x. 482, 485, 489. Elizabeth's 'petit singe,' 485
 Simson, Cuthbert, martyred, vi. 83
 Sinclair, Oliver, iii. 529
 Singleton, the printer, indicted, x. 502. Acquitted, 502
 Sion, monastery of, iniquities of, ii. 316
 Six Articles Bill. See Articles
 Skeffington, Sir William, deputy governor of Ireland, ii. 163
 Skelton, Sir John, v. 193
 Skerries, the, v. 74
 Skipperus, Flemish Admiral, iv. 537
 Skirling, Laird of, viii. 119
 Slave trade, African, beginning of the, viii. 8. How at first regarded, 52. John Hawkins's slaving voyages, 55
 Slavery, extinction of serfdom in England, i. 13. Spanish gentlemen sold at Dover, ix. 486

- Sleidan, the historian, iv. 41, 125, 160; v. 68
- Slieve Broughty mountains, massacres in the, x. 543 and note
- Sluys besieged by Parma, xii. 302, 304
- Smalcaldic League, iv. 125, 263; vi. 478
- Smerwick, James Fitzmaurice at, x. 555. Occupied by a Spanish and Italian force, 581, 589
- Smeton, Mark, musician to Anne Boleyn, sent to the Tower, ii. 360. His confession, 362. Her account of him, 366. Pleads guilty, 386. Hanged, 393
- Smith, Sir John, x. 320, 389. Sent to Madrid, 389
- Smith, Thomas, attempts to poison Shan O'Neil, vii. 156—158
- Smith, Sir Thomas, iv. 468, 476, 485, 488; v. 84. Revision of the Prayer Book at his house, vi. 131. Sent as ambassador to Paris, 582. His proposal for the recovery of Calais, vii. 25. His part in the negotiations for peace, 169—175. His quarrel with Sir N. Throgmorton, 175, 176. On the proposed marriage of the King of France with Queen Elizabeth, 241—243. Succeeds Cecil as secretary to the Queen, ix. 430. Arrests the Duke of Norfolk, x. 8. Declares Mary Stuart's possible fate to the French Council, 41. Discusses the Alençon marriage with the Queen-mother, 75. His son's attempted settlement at Knockfergus, 294
- Smith, Benet, v. 571
- Smithfield, massacre at, prevented, vi. 18
- Social changes in the 16th century, vi. 109, 110
- Soldier, pay of the common, in the 16th century, i. 29 note
- Solway Moss, defeat of the Scots at, iii. 531. Prisoners brought to London, 538. Permitted to return, 545. Sign a bond to be true to Henry, 569. Break their oaths, 582
- Somers, Mr, his mission to France, xi. 176. His interview with the King, 177. Appointed temporary keeper of Mary Stuart, 503
- Somerset, Earl of Worcester, v. 466
- Somerset. See Seymour
- Somerset, Duchess of, receives Mary on her entry into London, v. 225
- Somerville, John, xi. 395, 397
- Sorcery, English law as to, vi. 486 note
- Sorrey, Captain, the pirate, viii. 34, 35
- Soto, a friar, v. 554, 575. With Cranmer, 598
- Southampton, Earl of. See Fitzwilliam; Wriothesley
- Southwark, v. 346
- Southwell, Sir Francis, converted by Campian the Jesuit, xi. 75
- Southwell, Sir Richard, iv. 220; v. 324, 327, 332, 345, 366
- Spain, extinction of Protestantism in, viii. 418, 419. Breach between Spain and England, 489. See Armada; Philip II.
- Spaniards, ill-feeling between them and the English, v. 425. Their greatness in the 16th century, viii. 4. Their decadence, 5. The slave trade a monopoly, 8. English outrages and Spanish reprisals, 20, 21. Spaniards and Flemings contrasted, 23. Spaniards and Netherlanders seized in England, 489. See Armada; Philip II.
- Spelman, Sir John, ii. 378
- Spenser, Edmund, quoted, ii. 137; vii. 164, 165. In Ireland, x. 586
- Speyr, proposed league at, x. 330
- Spinosa, Cardinal, his reply to Queen Elizabeth, ix. 494
- Spires, Diet at, iv. 41—45
- Stafford, Mr Edward, quoted, i. 23
- Stafford, Sir Edward, sent to Paris, x. 438. Reports the plot, 404. Ambassador in Paris, xi. 554. On Joyeuse's campaign, xii. 313 note
- Stafford, Lord, his letter to Cecil on his disgrace, xii. 274 note
- Stafford, Sir Thomas, son of Lord Stafford nephew of Pole, v. 415. Seizes Scarborough, vi. 44. Executed, 45
- Staffords, the, v. 372
- Stanhope, Sir Michael, iv. 484, 498; v. 33. Executed, 57
- Stanley, Earl of Derby, v. 193, 289; 311, 366, 398; ix. 11, 123, 314; x. 4. Takes the Garter to Henry III., xi. 552, 554. Sent to the states of Holland, 309, 328. His instructions, 309

- Stanley, Sir George, v. 275. His gallantry in Ireland, vii. 127
- Stanley, Sir Thomas, his schemes for the reform of the currency, vii. 6. The silver coins recoined, 8. Reckoned one of the Queen of Scots' friends, 421
- Stanley, Sir William, recalled from Ireland, xii. 79. His treachery, 80. Arrives at Flushing with an Irish regiment, 86. Betrays Deventer, 235
- Stanleys, the, v. 268; ix. 9, 426
- Stapleton, William, Captain of Beverley, ii. 538, 543. Takes Hull, 552
- Starkey, Mr, ii. 442
- Staunton, John, ii. 210
- Stauntons, the, v. 372
- Stenhouse, Lady, vi. 390
- Stewart, James, a favourite of James VI., xi. 19, 383. Arrests the Earl of Morton, 20. Created Earl of Arran, 36, 227, 228. Notices of him, 256, 257, 311, 438. His position in the Scotch Court, 489. Made Chancellor, 491. His interview with Hunsdon, 494, 495. Proposal to assassinate him, 581. His arrest and release, 586, 589. Hatred against, 593. Escapes from the Protestant lords, 594. Dies in a brawl, 594
- Stewart, Colonel, sent by Angus to Queen Elizabeth, xi. 309
- Stewart, Henry, intrigues with Margaret of Scotland, iii. 360. See Methuen
- Stewart, of Traquair, vii. 400
- Stirk, Helen, martyr, iv. 17
- Stirling, receives the Protestants, vi. 234. Occupied by the French troops, 309. Gathering of Lords at, ix. 532. Attempted surprise of, 534. Captured by Angus, xi. 437. Retaken by Arran, 439
- Stirrel, John, vi. 579
- Stokesley, John, Bishop of London, burns heretics, i. 339
- Stonor, Lady, xi. 87
- Story, Dr, Queen's proctor, at Cranmer's trial, v. 542. His speech on the Supremacy Bill of 1559, vi. 163. Seized at Antwerp, ix. 310, 311. Tortured, and sentenced to death, 312. Executed, 467
- Stourton, Lord, v. 466
- Straiton, David, burnt, iii. 405
- Strange, Lord, v. 43
- Strangways, the pirate, v. 372; vi. 493. At Havre, 584. The Red Rover of the Channel, viii. 18
- Stratford, Abbot of, iii. 57
- Strathbogie, visit of the Queen of Scots to, vii. 607—609
- Stubbs, John, his pamphlet, x. 495. Sent to the Tower, 496. His punishment, 502
- Strickland, Mr, ix. 430, 433
- Strozzi, Pietro, iv. 134, 319; v. 412
- Strozzi, Philip, xi. 266, 267
- Stuart, Lady Arabella, x. 400. Suggested as wife for the Duc d'Alençon, xi. 292. Designed by Leicester for his son, 292, 328; 500, 524. A competitor for the crown, 500
- Stuart, Lord Charles, x. 399. Married to Lady Elizabeth Cavendish, 400. Their child Lady Arabella, 400. Their death, 400
- Stuart, Esme, Count d'Aubigny, x. 512. Goes to Scotland, 512. Made Earl of Lennox, xi. 4. His power, 12. Intends to destroy Morton, 18. His dexterity and treachery, 28, 29. Made Duke of Lennox, 227. His plots in the interest of France, 228, 229, 257, 293. League to kill him, 259. In fear, 262. Driven out of Scotland, 295, 296. In London, 296. In France, 303—307. His character and death, 308
- Stuart, Lord James, vi. 221, 229, 231, 241, 250, 310, 326, 338, 530. At the death-bed of Mary of Guise, 385. Cecil's opinion of him, 389. Not rewarded by Elizabeth, 414. Sent to invite Mary Queen of Scots to return to Scotland, 470, 500, 501. Chosen by Mary one of her chief advisers, 517. Made Lieutenant of the Border, and Earl of Murray, 531. Remonstrates with Mary Stuart, 573. Doubts her, 604. Punishes the Earl of Huntley, 606—608. And Châtellar, vii. 47. Named as commissioner to settle the succession, 220, 230. Cecil's answer, 231, 232. Summons Bothwell to Edinburgh, 271. Endeavours to dissuade Mary from marrying Darnley, 271, 272. His character, 273. Retires to Lochleven Castle, 300. In arms, 317, 318. Abandoned by the Queen of England, 323. Escapes into England, 338. Remonstrates with Elizabeth, 340, 341. Goes to London, 343. Disowned by the Queen, 344—348. Advice of Throgmorton, 356. Elizabeth acts on his behalf, 366. Desertion of his friends, 374. Plans for his restoration, 377. Intended attainer of him, 384. Returns to Edinburgh, 396. His position, 436. Leaves Edinburgh, 517. Endeavours to arrest Balfour, viii. 99. Refuses Bothwell's advances, 109. Leaves Scotland, 111. In London, 111. In Paris, 186. His return from France, 219. His conversation with de Silva, 221. Opinions of English statesmen about him, 222, 223. Advances of France to him, 242. His interview with the Queen, 248. Becomes Regent, 252. Pacifies Scotland, 258—261, 292. Excellence of his government, 319, 320. Receives the Casket letters, 294. Breach with Maitland, 298. Elizabeth refuses to recognize him, 304, 305 and note. Determines to put down Mary's supporters, 319. Raises an army against Mary, 320, 321. Defeats the Hamiltons at Langside, 324. Strives to restore order, 348. Visits the Borders, 354. Sends translations of the Casket letters to Elizabeth, 366. Mary tries to conciliate him, 372. Insists on being heard in England, 382. Elizabeth's letter to him, 383. Goes to York, 390, 392, 394. His conversation with the Duke of Norfolk, 398, 399. His reply to the commissioners, 399. At Westminster, 453, 454. Put upon his defence, 462. Produces the Casket letters, 463. Plot to murder him on his return, 502. Confronted with Herries and the Bishop of Ross, 509. His conversation with the Duke of Norfolk at Hampton Court, ix. 23. Elizabeth decides to help him, 33. The convention at Glasgow, 35. Justifies his actions in a proclamation, 61. Elizabeth demands Mary's restoration, 62, 63. Calls a convention at Perth, 66, 67. Prepares to put down the Borderers, 68. His difficulties, 163, 166. Arrests Maitland, 165. Remonstrates with Maitland's friends and postpones his trial, 167. Sends the Earl of Northumberland to Lochleven Castle, 170. His position in Scotland, 170. Murdered, 199. Review of his career, 201—204. His funeral, 243—245

Stuart, Lord John, vi. 517

Stuart, Matthew, Earl of Lennox, iii. 566. See Lennox

Stuart, Mary. See Mary Stuart

Stuart, Lord Robert, vi. 517. A friend and adviser of Lord Darnley, vii. 248, 516; xi. 19

Stukely, Sir Thomas, v. 115, 116, 119. In Ireland, vii. 525. His piracies, 526; viii. 35. His acquaintance with O'Neil, 526. In Spain, ix. 492; x. 274. History of him, 268—277. His intended invasion of Ireland, 273, 274, 476, 553. Falls at Alcazar, 477

Sturmius, at Calais, iv. 160. Betrays French secrets, 162—165

Succession, English, uncertainty of law of, i. 108. Terror of war of, 112. Act of, ii. 97—102. Second Great Act of, iv. 14. Edward IV.'s device for, v. 160, 162, 163. Debates in Parliament as to the successor of Elizabeth, vii. 33, 34, 54. Hale's book on the succession, 191. Anxiety of the people of England, 293. Discussions in Parliament, 447. Adamson's book, 466. Results of the uncertainty of the succession, viii. 283. Discontent at the failure of successors, ix. 10, 422. The Bishop of Ross's books, 455. Act for cutting off the Queen of Scots from the succession, x. 94

Suffolk, Duke of. See Brandon; Grey

Sumptuary laws before the Reformation, i. 15

Supremacy, Act of, ii. 218. The Bill of 1559, vi. 162—164, 174, 177. Speeches in Parliament respecting it, 177. Re-annexation of supremacy to the Crown, 189

Surleyboy. See McConnell

Surrey, Lord. See Howard

Sussex, Robert Radcliffe, Earl of.
See Radcliffe, Robert
 Sutherland, Earl of, accompanies the Queen of Scots to Inverness, vi. 607
 Sweating sickness, v. 15

TAILOR, Richard, iv. 427

Talbot, Francis, Earl of Shrewsbury, his conduct in the Pilgrimage of Grace, ii. 522, 523. Is to relieve Pomfret, 547, 550. Occupies the line of the Trent, 581. With Hertford and Lisle, iv. 26. To invade Scotland, 322. In the Council, 471. In favour of Mary, v. 199. With the Council at Baynard's Castle, 205. In favour of Courtenay, 289. Accepts a pension from Charles, 366. Receives Philip at Southampton, 405. Raises musters, vi. 83. Opposes the Supremacy Bill, 177. And the new Prayer Book, 194

Talbot, George, Earl of Shrewsbury, in charge of Mary Stuart, ix. 33; x. 395, 397. Elizabeth cannot trust his loyalty, ix. 86. Demands to be restored to Mary's guardianship, 98. Prepares to defend his castle, 137. Plots for Mary, 444. Becomes true to Elizabeth, x. 12. Presides at Norfolk's trial, 38, 42. Queen Elizabeth's letter to him and his wife, 402 note. Removed from the custody of Mary Stuart, xi. 503. Present at her execution, xii. 251

Talbot, Lord, son of the preceding, ix. 71, 426

Talbot, Henry, conveys the account of Mary Stuart's death to Elizabeth, xii. 256, 261

Tarbes, Bishop of, i. 115. The Pope's language to him, 257. Sent to Henry VIII., iii. 91

de Tassis, Baptista, xi. 361, 397, 401
 Tavenor, Oxford student, i. 523; iv. 2

Taxation, statute against foreign, i. 483

Taylor of Hadley, his trial, v. 488

Taylor, John, Bishop of Lincoln, v. 18, 283

Taylor, Rowland, martyred, v. 494

Teligny, son-in-law of Coligny, x. 129. Stabbed, 36

Tempest family, of Durham, ii. 562

Tempest, Nicholas, hanged, iii. 34

Terceira, defeat of the French at, xi. 265

Terouenne, the lists of, iii. 610

Thames, pirates on the, viii. 36

Thanet, iv. 102

Theology contrasted with the religion of Christ, viii. 411—414

Thirlby, Thomas, bishop of Westminster, and afterwards of Norwich and Ely, iv. 152. His letter to Paget on Norfolk and Surrey, 223. Removed to Norwich, 505. Goes to Brussels, v. 146. Renard's advice, 287. At Oxford, 576. Commission appointed to persecute, vi. 34. Conference at Cercamp, 90. At Cambray, 170, 194. Refuses the oath of supremacy, 225, 226

Thomas, Dean, i. 244

Thomas, William, Clerk of the Council, paper of, on State affairs, iv. 544; v. 348. Death at Tyburn, 362

Thomond, Earl of, x. 248, 261, 531

Thornton, Sir Launcelot, iii. 260

Thornton, agent to the Queen of Scots, vii. 415

Throgmorton, Francis, his career, xi. 397—402. Executed, xi. 481

Throgmorton, Sir George, i. 283; quoted, 355, 360; iii. 42. Witness against Cromwell, 310

Throgmorton, Michael, brother of the above, with Pole, iii. 42, 43. Cromwell's letter to, 43—48

Throgmorton, 'Long John,' conspires, vi. 8. Arrested, 11. Torture and constancy, 13, 14. His death, 14

Throgmorton, Sir Nicholas, v. 317, 319, 362, 390, 391; vi. 325. Connected with the conspiracy of Amboise, 336. Undermines the Guises, 373. Cecil's letter to him, 414. His protest against the marriage of Queen Elizabeth and Lord Robert Dudley, 439—441, 447, 448. Urges Elizabeth to side with the Scotch Protestants, 503. Negotiates with Mary Stuart, 503, 507, 508. Advises alliance with the Huguenots, 548, 577. Urges Elizabeth to care for her allies, 583. Taken prisoner by the Duke of Guise, vii. 26. Detained on his parole, 169. Employed to ne-

- gotiate, 171—175. Sent to Scotland, 270. His interview with Mary, 276, 277. Advises the Council respecting Scotland, 278. Advises the Lords to sue for pardon, 356. Addresses Mary, 357. Elizabeth sends him to Scotland, viii. 194. Deplores her policy, 206, 207. At Edinburgh, 208, 211. Is recalled to London, 259. Is arrested at Windsor, ix. 86, 96. Saves the life of Mary Stuart, xi. 397
- Tichbourne, Chidiock, arrested, xii. 158. His trial, 171. Executed, 175
- Tilbury, rendezvous of the army at, xii. 392
- Tilney, a conspirator, arrested, xii. 158. Tried and executed, 170—174
- Tixall, Mary Queen of Scots removed to, xii. 159, 160. Leaves it after a fortnight's stay, 161
- Toledo, Archbishop of, iv. 260; x. 391
- de Toledo, Antonio, v. 403
- Toledo, Don Francisco, xii. 419, 423
- Toleration, iii. 174, 175. Queen Elizabeth's views of, viii. 473
- Tomkins, v. 498. Martyr at Smithfield, 504
- Tonnage and Poundage Act, vi. 158 and note
- Topcliffe, meeting of Catholics at, ix. 113
- Torre, John, iii. 589
- Torture in England, vii. 539 note; xi. 70, 71. In Dublin, x. 619
- Toulouse, the Huguenots defeated at, vi. 579
- Tournon, Cardinal, i. 380, 433; iii. 588; iv. 163, 165
- Tours, Huguenot excesses at, vi. 547. Catholic victory and cruelties at, 577
- Towns, decay of, in the 16th century, i. 8
- Tracey, his dead body burnt for heresy, i. 343
- Trade, organization of, in the 16th century, i. 50. The great trading companies of London at that period, 50. Meaning of their institution, 51, 59. Decline and fall of trading virtue, 61. Foreign trade of England at the accession of Elizabeth, viii. 9. Lists of articles of foreign trade, 10 note
- Traheron, Bartholomew, his remarks on the Bishop of Winchester's sermon, iii. 281. On the disputation on the Eucharist, iv. 385
- Train bands in St James's Park, vi. 324
- Transubstantiation, iv. 384
- Treason, new Act against, ii. 221. Its terrible powers, 223. Law of treason, v. 61, 286. Bill for the repression of treasonable practices, xi. 80. Its influence on the Catholics, 82
- Tregonwell, v. 283
- Tregouse, siege of, x. 148
- Tremayne, Edmund, examines Bailly, ix. 460. Sent by Cecil to Ireland, x. 245. His report, 283, 300. What the Queen said to him, 443. Registers Drake's plunder, xi. 153, 154 and note
- Tremayne, Edward, sent into Brittany by Queen Elizabeth, vi. 333. With the English army in Scotland, 346. Killed at Havre, vii. 67
- Tremaynes, the, in Dudley's conspiracy. Their services, vi. 397 note
- Trent, Council of. See Council
- Treport attacked by the English fleet, iv. 144
- Trevanion, Sir Hugh, iv. 328
- Trollope, his account of Ireland, x. 599.
- Troyes, peace of, vii. 176
- Tucker, Lazarus, iv. 399; v. 313
- Tulchan bishops, xi. 255
- Tullibardine. See Murray of Tullibardine
- Tunstal, Cuthbert, Bishop of Durham, i. 364. Bishop of London, 508, 519; ii. 464, 465; iii. 260; 289; v. 18. His nomination in Henry's will, iv. 235. Imprisoned, v. 57—61. Restored, 227. Appointed commissioner, 251. To officiate at Mary's wedding, 325. Refuses the oath of supremacy, vi. 206.
- Turkey, invasion of, i. 391
- Turks, their victories, iii. 494, 515, 612, 620; vi. 372
- Turner, Captain, on the defences of Portsmouth, vi. 168
- Turner, Dr, vi. 553. His papers, 553, 557, 558
- Turner, Rowland, a priest, x. 306
- Tutbury Castle, the Queen of Scots at, ix. 33, 34. She is removed from, 40. Again removed to, xi. 529

Tyldsley, Mr, his inquiries into the state of the southern and western counties, vii. 11
 Tyler, Wat, his insurrection, i. 495
 Tyndal, William, his early life, i. 508. His translation of the Bible, ii. 491, 492, 497. He is burnt, 498
 Tyrone, the Earl of Essex in, x. 526
 Tyrone, Earl of, v. 87; vii. 112. See O'Neil, Con
 Tyrrell, Anthony, the Jesuit, xi. 43
 Tyrrell, Margaret, iii. 296
 Tyrrell, Admiral, in the action off Shoreham, iv. 142
 Tyrrells, the, iv. 130
 Tyrwhit, Sir Thomas, joins the rising in Lincolnshire, ii. 517

UDAL, Puritan minister, his death in prison, xii. 495
 Ulster, invaded by Sir H. Sidney, vii. 561. The Earl of Essex in, x. 302—309, 517
 Underhill, the 'Hot Gospeller,' iv. 434; v. 52. His story, 229—231. At Mary's coronation, 274. Recovered from fever, 348
 Uniformity, iv. 385, 386. Act of, vi. 194. Elizabeth insists on the observance of it, vii. 253. Enforcement of, ix. 116—118
 Universities, the, appealed to by Henry VIII., i. 263. Replies from that of Paris, 267—270. Of Oxford, 278. Of Cambridge, 278, 279, ii. 346. Learning declines at, iv. 506
 Uses, Statute of, and objections to it, ii. 502, 503; iii. 293
 Usury, Statute against, v. 60
 Uvedale, Captain of the Isle of Wight, racked, vi. 8, 13

VAGRANT ACT, i. 80—83; ii. 344.
 Vagrants, Act for making them slaves, iv. 310. Repealed, 495 de Valdez, Don Pedro, commands a Spanish fleet, x. 340, 341. Captured by the English, xii. 423
 Valentia, burned by Ormond, x. 574
 Valle, de, a French pirate, iii. 503
 Vane, Sir Ralph, v. 32, 35, 39. Executed, 57
 Vannes, Peter, his account of Lord Courtenay's death, vi. 22, 23 de Vargas, Don Juan, x. 452; xi. 4
 Vassay, massacre of, vi. 546

Vaucelles, truce of, vi. 10
 Vaughan, Sir Stephen, his mission to the Elector of Saxe, ii. 25. Sends information to Henry of French spies, iv. 102
 Vaughan, Cuthbert, v. 391
 Vaux, Lord, i. 446
 Vaux, Lord, converted by the Jesuits, xi. 75
 Vavasours, the, viii. 334
 Vendosme, M. de, invades the Low Countries, iii. 510. At Landrecy, 620
 Venlo, iii. 618
 Ventry harbour, x. 573
 Vernon, Lord, ii. 581
 Vigo, captured by Drake, xii. 33
 Villegaignon, French admiral, invades Scotland, iv. 319—327; v. 318 de Villemont, M., in Scotland, vii. 368
 Villenage, extinction of, in England, i. 13 de Villeroy, M., sent to the Scotch lords, viii. 186 de Virac, M., ix. 261, 413. Taken prisoner, 416. Liberated, 417
 Vitelli, Chapin, Marquis of Cetona, ix. 114, 115, 154, 156—158. Offers to undertake the murder of Elizabeth, ix. 499, 503. Before Mons, x. 107

WADE, ARMIGIL, vi. 125 note
 Wade, Sir William, sent to Madrid, xi. 414, 422. To the Queen of Scots at Sheffield, 448—451. To demand Morgan, 559, 560. How treated by d'Aumale, 560. Searches Mary Stuart's cabinet, xii. 160
 Wages, compared with prices of food in the 16th century, i. 21—29. Average wage of artisans and labourers, 27, 28. Causes of the prosperity of labour, 29. The Wages Act of Henry VIII., 29. Wages of the common soldier at this time, 29 note. Wages in 1563, 492 note Waldegrave, Sir Edward, v. 21, 290, 312, 366; vi. 13, 82. Sent with his wife to the Tower, 486 and note
 Walloon provinces submit to Spain, x. 482
 Walloon weavers established in Glas-tonbury Abbey and the monasteries, iv. 536

- Wallop, Sir John, ambassador to Paris, ii. 76; iii. 288. Accused of treason, 454, 455. Commands the flower of England, 609. His account of Charles V. at Landrecy, 621
- Wallop, Sir Henry, in temporary command in Dublin, x. 566. Endeavours to excuse the cruelties of the English, 604
- Walpole, Mr, vi. 13
- Walpole, Henry, his conversion, xi. 106
- Walsingham, Sir Francis, iii. 257. His note to Cecil on the Darnley inquiry, viii. 451; ix. 354. Sent to France, 354. His anxiety for the Queen's marriage with Anjou, 371. His view of the situation in 1571, 483. Desires Mary's execution, x. 38. Urges alliance with France, 77, 80. His advice as to the struggle in the Low Countries, 108. Present at the St Bartholomew massacre, 150, 154. Defends Coligny, 153. His poverty, 320. His advice, 340, 405, 408; xi. 10, 156, 404. Sent to the Low Countries, x. 441, 442. Failure of his mission, 445, 465, 466, 482. Ordered out of the Queen's presence, 500. His letters to Randolph, xi. 26, 28. A priest in his pay, 70, 74. Ambassador to France, 184. His instructions, 184, 185. His negotiations, 187. His letters to the Queen and Lord Burghley, 188—195. Intercepts Mary Stuart's letters, 316. Sent to James VI., 382. Proposes another raid, 385. Advises Elizabeth to unite with France against Spain, 479. On the death of Alençon, 481. Disapproves of Elizabeth's policy, 491, 493, 498, 516. His letters to Davison and Cecil, 550; xii. 27. Uses spies, 102, 108, 147. His spy Gifford, 110. Babington's plot, 124—155. Babington's interview with him, 154. A commissioner on Mary's trial, 188. His pecuniary difficulties, 225. His letter to Cecil on his treatment by Elizabeth, 227. Retires from Court, but returns at Burghley's entreaty, 228. His purity of character and poverty, 228, 239. His death, 228
- Wardens of Marches, iv. 37.
- Warham, Archbishop of Canterbury, i. 166, 242. Summoned before the King, 249, 297. Influenced by the Nun of Kent, 312, 324. Protests and dies, 363. His visitation of the monasteries, ii. 309
- Warne, martyred, v. 524
- Warner, Sir Edmund, his examination at Surrey's trial, iv. 217. In the conspiracy against the Queen, v: 317. His arrest, 323
- Warner, Sir Edward, Lieutenant of the Tower, vi. 522, 576; vii. 34 note
- Warwick, Earl of. See Dudley, Earl of Warwick
- Waterford in 1567, x. 219
- Watson, Dr, v. 288. Bishop of Lincoln, vi. 36. Sent to the Tower, 188
- Waterhouse, Edward, x. 520. His advice as to Irish bishoprics, 539. At Essex's bedside, 546
- Waterford, disturbances at, x. 547
- Watts, Dr, Roman Catholic preacher, persecuted, iii. 260
- Weavers, Act of Philip and Mary concerning handloom, i. 58, 59
- Welsh, vicar of St Thomas's, Exeter, hanged on his own church tower, iv. 439
- Wentworth, Paul, on privilege of Parliament, vii. 463. Moves a fast and a sermon every morning, xi. 77
- Wentworth, Peter, his speech in Parliament, 364 and note. Sent to the Tower, 365
- Wentworth, Sir Thomas, iii. 37; iv. 445, 471; v. 366. Receives Pole at Calais, 441. Absent from the House of Lords, 466. His letters to Queen Mary, vi. 60, 64. Implores help to defend Calais, 67. Taken prisoner, 70
- Westminster Abbey, theological controversy in, vi. 185
- Westminster, See of, dissolved, iv. 504
- Westmoreland, Earl of. See Neville.
- Westmoreland, Countess of, iii. 15
- Weston, Sir Francis, charged with adultery with Anne Boleyn, ii. 362. Found guilty, 386. Executed, 393
- Weston, Dr, v. 288, 344, 389, 395

- Whalley, iv. 508; v. 32
 Wharton, Sir Thomas, Warden of the Western Marches, iii. 517. At Solway Moss, 530, 531
 Wharton, Lord, v. 193
 Wheat, average prices of, before the Reformation, i. 21
 Whitby, Abbot of, i. 367
 White, Sir John, ii. 174
 White, John, Bishop of Winchester, at Elizabeth's first Parliament, vi. 150. At the controversy at Westminster, 187. Sent to the Tower, 188
 White, Warden of Winchester, imprisoned, iv. 529. Bishop of Lincoln, v. 542
 White, Sir Nicholas, at Dingle, x. 573. At Killarney, 575
 White, Thomas, vi. 9
 White, Rawlins, a Cardiff fisherman, martyred, v. 512.
 Whitgift, Master of Trinity (afterwards Archbishop), ix. 346; xi. 474, 493; xii. 496
 Whiting, Abbot of Glastonbury, suspected, iii. 240. Discoveries made, 244, 245. Tried and executed, 246, 247
 Wicklow, massacres in, x. 254, 257. Retaliation of the Highlanders of, 297. Defeat of the English in, x. 580. Rebels executed, 601
 Wight, Isle of, causes of the depopulation of, in the reign of Henry VII., i. 32. The farms again subdivided, 33. Action with the French off, iv. 131—137; v. 375. Garrisoned under command of Edward Horsey, vi. 278.
 Wilford, Sir James, iv. 322
 Wilford, Sir Thomas, x. 303. His account of Essex's failure in Ireland, 313
 Wilkinson, Sir Oswald, ix. 114
 Wilks, Mr, sent to the Hague, xii. 83
 Wilkyns, Master; success and disappointment of, i. 543
 William of Nassau, Prince of Orange, at the Peace of Cambray, vi. 170. Opposes Spanish policy in the Netherlands, viii. 428. His flight into Germany, 431. Declares war against Alva, 432. Forbidden by the Emperor to raise troops, 433. Enters Brabant with an army, 433. His letter to Cecil for assistance, 444. Money sent to him from England, 445. His ill success, 471, 472; ix. 3. Collects an army in Germany, x. 102, 107. His march towards Mons, 107, 122. Takes Ruremonde and Mechlin, 122, 148. His army dissolved, 157. Retires into Holland, 157. A quarter of a million subscribed in London for him, 175. His offers to England and France, 329, 330. Plots to kill him, 334. Defeat at Mook Heath, 337. His despondency, 338. Leyden saved, 351. Threatened by Elizabeth, 358. Darkest moment in his fortune, 367. Dutch vessels seized in English harbours, 367. Contemplates emigration, 368. Goes to Ghent, 383. Treaty of Ghent, 412. His letter to Queen Elizabeth, 419. Assisted by English volunteers, 431. Accepts the Duke of Alençon's offer, 437. Envoys sent by Elizabeth, 441. Left by Elizabeth to his own resources, 482. Offers the crown of the Low Countries to the Duke of Alençon, xi. 163. Plots to assassinate him, 340, 342—345. Hopes for help, 422. Assassinated, 482, 483
 Williams, Sir John, v. 199. Made Lord Williams of Thame, 371, 466. At Ridley's trial, 555. Ordered to Oxford, 588
 Williams, Sir Roger, xii. 305
 Williams, Sir Thomas, Speaker of the House of Commons, his speeches to Elizabeth, vii. 31, 39, 56
 Williams, Thomas, iii. 548
 Willoughby, Sir Hugh, his voyage of discovery, viii. 7
 Willoughby, Sir Thomas, iii. 136, 237
 Willoughby, Lord, vi. 7. In Holland, xii. 311. Captures the San Matteo, 420
 Willoughbys, the, iv. 130
 Wilson, Dr, minister to the Netherlands, x. 413, 459, 464
 Wiltshire, Earl of. See Boleyn; Paulet
 Winchester, Marquis of. See Paulet
 Windermere, scene near, iii. 52

- Windham, Captain, his voyage of discovery, viii. 7, 8
- Windsor, Lord, iv. 387; v. 312
- Wine, prices of, in the 16th century, i. 25. Act of Henry VIII. concerning the sale of, 56. Imported free of duty by peers, 462
- Wingfield, Sir Anthony, iv. 347, 484; v. 23
- Wingfield, Colonel, at Glenmalure, x. 580
- Wingfield, James, in Ulster, vii. 126, 131
- Wingham, Captain, x. 334
- Winstanley, Sir William, iii. 254
- Winter, Admiral, Sir W., sent to Scotland, vi. 295. His instructions, 295. Driven by a storm into Lowestoft, 312. His progress to the Forth, 313. Destroys the French transports on the coast, 314, 315. His answer to the Queen Regent of Scotland, 317. Occupies Leith Roads, 319. Cecil's character of him, 388. Extinguishes the fire at St Paul's Cathedral, 493, 494. Prepares the fleet for sea, viii. 473. Carries supplies to Condé, ix. 31. Sent to the Prince of Orange, x. 367. At the mouth of the Shannon, 569. Returns home, 582. Ordered back, 585. At Smerwick, 587
- Winter, Captain, deserts Drake, xi. 129
- Wise, George, on the disturbances in Ireland, x. 250
- Wishart, George, iv. 28. His history, 176. Taken by Earl Bothwell, and imprisoned in the Sea Tower of St Andrew's, 178. Burnt, 179
- Woburn, Hobbes, Abbot of, death of, iii. 58
- Wolsey, Cardinal, intended reformation by, i. 100, 129. Made legate, 106. Breaks the Spanish Alliance, 126. Letter of, to the Pope, 123. Schemes of, 131. Warns the Pope, 140. Credit of, declines; wishes to retire, 148. Letter to Sir G. Cassilis, 149, 150. Indignation against, 158, 163. His fall, 165 — 169. Retires to Esher; gives up the seals, 203. Offence against the law, 290, 293. Was not cruel, i. 517. Conduct of, to Protestants, 518. Founds Christ Church, 523. Persecutions, 547
- Wolf, iv. 484
- Wolstrop, Sir Oswald, ix. 124
- Wood, account of Ireland by, v. 90
- Woodhouse, Sir Wm., Vice-Admiral, vi. 70
- Woodshawe, Edward, story of, x. 347
- Woodstock, scene in church of, iii. 51. Elizabeth at, vii. 432
- Woollen manufactures, state of the, in the 16th century, i. 7
- Worcester, Lady Chapel at, iii. 52
- Worcester, Lord. See Somerset
- Wotton, Edward, demands Arran's arrest, xi. 586. His life in danger, 588, 591. His difficulties, 590. Recalled, 593
- Wotton, Dr, sent to arrange the marriage with Anne of Cleves, iii. 250, 251. Quoted, 614; iv. 22, 39, 50, 55. Misgivings of, in Charles V., 58, 65, 80, 112, 155. Letter to Paget, 212. Concerning, Surrey, 224. His appointment in Henry's will, 235. In London, 468. Quoted, v. 306. Warned respecting the treaty with Charles, 316. Letter to the Queen, 373. Discovers Dudley's conspiracy, vi. 11. Letter to Sir Wm. Petre on a second conspiracy, 18. On the English refugees, 24. Discovers a design on Calais, 28. At Camp, 90, 137. Goes with the Bishop of Arras to Brussels, 137. At the Congress of Cambray, 171. His remarks on Philip's conduct, 349. And on the peril of a Spanish army in Scotland, 351. On a commission to end the war in Scotland, 375. At the Conference at Bruges, viii. 50
- Wrecking first heard of in Sussex, iv. 509
- Wriothesley, Sir Thomas, resident at Brussels, his interview with the Duchess of Milan about Henry VIII., iii. 89. Interview with the Regent, 117. Writes to Cromwell on the marriage treaty, 120, 121. Arrest of English ships in Flanders, 158. His advice at quarter sessions in Hampshire, 238. Hints at the divorce of Anne of Cleves, 299. Is Lord Chan- cellor, iv. 200. His barbarity to Anne Aseue, 208. His appointment in Henry's will, 235. Made Earl of Southampton, 252. Deprived of the seals, 254. Seymour's designs upon Elizabeth, 388. Profits on the silver coinage, 487. His death, 493.

- Wriothesley, Henry, Earl of Southampton, ix. 10. Attempts to escape abroad, 144. His house watched, 295. Arrested, 296. Liberated, 300. Joins a new conspiracy, 425. Arrested, x. 11. Pardoned, but again compromised, 400
- Wroth, Sir Thomas, sent as a commissioner to Ireland, vii. 161, 162
- Wurtemberg, Duke of, iv. 330
- Wyatt, Sir Thomas, his account of Anne Boleyn, i. 185. His mission to Spain, iii. 84. His character of Bonner, 96. Letter from Cromwell, 156. Arrests Brancetor in Paris, 267. Audience with Charles V., 268—270, 284. Accused of treason by Bonner, 454. Released, 455
- Wyatt, Sir Thomas, son of the above, v. 317. At Allingham Castle, 323, 326. Rebels, 326, 330, 331. Mary communicates with him, 334. Reward offered for his capture, 343. London Bridge closed against him, 345. Crosses Kingston Bridge, 347. Is delayed at Brentford, 350. Enters London, 351, 352. Is taken, 353, 354. Compromises Elizabeth, 364. Tried, 376, 377, 388. Executed, 389. His fellow-conspirators released, 484
- Wycherley, William, invoker of spirits, iv. 404
- Wyckliffe, John, his early life, i. 491
- Wymondham, gathering of the commons at, iv. 440
- Wyndham, Captain, iv. 322
- Wyseman, Thomas, his crimes, i. 197
- YAXLEE, Francis, vi. 541. Arrested, 542. In the service of the Queen of Scots, vii. 321. Sent to Spain, 322. Results of his mission, 359—362. Drowned, 364
- York, Archbishop of. See Heath
- York Cathedral plate issued in base coin, iv. 314
- Yorke, master of the mint, iv. 518; v. 33
- Yorke, Rowland, delivers up the Zutphen forts, xii. 235
- Yorkshire, character of the gentry of, ii. 507. Rising in, 535 (see Pilgrimage of Grace). Disturbance in, iv. 454
- Youghal sacked and burnt, x. 565, 604
- Young, v. 288
- ZIERICHSEE, taken by the Spaniards, x. 360
- Zouch, Colonel, killed Sir John of Desmond, x. 602
- Zutphen, battle of, xii. 86, 87. The forts of, delivered up by Yorke, 235

